It is proposed to make the theatre modern in every way. Comfortable seats and plenty of room will be the instruction to the builders.

In the basement will be located the heating and ventilating plant, and it expected that the theatre can be made much cooler than outdoors in the Summer time, a system similar to the new Beacon theatre in Boston, will be installed.

The lavatories, smoking room, check room and ladies' parlor will be located on the lower floor same as in the Park Square or Wilbur theatres in Boston. An experienced manager of moving picture theatres and one whose experiences has taught him where improvements can be made has agreed to make suggestions which will add to the attractiveness of the theatre and the comfort of its patrons.

It is proposed to put in the best of motion picture projectors and curtains, and present the best pictures with vaudeville.

Newark House Million Dollar Investment

THE Newark theatre, at Newark, N. J., representing a million dollar investment, was formally opened to the public Saturday night. Attendance at the formal opening was by invitation only. City officials, dignitaries and guests to the number of more than 2,500 filled the house. Mayor Thomas L. Raymond delivered a speech of dedication, accepting the theatre in behalf of the city as a new and beautiful addition to Newark's amusement facilities. The playhouse will be devoted to presenting the best photoplay features that the market affords.

The opening attraction, which will be continued through the week of September 3, will be Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep," and the first showing in this city of the official British war pictures, "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras."

The Newark theatre is owned and operated by the Market and Beaver Realty Corporation, of which Max Spiegel is president, and Henry Waterson vice-president. Thomas Lamb was the architect of the theatre improvement plan. The interior decorative scheme is in shades of gold, silver, gray and old rose, and the house in general embraces all the qualities of beauty, safety, comfort and convenience. The dedication of the new playhouse marks an epoch in the theatrical history of Newark.

CALIFORNIA

The Theatre St. Francis, Geary, at Powell, San Francisco, will again be opened to the public on Sunday, September 9, as an up-to-the-minute motion picture house.

A number of needed improvements are being made by E. C. Mix, under whose proprietorship the playhouse will be conducted, chief of which is the installation of an ornate orchestra platform and lowering of the screen. The entrance and the lobby are also being remodeled, which will add much to the beauty as well as the convenience of the "safety first theatre," as the house will be known.

ILLINOIS

Big opening for New Movie Theatre—The Fifth Avenue theatre, Rock Island's newest motion picture house, formally opened last week. The new theatre is located at 2430 Fifth avenue and is said to be one of the finest of the outlying picture houses. It will show a program of the best films, including the latest releases, and for the opening attraction Marguerite Clark, in "Silks and Satins," has been booked.

Ernest Schmalzried, proprietor of the New Olympic theatre, recently erected on Main street near Broadway, East St. Louis, has opened the Olympic, a brick and stone fireproof structure erected by Maurice V. Joyce from plans of Architect L. Pfeiffenberger especially for Mr. Schmalzried. Only the best photoplays will be shown and the prices have been announced as 5 and 10 cents. Matinees every Sunday and holidays.

Another theatre on Main street, East St. Louis, erected by Maurice V. Joyce for Ernest Schmalzried, according to plans drawn by Architect L. Pfeiffenberger, is now completed, with the exception of placing the opera chairs, which are now on the way. The opening will take place just as soon as the chairs are placed. It will be for moving pictures and is the most complete in the city, according to the architects' views.

The Olympic theatre, just off the corner of Seventh street and Sixth avenue, Rockford, will be opened for business in about two weeks, according to an announcement made by Johnson Brothers, proprietors, who also own the Royal theatre, today. The Olympic, which has been closed several months, is being entirely remodeled and decorated throughout. The owners intend to operate both houses and first-class picture programs are promised patrons, a special and entirely independent service having been secured for each house.

The southwestern part of Chicago will have a new motion picture theatre, to cost $250,000. James Svehla, a large furniture dealer, has had the plans in mind ten years and they are now about to take shape. Mr. Svehla owns the northeast corner of Marshfield avenue and Forty-seventh street, 121 x 208, upon which the building will be erected. It will be of the most modern type and the aim is to make it the most attractive in the city. It will have a seating capacity of 3,000. Plans are being completed by Architects George L. & C. W. Rapp. It is the aim of Mr. Svehla to make it more than a theatre. It is his desire to make attractive a busy business center and maintain its stability. It is reported Jones, Linick & Schaefer may take the theatre on a long-term lease. L. L. Sachs of J. P. Strickland & Co. is said to have it in charge.

INDIANA

Plans are being prepared for a new $150,000 theatre in this city, which will be erected on the old Sherman property at Seventh and Main streets, Lafayette. Mayor Thomas Bauer is at the head of the movement, and his plan is for ten business and professional men to subscribe $10,000 to a fund. This would bring the original amount up to $100,000, which would be ample to start the erection of the building. Leopold Drefus, who owned the Drefus theatre, which was destroyed by fire two years ago, has promised to contribute $10,000. Lafayette has no legitimate show house since the destruction of the Drefus. The new structure will be fireproof in its construction, and there will be office rooms in fronnt.

IOWA

Two moving picture theatres and a number of stores will be built on the Cantonment City site, Des Moines.

MAINE

The Opera House has been leased to Myron Smith and Michael St. Ledger, two well-known theatre managers, who have taken over the auditorium of the building for a period of years and will use it as a moving picture house. During the past few weeks there has been much speculation locally as to who would get the Opera House and many expressed the opinion that Skowhegan parties should be given the first chance. Bids came thick and fast for a few days, one reaching an amount exceeding $2,000 per annum. It is not definitely known what price is being paid by Messrs. Smith and St. Ledger.

Already a substantial booth, large enough to house two motion picture machines, has been constructed at the Opera House. Seats have also been repaired, 141 needing attention. It is understood that two machines will be used, thus making it possible to have continuous pictures; a plan successfully carried out in all large cities.

MARYLAND

With the purchase yesterday of the last piece of property needed for the enterprise, Henry W. Webb, president of the Parkway Amusement Company, owners of the Parkway, Strand and McHenry motion picture theatres, announced that work is to begin at once on the erection of a fourth playhouse, this one to be at the northeast corner of Charles street and Lafayette avenue, Baltimore.

The new theatre, according to Mr. Webb, will have a seating capacity of 2,100. It will have a frontage on Charles street of 83 feet and a depth of 125 feet.

Mr. Webb announced that improvements are now under way at the Parkway which will increase the seating capacity of that theatre by about 70 per cent, giving it a total capacity of approximately 1,800. It is likely that the new theatre will be known as the Homewood.

It is expected that the new theatre will open about Christmas time.

With the filing today of the corporation papers with the State Tax Commission, it became known that the Homewood Amusement Company, now incorporated, would take over a portion of the old Casino property on North avenue, near Charles street, and erect immediately a large, commodious moving picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 2,000.

The company is capitalized at $200,000—$100,000 preferred stock and $100,000 common stock. The playhouse will be called the Homewood theatre.

Mr. Sandell also stated that certain New York capitalists interested in a number of other ice-skating rinks had taken over the north portion of the old Casino lot and would immediately construct there a large ice-skating rink.

MASSACHUSETTS

A. Paul Keith and Edward F. Albee have just completed plans to tear down the old Boston theatre on Washington street and rebuild it at a cost of $1,000,000.

The new theatre will be the largest theatrical building in the city of Boston, and will surpass anything of its kind in structure and beauty. It will be a modern motion picture theatre. The box-office and main entrance to the new theatre will be on Washington street, as at present. And the Arcade, at 162 Tremont street, will be torn down and rebuilt as a Tremont street entrance.

According to specifications, the new theatre will seat more than 4,000 persons, and will have the largest stage in the city, as at present. It will be fitted out with boxes that will be the last word in comfort and beauty. In fact, the interior of the theatre will be more like an opera house than a moving picture and vaudeville theatre. No definite date has been set to start work on the new structure.

Another big Washington street motion picture theatre is a probability, and more than that, a possibility, in the near future. The motion picture theatre will be part of the W. & A. Bacon Company store, on Washington and Essex streets.

It was stated yesterday that reorganization plans, which include the building of the great theatre in the Bacon store, will be ready for submission to the various banking and mercantile creditors of the Bacon company before the week is over.

The new organization plan has two phases: One is a cut in the rental, the other is the remodeling of the building so that part of it can be devoted to the movies.

The rental cut, it is said, will reduce the rental from the present $250,000 a year to between $175,000 and $180,000. This would be effected at least in part through the building of the motion picture theatre.

The theatre will be at the corner of Washington and Essex streets, and it is argued will have one of the best sites in Boston's theatreland. The architects for the remodeling of the building, so that it will be in part a movie house, are Blackall, Clapp & Whittemore, who are yet not ready with the detailed plans.

NEW JERSEY

Work is to be started soon on extensive alterations and an addition to the Columbia Moving Picture theatre, located at 304-306 Walnut street, Newark. The improvements, which will involve an expenditure of $10,000, will include a brick addition 20 x 95 feet, the erection of an entire new front and lobby and the general remodeling of the interior. When completed the building will provide seating capacity for about 750 people. Antonio Pendola is the owner of the structure. The contractor is Charles P. Cannella.

The Newark theatre, representing in its remodeled form a large monetary investment, will be opened as a motion picture house next Saturday night, when the audience, including city officials, will be an invited one. So many invitations have been issued that the 2,500 seating capacity will be tested.

It will be the policy of the management to present only the finer creations of photoplay producers.

The Newark theatre is owned and will be operated by the Market and Beaver Realty Corporation, of which Max Spiegel is president; Henry Waterson, vice-president; Dr. Richard G. Tumison, treasurer; A. B. Stupel, secretary, and Edward Spiegel, acting director. John B. McNally, long associated with theatrical enterprises in this city, will be the resident manager, and George F. Turner the superintendent.

Thomas W. Lamb was the architect in charge of remodeling the theatre, which is one of the more spacious and beautiful in the country. The interior decorative scheme is in shades of gold, silver, gray and old rose, and as carried out is very pleasing in effect. In the provisions made for the comfort and the safety of patrons the house is thoroughly up to date.

NEW YORK

It is reported that negotiations are pending to build on a part of new property a large motion picture building, with stores, the theatre seating 3,000. The estate also sold recently to Jacob Sanders a plot of twelve lots on which he will build the largest garage in The Bronx. The entire transactions with the buildings and grounds represent an outlay of over $1,000,000. The S. Brener Company negotiated the sale and resale. Mr. Simpson was represented by W. W. Buckley; the Olds Holding Corporation was represented by Julius H. Zieser, and Mr. Davies was represented by Morris & McVeigh.

NORTH CAROLINA

It was learned Monday that the building in the rear of the Fifth street (Charlotte) fire station and the city hall, formerly used as a vaudeville show, known as the "Casino," is to be renovated by George R. Hunt, and made into a first-class vaudeville and moving picture house. At present the building is used as a garage by the Dixon Motor Service Company.

The alleyway, leading from North Tryon street to the building, running between the city hall and the old Charlotte Hotel, will be paved and a ticket office placed, just inside the alleyway on Tyron street.

The building will have a seating capacity of one thousand persons, it was learned, and will be modern and up to date in every way.

While the building is a wooden structure, it will be painted both on the exterior and interior, and a stage erected, spacious enough to permit a large cast of players on it at one time.

Mr. Hunt, who will operate the new amusement house, is a well-known musician of the city, formerly connected with the Piedmont Orchestra. It is understood he is arranging with an orchestra to furnish music during performances.

Work on the building will be started within a short while, and it is expected to have the house ready within a few weeks.

OKLAHOMA

Plans have been completed and the work has been started on the new $75,000 Majester theatre building at Fourth and Main streets, Tulsa. The theatre is to be one of the most modern in the State, and will accommodate 1,300 persons. The building is to be 50 x 140, one story, with a single balcony and basement. The house has no stairs, but gardients are being builded. An elaborate heating and ventilating system is being installed. The exterior is to be of terra cotta and brick. The balcony is supported by steel cantilever arches and the auditorium has no columns in it. The plans were drawn by George W. Winkler.

PENNSYLVANIA

According to well-founded local theatrical gossip yesterday, C. C. Wanamaker has resigned from the business managership of the Garrick theatre, Philadelphia, and will be succeeded by Frank Nirdlinger, brother of S. F. Nixon. This lends additional color to the report published some time ago that during the forthcoming season the Garrick would cease to be a home of the legitimate drama and would house feature photoplay productions.

It is known that Mr. Nirdlinger's nephew, J. Fred Nixon-Nindlinger, has obtained the rights to the presentation of Paramount Pictures in Philadelphia, and that he needed a conspicuously central location for their showing. The Garraick would seem to be the solution, but "The Crisis," to be exhibited there for a period beginning next Monday, is not in the Paramount affiliation.

The new Majestic theatre will be located on Elm street on the property immediately east of the Rogers-Meyers Company. The theatre will cost $100,000 and will be one of the model show houses in the Southwest. The theatre will extend from Elm street clear through to Pacific avenue.

WASHINGTON

Ground was broken yesterday for a new theatre building to be erected at the corner of Tower avenue and Center street, Centralia, by John A. Field and his business associates. The new structure will be two stories high, of yellow pressed brick construction. It will have a frontage of 75 feet on Tower avenue and will be 120 feet deep. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000. The stage will be 53 feet wide and 27 feet deep.

Work on the new motion picture theatre in the rear Strand theatre, Mifflin street, Madison, for the Finn and Heiman Amusement Company, is to be started within a short time. Charles C. Shay, International Policeman

CHARLES C. SHAY, International President of the I.A.T.S.E. and M.P.M.O. of the U. S. and Canada, who has a beautifully appointed home in Ridgefield Park, N. J., where he is one of the most popular "young" men residing in that section, has been sworn in as a special officer, the oath being administered by Justice S. A. Wilcox, in the presence of a number of "old residents," who expressed themselves as being confident that our beloved International President would respond to any call made upon him by Police Chief A. McElroy, who is a warm personal friend.

Just why "Charlie" should place additional burdens upon his shoulders the writer knoweth not, but rumor has it that while criticising certain actions of certain public officials, President Shay was overheard by a bystander, who remarked: "You would probably do the same thing if you were in the other fellow's place." Quick as a flash [and you who have attended the conventions of the I. Our congratulations to the "Chief," and may he long live to not only "keep order" in his home town, but to preside over the destinies of the greatest organization in the amusement field—the I.A.T.S.E. I. G. S.

Sioux City Operators Elect Officers

THE election of officers held at a recent meeting of Local 355, Moving Picture Machine Operators of Sioux City, Iowa, resulted in the election to office of the following named brothers: Charles L. Bateman, president; K. B. Johnson, vice-president; Robert Marksbury, business agent; C. A. Burr, financial secretary; Ecky Sternberger, corresponding secretary, and Robert Eberly, sergeant-at-arms. These officers elect will be duly installed at the meeting held on Wednesday, September 19, and will serve for a period of one year.

Past President C. A. Burr assumes the duties of financial secretary, formerly the work of Brother Carl Gilbert, while Brother Marksbury still attends to the business of business agenting for the local. Without egotism, I believe I can say that I number many friends among the ranks of Local 355, and I sincerely hope and trust that the coming year will be more successful and bear better fruit than any year in the annals of the local. This success does not, however, rest in the hands of the men you have elected to serve you alone, for unless each and every member stands firmly behind them in their efforts, when these efforts are for the best interests of the local, there can be no lasting success. Again I say, Give your officers the support and they will "go over the top" for you.

Newly Designed Mazda Projector Lamps Installed Successfully

H. H. CUDMORE, general manager of the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, manufacturers of the Sheck Universal Adapters for Mazda projector lamps, in company with Mr. R. P. Burrows, manager, Commercial Section, Engineering Department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Company, Nela Park, Cleveland, who has been directly responsible for the commercial development of the newly-designed Mazda projector lamps, recently visited the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and made several successful installations of the Sheck Universal Adapter, with Mazda projector lamps in motion picture theatres. Successful installations were made in the "Cozy" theatre, Seventh and Smith streets, St. Paul, Minn., of the Model "A" Sheck Universal Adapter with the 20-ampere 28-30 volt 600 Watt Mazda projector lamp, using the newly-designed Type "I" Ft. Wayne compensarc for directly controlling alternating current for the successful operation of Mazda projector lamps.

This theatre was especially selected as being typical of all motion picture theatres of six hundred seats and under using alternating current where the Sheck Universal Adapter and Mazda projector lamps will successfully replace carbon arc projection apparatus and effect a current saving of at least two-thirds the cost of operating carbon arc projection apparatus.

A successful installation was made in the "Gem" theatre, St. Paul, Minn., utilizing Model "A" Sheck Universal Adapter with the 20-ampere Mazda projector lamp in connection with the newly-designed Ward-Leonard 110 volt direct current rheostat.

While in direct current installations Mazda projector lamps do not effect the same current saving as in alternating current circuits, it has proven in this successful installation that at least 1,000 watts per hour are saved by the use of Mazda projector lamps versus carbon arc.

Mr. Cudmore and Mr. Burrows contemplate visiting all of the prominent cities of the United States within the next few months for the purpose of making practical trial demonstrations of the Sheck Universal Adapter for Mazda projector lamps.

H. A. Brereton has been appointed sales manager of the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, and H. L. Nebeker Chicago district manager.

Screen Size

RICHMOND HILL, L. I., asks: "Will you kindly advise me correct size for a screen in a house 40 x 85 feet (ceiling 23 feet, if that has any bearing on the question). Throw is 85 feet. Also, advise me how you determine the proper dimensions for screen, whether it is a question of mathematics or judgment and taste."

Answer: The size picture to be projected depends to a great extent upon the distance the last row of seats is from the screen. In your case I should think a 16-foot picture would be about right. That would call for a lens of 5-inch focus. This gives a life-like image upon the screen and also makes for a brighter picture than if you were to project a larger picture with the same amount of current. Mathematics does enter into the determination of dimensions, but that is something that you need not trouble about, for, knowing the width of the picture wanted, in your case 16 feet, the height is approximately one-fourth less, making the height in your case about 12 feet. The screen should, however, be somewhat larger, so that you may paint a black border around the entire light image, at least one inch inside the line where the light strikes. This will act as a sort of shadow box and also prevent sprocket holes from showing when they are not properly spaced in the film.

More Typhoons for the South

ON a recent fishing trip to the South, Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, combined business with pleasure. He closed contracts for cooling and ventilating two new theatres in Norfolk, Virginia, two in Newport News, and four in Washington.

A Good Stunt

GLENN W. BOSSARD, member of Local 253, Rochester, New York, writes: "Well here I am, at last, to join the Anti-Misframe League. I have been watching its growth and also the condition of the film, and I can say that the punch holes are decreasing, but there is one thing that a great many do and that is, they take a piece of gummed paper, the width of the film, and stick it over about five or six pictures, and naturally when that goes through the machine there is a blank which I do not like, and furthermore, it does not look well upon the screen. I have a method which I consider much better and here it is: I have a supply of gummed strips, about five inches long and one-sixteenth of an inch in width, and I stick one of these strips on the ending of part one, two or three, as the case may be, taking care that the strip is placed on the extreme edge of the picture next the sprocket holes, and not too near the end of the reel. This, as a throw-over cue can not be beaten and there is no unsightly flashes or punch holes to annoy the audience. Please excuse my poor hand-writing for I am not a professional at writing. (Whaddye mean "professional"?—Ed.) Will close wishing you and the A. M. F. L. a bright and successful future."

ANSWER: Welcome to the fold! And many thanks for the suggestion contained in your letter, which is one of the best that has been called to our attention so far. I thought it so good that I am passing it along for the benefit of brother operators, and while you may not be a "professional" letter writer, you have set forth your idea most clearly, and if you were trying to "kid" me you can put your hammer away. In revenge(?) I am going to deputize you to secure the names of every member of your local for membership in the League, so you can get busy and send them in. It is gratifying to learn that the condition of film is becoming better and that the objectionable punch marks are on the decrease, but we must not be satisfied until every aim of the League is fulfilled. The "bright and successful" future of the League depends upon the number who signify their willingness not only to take the "pledge" but to live up to it after it is taken.

Notice to Iowa Operators

ALL operators living in the jurisdiction of Sioux City Local 355 now have the opportunity of becoming affiliated not only with the greatest labor organization in the world—the I. A. T. S. E. M. P. M. O. of the United States and Canada—but also with one of the most up-to-date local unions in the Middle West—Sioux City Moving Picture Machine Operators, Local 355. This local, comprised of the livest kind of live wires, has decided, for a limited time, to open the books to applicants for membership at an initiation fee that should be most attractive to prospective members. The initiation fee is now $25, and will remain at this figure until January 1, 1918, after which date it will be increased to the sum of $50. Applicants for membership are requested to write to the secretary, whose address is P. O. Box 834, Sioux City, Iowa.

There seems to be little that I can add, further than to say that it is now up to the non-union operators themselves to get in where by every law they belong, and that is in the ranks of organized labor. The benefits to be derived by such a proceedure are innumerable, and with the generous offer of Local 355 there can be no excuse for any operator living under the jurisdiction of the above named local not becoming a part and parcel of it by affiliation. The editor of this department sincerely hopes that before the first day of January, 1918, the membership of 355 will have become doubled.

Crown Motion Picture Supplies Moves to Larger Quarters

THE Crown Motion Picture Supplies, 217 West Forty-second street, New York City, have moved their business to 150 West Forty-sixth street, New York City. The company was forced to move because the building in which they were located will be torn down. On this site will be erected a new theatre. J. Katz, general manager, states that in their new quarters, which is much larger, they will carry a greater stock and will endeavor to serve the exhibitor with quality supplies at the right price, which has always been the aim of the company.

A Look Behind the Scenes

On Curtis Street, Denver

where there are more Moving Picture Theatres crowded into two blocks than anywhere else in the world.

When Mr. F. H. Richardson, the noted Projection Expert, visited Denver recently, he wrote in the Moving Picture World:

> "I didn't get a chance to visit a single Denver theatre, and she has some beauties, too, to say nothing of the Curtis Street White Way, which for two blocks would actually make Broadway at 42nd Street at 11 p. m. look shady by comparison.
> "It hasn't the tremendous size of New York's White Way . . . but what there is of it is a stem-winding, double-back action, humdinger, and, what's more, the entire show is composed of the illumination on the fronts of the Curtis Street colony of Moving Picture Theatres."

Now let us

do what Mr. Richardson didn't have time for, and find out what "makes Denver's White Way go."

Here it is:

Simplex Projection in every Theatre on Curtis Street
Simplex Projection for a seating capacity of nearly 20,000
Simplex Projection delighting about 75,000 pairs of eyes daily

Now that you know what is back of Denver's White Way you need no longer wonder why it is such a success, why it compares so favorably with New York's White Way.

And of course you can't overlook that what the Simplex is doing for these Denver Exhibitors, it will do for you—if you let it.

Let us send you Catalog "N." Then we'll tell you at the same time what Simplex Distributor can help you to the equal of Denver's projection.

Get in touch with the Simplex Distributor. He's the friend of the Exhibitor.

The distinguished stage artiste, Rita Jolivet, is shown in this picture as the center of a powerful drama, the scenes of which reflect international events at the beginning of the European war. Based on actual occurrences in the memorable summer of 1914, the play presents as its central picture the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Rita Jolivet was one of the survivors when the Lusitania was destroyed by a German submarine, and in this picture she lives over again the memorable scenes that accompanied the sinking of the ill-fated steamer. Running through the photoplay is a tender love story. Miss Jolivet, supported by a notable cast, in this picture displays to advantage those talents which have made her a star of international repute.

Crowds at the Forty-Fourth Street Theatre, New York, The Last Day of a Four Weeks Run of "THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT."

Facts to Face

YOU may not like "war" pictures, nor believe in their drawing power.

Neither do we.

Why, then, are we handling "The Italian Battlefront?"
Because THESE ARE NOT WAR PICTURES AT ALL.

They are a great, living, breathing, human document of a super-struggle—with the war taken out.

They are not propaganda films. They are not educational pictures. They are not visions of horror.

Jammed with dramatic action and effects, unequalled as Charles Darnton, in "The Evening World" declared, by "anything along Broadway," these pictures combine suspense, splendor of scenes, such as no camera has ever before depicted; thrills, romance, faith, courage, and above, and beyond all, a portrayal of self-sacrifice that gives every one who sees it a new lease on life.

Do not take our word for these statements.

See the picture yourself in any of the big centres in which it is being presented. Judge of the enthusiasm and size of the crowds. Note the make-up of the audiences—the number of high-priced seats — $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00 — filled by Americans—the automobiles lined in front of the theatre.

Compare the business done by this picture—not in one city, but everywhere it has been presented—with the straggling, inflated "runs" of other New York showings, given at a tremendous loss, for the purpose of "making" the picture.

Then ask yourself, regardless of previous opinion or prejudice, whether you can get back of these facts.

A few territories—near enough for us to serve efficiently—cannot be had for love nor money. Others available, if you act quickly.

"7 Keys to Baldpate"

(From New York World)

The World Says—

'BALDPATE' ON SCREEN CROWDS THE RIALTO

"Seven Keys to Baldpate," in moving picture form, was shown at the Rialto Theater yesterday before crowds that packed the house several times. In the evening several hundred persons were so anxious to see the film that they waited over an hour outside the theatre until the first crowd left and the second showing began.

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" is one of the best examples of George M. Cohan's playwriting skill. Those who have never seen it on the stage should certainly seize the chance afforded by its reflection on the moving picture screen; while more fortunate persons — and many were among the spectators last night—may greet the story as an old friend.

Up to Now Exhibitors Have Talked of "The Iron Claw" as the Biggest Business Getter They Ever Had. Now They All Admit That Pathé Has Given Them Something Even Greater –

PEARL WHITE

Pathé has the best serial organization in the world – it has the best serial stars, the best serial writers, the best serial directors; Pathé knows first how to make a quality serial and secondly how to help the exhibitor fill his house every time he shows an episode of that serial. Many exhibitors who once booked Pathé serials for one day only now show each episode for a week, proof positive that Pathé serials pay big dividends in large attendance and pleased patrons.

The later episodes of "The Fatal Ring" are even better than the earlier ones. Episodes 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14 set a new mark in thrills, interest and suspense. As your audiences see each episode they will be hungry for more. If you haven't booked it, do so today – then run two episodes a week until you have caught up. You'll find it the best investment your ever had in your theatre.

Produced by Astra
Directed by Geo. B. Seitz

Written by Fred Jackson
Scenarios by B. Millhauser

Pathé

Not only are Pathé serials the best written, the best produced, the best acted, but they are the best advertised. In the chief cities of the land as well as many others the principal newspapers publish the novelizations of the serials and carry the extensive help-the-exhibitor advertising.

The following is only a partial list of Sunday newspapers which will publish the novelization of Such co-operation, united with the unequalled feature quality of the serial, insure to the exhibitor wide public interest and a consistently large attendance.

Additional lists of newspapers advertising "The Seven Pearls" will be given later. There is a newspaper in your section which will have this advertising.

Every exhibitor should book, every American should see

In the Wake of the Huns

These pictures, taken under the supervision of the French Government, will stir the blood of every beholder and raise it to fighting pitch. Through miles of wanton destruction, villages pillaged, orchards fiendishly cut down, nothing untouched - everything burned, dynamited or defiled you see the conquering armies of France, our allies, hot on the trail of the perpetrators of unmentionable deeds!

This is History indeed. It is timely, fascinating. It should outdraw any two reel picture ever filmed.

Ask the nearest Pathé Exchange about it, book it, advertise it. You will find it will PAY!

Pathé

Does the Public Want War Pictures?

The Official Government Pictures, Inc., says

Yes

In view of the facts no other answer is possible.

"The Battle of the Somme" the first instalment of the series, was put out when everyone said that war pictures were "dead". Because these Official pictures were not only genuine but of genuine interest the public flocked to see them and theatres everywhere reported capacity business with them. These pictures broke the house record of New York's Strand Theatre.

"The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre," the second of the series, went even bigger, so big in fact it was necessary to order 50 additional prints. In Cleveland, Omaha, Cincinnati, Chicago, everywhere, vast crowds have thronged the theatres where the "Tanks" are showing. At New York's Strand Theatre the picture broke the house record made by its predecessor "The Battle of the Somme".

"The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," the third and latest of the series, has accomplished what was apparently the impossible. It has broken the apparently unbeatable record made by the "Tanks" on opening day at the Strand Theatre, New York, by more than $600. As this "ad" is being written hundreds of persons are being turned away and the theatre is packed to the doors.

From the Earnings of These War Pictures the Official Government Pictures, Inc., Have Given Over $200,000.00 to the American Ambulance Field Service in France!

The Public Certainly Does Want War Pictures IF They Are of Official Government Quality!

Ask the nearest Pathé Exchange about these pictures - quick, as the number of prints is limited.

Goldwyn announces

That it has produced and will release as its third picture, on October 7, the first great morality play of the screen; a play that will rival in exhibitor profits and in audience attraction-power those tremendous stage successes, "Everywoman" and "Experience."

This production brings to the screen for the first time one of the world's most beautiful women, a theatrical star who is a favorite here and abroad, and likewise a star who always has been one of the greatest box-office magnets in theatrical history,

Maxine Elliott

The Eternal Magdalene

By Robert McLaughlin

This spectacular production of the sensational Broadway stage success, and nationally approved play, was directed by Arthur Hopkins, a genius of the dramatic stage who first found and presented "On Trial," "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and other plays that made fortunes, including "A Successful Calamity" and "Good Gracious Annabelle."

To introduce this lovely star Goldwyn will conduct a tremendous nation-wide campaign of exploitation backed up in each community by publicity of the most unusual character ever employed in the industry. This production was passed with cheers by The National Board of Review which said that the entire world "owes Goldwyn a debt of gratitude for making such a remarkable picture."

This remarkable production is now having a four weeks' run at The Criterion Theatre, New York, where it plays to capacity business and has won for itself the unanimous approval of the daily newspapers of Greater New York—fourteen separate enthusiastic indorsements.

Reel Life—THE MUTUAL FILM MAGAZINE

Just a word with you, Mr. Exhibitor:

Something is worrying you. You've booked a multi-reel "feature," and now you are wondering how to balance your program.

Maybe that "feature" is just what it is cracked up to be. If so, you don't want to spoil your program with mediocre short stuff.

Or, possibly it doesn't measure up to the artistic drawings and glowing phrases of the fancy advertisements. All "features" can't be super-best! But——you've booked it, and must run it; and now you've got to add something which will take away the bad taste.

A short drama? Somehow, the 5-reel drama doesn't seem to fit with a short one. Anyway, it's hard to pick a good short drama nowadays.

A comedy? Good, when they are good; P-U-N-K when they are NOT. Mostly, they are NOT. And ten to one yours is a discerning patronage which inane attempts to appear funny won't please.

Well, we wouldn't be talking if we hadn't solved your problem. Cast your eyes over this:

REEL LIFE No. 74, Released Sept. 27

THE SOLDIER'S STAFF OF LIFE
THE CORRECT TIME—As Determined by the U. S. Naval Observatory
BEANS AND LADY-BUGS
THE LAMPREY—A Blood-Sucking Fish
MAKING EYEGLASSES
SO EASY—An Animated Drawing from "Life"

Can you beat that for a thousand feet of entertainment? Can you imagine anyone who won't find something interesting in that reel?

Curiosity is a natural, human trait. Keep that in mind, and profit. Your patrons want to know——get Reel Life and show them. Reel Life pictures the how, the why, the wherefore.

No. 74 is not an exceptional issue. There are others just as good. Many are even better. Reel Life is the one reel which always appeals, and it is always current. You can show No. 70 to-day and No. 30 tomorrow. Book it regularly, advertise it, and see your attendance increase.

AN OPEN LETTER

TO MEN WHO EXHIBIT PICTURES:

How many pictures offered you for contract this season have you seen?

Are you letting other men furnish your brains or are you using your own?

An extensive exhibitor who has played the pictures of all the producers in his twenty-five theatres has found by studying his audiences that the Best Star in the world will not carry a feeble story and an inexpensive production.

You know that, too, don't you; and your box office suffers, doesn't it?

A Big Cast in a big story and a wonderful devil-take-the-cost production has a vastly greater drawing power than a big star in a hastily written story and an indifferent production.

You know that, too, don't you?

Mr. Exhibitor, the handwriting is on the wall. Witness the Fox Standard Pictures and reap the golden harvest.

Witness "THE HONOR SYSTEM."

Witness "JACK AND THE BEANSTALK."

Witness "THE CONQUEROR," a titanic American drama with William Farnum at his best.

Witness "THE SPY," with Dustin Farnum in the timely American patriotic drama with exposures that will startle any audience, and melt a heart of steel with its dramatic punches.

Witness "CAMILLE," a Theda Bara Super picture that women cannot resist—men want to see it—children, too, will appreciate "CAMILLE."

Witness "WHEN A MAN SEES RED"—William Farnum in the greatest dramatic story ever staged in the history of the world.

Still greater Standard Pictures produced along the same efficient, careful lines, built on the solid foundation of good showmanship.

Witness the coming Jane and Katherine Lee Series; the coming Fox Kiddie Series.

Witness the bomb shells that will write new motion picture history, namely: Theda Bara in "CLEOPATRA" and William Farnum in "LES MISERABLES."

Well, this is why an extensive exhibitor after years of studying the trend of the taste of critical audiences produced Standard Pictures, which include the aforementioned. He insists that his fellow exhibitors see these pictures before they book them, for he wants them to use their brains along with his before sharing with him the millions he has already ventured.

The wise exhibitor will respond to his impulse and see these pictures before he contracts for a pig in a poke.

Increase in Advertising Rates Issue of October 8th

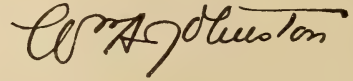
As previously announced and as indicated on our December, 1916, rate card the new advertising rates of MOTION PICTURE NEWS become effective with all advertisers on October 1st, 1917, or in our issue dated October 13th.

New advertisers, that is, advertisers who made contracts after December, 1916, have been paying this new rate.

Old advertisers, on contract prior to December, 1916, have been allowed the old rate up to date, October 1st.

Since its establishment four years ago MOTION PICTURE NEWS has grown steadily in circulation and prestige, untill today we claim a preeminence in reading circulation (the only true basis of advertising value) in this field.

The new rates are fixed only on this basis of circulation value; not on the greatly increased cost of manufacture nor upon the fact that today in the face of these conditions MOTION PICTURE NEWS is investing more heavily than ever before in the creation of still larger circulation and greater reading value.



If You Haven't Sold All Territory On Your Picture

Then think this over!

The West Coast sub-edition of Motion Picture News goes to the buyers and exhibitors of eleven western states, comprising the exchange center of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Salt Lake City and Denver.

It goes with a new appeal, a home appeal —every week.

The advertising rates—for display in the West Coast Section pages, and next to reading matter—are based only on the territorial circulation. They are much lower than our national rates.

This territorial edition offers you an ideal opportunity to exploit your picture in a concentrated way at a limited expense.

Write or phone us and we will give you full details.

The territorial editions of Motion Picture News, of which the "West Coast," now published each week, is the first offer increased circulation value to al, advertisers in this field.

To dealers, buyers, exchanges who sell only in the territory covered by the edition or where this territory is unsold by a dealer in American rights they offer concentrated local circulation at territorial rates.

To the national advertiser they offer both the increased circulation and closer reading of more readers with more local news to read.

Expositions and Good Publicity

"EXPOSITIONS are all right," says a writer lamely in a recent space-filling editorial. His "all right" arguments are vaguely comprised in statements that expositions are good publicity, and anyway they have always been held by the industry.

The latter argument will scarcely induce a good business man to invest in expositions. This good-natured and generous industry has done a lot of things that need not be continued on the basis of usage.

As for good publicity, expositions may or may not achieve judicious advertising for the motion picture, this achievement being wholly dependent upon the way they are held.

Magazine pages are also good publicity—potentially. It depends upon what is printed upon them.

In our opinion the publicity good thus far accomplished by expositions may be definitely expressed by a large zero. There is an open question as to whether or not they have actually done harm. We would like to submit both questions to a board of practical and experienced advertising men.

* * * * *

AND in this connection we suggest to the recently formed Exposition Committee that its very first duty is to call in an advertising man and ask him how expositions may be made to yield good publicity.

The industry, or any firm in it, would scarcely expect to launch a quarter of a million dollar national advertising campaign without such expert advice and direction.

Why not for expositions?

Good publicity for motion pictures is not difficult to achieve.

Good pictures and artistic theatres are achieving it right along. The Strand and Rialto theatres of New York and their counterparts throughout the country have, each one, in a single week, given the motion picture more good advertising than any one of our expensive and so-called expositions.

* * * * *

NATIONAL advertising campaigns have done a very considerable and unappreciated good, particularly in carrying the news of the high-class dramatic and informative pictures to millions of readers who never went to picture theatres and didn't know of such pictures and their appeal to the intelligent public.

But what publicity good has been accomplished by our Midway Plaisance "Expositions" and their wild scramble of picture fans attracted willingly by the generous exhibit of stars?

Fans we have with us and always shall. Expositions appeal to their morbid desire to get inside of the picture works. They like expositions, especially if the admission is free or cut rate. But expositions don't increase their theatre patronage; and thus far our expositions have appealed only to fans.

What is good publicity?

Publicity is supposed to be good when it sells goods.

What goods then have we to sell in this field?

What goods do we propose to sell through expositions?

* * * * *

ARE we to sell picture bookings and theatre equipment, or are we to sell theatre admissions?

In other words, is the exposition appeal to be made to the trade, or to the public, or to both? Can it appeal successfully to both?

These are the fundamental questions to be answered. They should be answered first—before any kind of an exposition is planned—anywhere.

It's about time to stop our good-natured, indefinite acquiescence in expositions; about time to stop charging the manufacturer a big sum for shows, the why and wherefore of which nobody knows, and into which the manufacturer only exasperatedly enters because the other fellow does.

If we are to have a New York exposition in February it is time to answer these questions right now.

* * * * *

IF a trade exposition is to be held it will not pay the manufacturer to take space unless exhibitors attend in sufficient numbers to make it worth his while.

And exhibitors will not attend in sufficient numbers unless it is worth their while; unless, for instance, the exposition exposes something—of such business value—that as up-to-the-minute theatre men they cannot afford to miss it.

Speaking Editorially:

The Story for the Star

THIS is unquestionably the year of the star. Whether we like it or not, or believe in the star system or not, the star, from every trade angle, is in his or her apotheosis.

There is much to be said one way and another on this important subject; and many people are saying things. But in all the arguments we hear little of what, in our estimation, is the biggest factor involved.

Namely, the story!

What vehicles are we to provide during this year which promises much production and many star productions?

Is it clearly realized that our tremendous volume of production has all but exhausted the sales-counter of plays and novels—and that much shopping is now necessary and a satisfactory selection exceedingly difficult?

Two avenues are now possible. They are big avenues but they must be opened quickly and intelligently.

One is the opportunity to which we have often alluded, for the prominent fictionists to study the mechanics of the photoplay, just as they must study the stage, and successfully create fresh picture material.

The other is the intelligent resurrection and adaptation to the screen of the big short stories of the past.

There are plenty of these. Many a short story has been written that could have made a great novel; just as there are many novels that should have been short stories.

These big short stories will not be found by their authors' names or their titles, or by a hasty, unsympathetic survey, or by any cheap office system of research.

But they can be found by sincere and intelligent effort.

A Good Start

OCEAN View's five-state convention, covered in the news columns of last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, was an auspicious beginning for the American Exhibitor' Association. The gospel of "Business First" announced in the Chicago platform seems to have been sternly carried out at the Southern gathering.

Continuing in these paths the A. E. A. can also continue to expect and receive the support of those seeking the good of the industry through the advancement of real exhibitor organization. Freedom from entangling alliances—in and out of the industry—is a good start, and it may be left to the good judgment of the A. E. A. directors to assure its continuance.

The good of the industry is the good of all its branches. Producing and distributing interests will not begrudge moral support to a move that promises real exhibitor organization. The path to success for the A. E. A. is clear, so long as it continues to shun the by-paths and continue along the road paved with the one phrase—exhibitor organization.

Sweets and Red Meat

EXHIBITORS volunteering their opinions to MOTION PICTURE NEWS are strong in the statement that light comedy dramas are at present the most acceptable productions to screen patrons. "We find," declared one showman, "that light subjects with stars of lesser brilliance are almost equalling in drawing power more widely advertised stars in heavily dramatic productions."

Perhaps it is the reaction of war spirits; perhaps a natural turning to sweets after an over-diet of red meat.

A Parable on Organization

THE following incident is about as good a parable on organization as we have heard.

A successful producer who always maintains a substantial bank balance found it necessary the other day to ask his bank to discount some customer notes.

The bank, a prominent one, objected strenuously—this in spite of the excellent bank record of the applicant, and with many apologies.

"We don't want any more film discounts," said the bank president. "We have reached our limit. The film business has changed since we investigated it two years ago. It is getting worse instead of better.

"No one seems able to tell us what pictures will cost or what they will bring. There is no standardization. On the contrary, we see only the wildest and most inexcusable chaos.

"We are pleased and eager to do business on groceries, or any commodity which is ruled by reasonable and economic laws. But not on films!"

In reply the applicant for discounts unfolded a copy of his trade paper and showed an item on organization—a recent organization with which he was concerned and which had for its main object the standardization of picture values and prices.

"That," said the bank president, "is different," and he granted the discounts.

The moral is plain. The industry, like every other industry, needs discounts and will need more.

Is there any more practical reason for standardization, achieved through organization?

This situation demands a real trade exposition, one that will show the exhibitor how to make more money and save more money, one that will exhibit every new and valuable adjunct to showmanship which the industry has developed.

It will be quite different; in fact, a total departure from our midway expositions of the past.

If we are to hold an exposition for the public—and if it is decided that the public will pay the expense, or at least such a share that the industry can afford to pay the balance, then let us hold an exposition which will give "good publicity" to the motion picture.

* * * * *

LET it be dignified, for one thing, so that, like the national advertising of better pictures, it will elevate the motion picture in the public eye.

Let the exposition appeal, not to the morbid fan, but to the more critical and cultured element of the public who go irregularly, if at all, to picture theatres, but who should—for the theatre's sake and for their own.

We have evidently got away from the original and only excuse for expositions—namely, that they were to make a profit for exhibition organizations. We are pretty well agreed that, if contributions are necessary, it is cheaper and better to make them direct.

Let's proceed now on the basis of good publicity and a clear understanding of what good publicity is.

Perfection Pictures Announces Policy—Plays Now Ready

Gilt Edge Subjects at Fair Prices, with Big Stars and Stories Offered—No Deposits Required of Exhibitors—Weekly Releases Through Kleine—Eight Pictures Ready

IN advertisements carried by trade papers this week, Perfection Pictures make the first announcement of its plans and policy, the shaping of which has been going forward quietly for some months.

Preceded by a nationwide campaign of advertising in leading magazines and newspapers, there will be released under this brand five and six reel features written by widely reputed authors, produced by Essanay, Edison and Kleine, and portrayed by some of the highest artists in the film firmament. Eight of these productions have been completed. Ten more are in the making. The releases will be at the rate of one a week.

Pictures Ready Now

The list of pictures announced as ready for exhibitors exploit the names of Taylor Holmes, little Mary McAlister, Jack Gardner, Shirley Mason and Conquest Programs. Holmes will be seen in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," which is available now, a comedy drama by Clarence B. Kellard, which ran in the Saturdal Evening Post, and in "Fools for Luck," another light comedy subject from the story of Kennett Harris, which also was published in the Saturday Evening Post and which is scheduled for the week of October 8.

Jack Gardner is announced by Essanay in "Men of the Desert" for September 24 release. This is a western object. On September 17 Shirley Mason will be seen in "The Awakening of Ruth," by Lucien Hubbard. "Pants," a Mary McAlister subject, is available to exhibitors now.

Big Ad Campaign Begins

The first shot in the national ad campaign will be fired by Perfection Pictures in the Saturday Evening Post, dated September 22. From that time forward there will be no let up in the program of making the people of the country acquainted with the new brand of high-class pictures, and thus in aiding the exhibitor the contracts for Perfection Pictures.

The George Kleine exchanges will distdibute the subjects throughout the country.

To the exhibitor is given word that fair prices will be charged for the service, prices which will allow of big profit to the theatre men. No deposits of any kind are required. Territory is to be allotted immediately.

Look for this Butterfly, "Like Wildfire"

Reports of an increased number of fraudulent duplicates offered for sale are daily strengthened by news of thefts. Consolidated Film and Supply Company, at Dallas, Texas, informs MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week that a print of "Like Wildfire," Butterfly picture, disappeared from the warehouse at Houston, August 10.

Ned E. Depinel, of the company, writes that they do not use the Universal numbers. The one that disappeared bore the number 868. Exhibitors and exchanges should write to Mr. Depinel at Dallas if trace of the film is found.

C. C. Pettijohn Honored at St. John, New Brunswick

Invited to Address Exhibitors of Maritime Provinces—Motion to Affiliate with American Exhibitors Deferred

AT the meeting of the exhibitors of the Maritime Provinces, at St. John, N. B., on Saturday, a motion to affiliate with American Exhibitors was deferred until the next annual convention. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces—the body in session—is now affiliated with the body of like name in the United States.

C. C. Pettijohn of the American Exhibitors' Association, was present and was extended distinguished honor. He was invited to address the convention at the principal session Saturday evening. He made a fine speech, tempered with moderation, but fully disclosing the necessity for the forming of a new organization of American exhibitors. The meeting followed the lead of Mr. Pettijohn, showing like moderation.

On Sunday evening at the private auditorium sessions in the Keith & Albee Imperial theatre, Mr. Pettijohn was again called to the platform for an address. He responded with spirit carrying the audience with him. The entire attendance at the convention was present.

The convention was a great success and proved of the utmost benefit to the industry. N. V. Gastonguay, of Halifax, who had been vice-president, succeeded as president of the body for the ensuing year. W. H. Golding, the retiring president, made an excellent annual report and address.

Weather was fine on Sunday so the delegates got their steamer trip on the St. John River, going as far as Brown's Flats. It was a delightful outing thoroughly enjoyed by Mr. Pettijohn and other visitors from the United States.

By Friday evening delegates had arrived from many of the outside towns in the province and from the city of Halifax, coming by boat, train and parties in motors. F. H. Richardson came over from Halifax where he had been attending the organization meeting of the Halifax operators and stage employes. A banquet was tendered the projection expert by the St. John operators at Bond's restaurant after the evening theatre's performance.

W. Stephen Bush and Sam Spedon arrived on Friday, Miss Rose Tapley on Saturday, and Merrick Nutting, editor of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, the same day. Claire Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal, and L. E. Ouimet, general manager of the Specialty Film Import, were present.

Louis Rosenfeldt, of the Famous Players, came from Toronto to represent that company, and was welcomed by his many friends in St. John, where he was formerly manager.

Friday evening was spent in visiting the various theatres and managers' offices and in social gatherings. The theatres were decorated in honor of the event. The Unique had a very lavish display of flags in every window and a large sign of welcome over the doors all the way across the building. The lobby was also filled with a profusion of beautiful flowers.

The Imperial had a new stage setting, and the lobbies newly decorated with rose and blue drapings. The Opera House had flowers and palms with signs of welcome to visiting exhibitors prominently displayed. The other theatres all made their welcome known in various ways and the whole town wore a holiday aspect.

Eight hundred invitations were printed for the Sundays meeting, which Miss Tapley and Messrs. Pettijohn and Bush addressed. Special screenings were given Saturday morning in the various film exchanges of specials and features especially brought here for the convention. The Imperial theatre shows "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," and played to capacity business, with large crowds waiting outside for the evening performances. A feature of the convention is the opening of the new Triangle Exchange, with K. Mundee as manager.

A luncheon was given on Monday for Miss Tapley by Miss Alice Fairweather, motion picture editor of the St. John Standard and representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS at the Sign of the Lantern Tea Rooms. To meet Miss Tapley, Mrs. Kurhing, president of the Women's Canadian Club, with several officials of the club, the Local Council of Women and the officials of the Art Club were guests.

Special buttons bearing the design chosen by the League and with ribbons bearing in gold letters on blue, the place and date of the meeting, were worn by the delegates. The Triangle had large round buttons made of white celluloid with the exhibitor's name printed upon them and a Triangle in the background.

Motion Picture Industry's Great Work for the Nation

Under the Leadership of William A. Brady, Exhibitors in Forty-eight States Have Been Mobilized—Screens Even in Village Theatres Are Now Promptly Put Into Federal Aid

MOTION picture exhibitors in forty-eight States have been effectually mobilized to actively aid the Government by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

They are prepared to show upon the screen in their theatres slides or trailers received from the motion picture committees of the National Association, acting in conjunction with the members of the Cabinet and the various Federal departments, the Council of National Defense, the Red Cross War Council and the Committee on Public Information.

Rapid progress is being made in the organization of the exhibitors in many states following the successful campaign which was inaugurated last June under the auspices of the National Association and the Exhibitors' League in connection with the Liberty Loan, and the splendid service rendered by the industry in this instance will be greatly augmented in the future as new theatres are being listed which have only been opened during the past few months.

To Reach Tiny Villages

In this connection a novel plan, as set forth in the following letter, has been successfully worked out by Herman J. Brown, State Chairman of Idaho, which will interest the chairmen in other states:

"I have made arrangements to reach villages so small that our association has no record of theatres and managers. I did this through letters to the postmasters and was surprised that fly specs on the map all seem to be on deck with some place to show pictures and someone to show them. The postmasters to call personally on the reluctant exhibitors.

"My experience has convinced me more than ever that the screen has the press skinned a mile, as 'burgs' of 150 population have a show at least once a week, but no paper within a hundred miles."

Splendid Work in Oregon

C. W. Meighan, State Chairman of Oregon, has made notable progress in the organization of the exhibitors, according to report contained in the following letter to President Brady:

"It may interest you to know that even before you formed the National Committee our exhibitors in Oregon were exerting every possible effort to co-operate with the government. That their work was effective is attested by the fact that the screen in Oregon is given great credit for the splendid oversubscription this state showed in Liberty Bonds, Red Cross subscriptions and for the fact that it stands first among all the states in the matter of voluntary enlistments.

"Our Portland district is the only one in the United States, I am told, which contributed so many voluntary enlistments that no men at all were taken by the government on the first draft.

"Concerted work on the part of motion picture theatres is credited with contributing largely to this splendid showing.

"I tell you this so you may know that to every extent within the power of our exhibitors in this state, you may count upon our fullest, heartiest and most cheerful co-operation."

Eastern States Also Doing Well

The western states are not the only ones in which active work is under way, many of the middle west and eastern states are being organized by the state chairman and in some localities this campaign apparently affords the first real opportunity for perfecting an exhibitors' organization.

H. M. Morrison of the Majestic and Princess theatres, Hartford, Conn., and State Chairman of the National Committee, is now engaged with plans for effecting the first organization of exhibitors in that state. Mr. Morrison is vice-president of the Hartford local, which comprises all the theatres in the state capital, and similar organizations are proposed for New Haven, Bridgeport, Waterbury, Stamford, New London, Meriden and Danbury. Chairman Morrison will issue a call for a general meeting of all the exhibitors of the state at an early date, when the purposes of the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association will be placed before them by President William A. Brady, who is to be invited to attend the conference as guest of honor.

Hesitate to Increase Prices in Minneapolis

New Garrick Theatre Has Had Courage to Put Up Admissions a Notch, but Other Exhibitors Say Patrons Won't Stand It

EVERY exhibitor in the Northwest is confronted with an increased expense and wants to increase prices but doesn't see how he is going to do it. Neither does he see his way out plainly if he doesn't raise prices.

As the average exhibitor sees it, everybody is getting his bit but the exhibitor. Salaries of stars and other costs have boosted the price of film. Coal for the theatre heating plant is higher, the employes want more, and so it goes.

On the other hand, flour, sugar and meat are keeping pace with the film stars and the patrons don't feel that they can afford to pay more. In a town with a twenty-cent admission and a ten-cent admission in different houses, they will go twice a week to see the cheaper production though the subject matter be inferior, rather than go once to the twenty-cent house and see the best. The film is rest and recreation first and art second with the masses in the Northwest.

The New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, is one theatre that has had the courage to meet the situation. This theatre has long had a policy of buying the best, and now is forced to charge for it. The admission has been raised from fifteen to twenty cents. L. C. Calvert, manager, has just supervised the remodeling of the theatre, enlarged the orchestra and is running the same program in quality that is run in the largest Eastern theatres.

"The Ruben and Finkelstein houses have all had to face a heavy increase in expenses in the last year," said Mr. Calvert, "though this house is the only one to go to twenty cents at this time. It has been my experience that the known star is absolutely essential to get the business."

While other managers in Minneapolis admit they would prefer a price increase, they say conditions now do not warrant it as far as they are concerned.

"We feel that the patrons are hard pressed as well as the exhibitors," said Charles Branham, manager of the Strand, a Saxe house. "We are charging fifteen cents and giving them the best we can get, though we give a straight show and do not attempt scenic effects outside the film nor provide soloists. I believe the exhibitors generally feel that with the men going to war, all of them film patrons, with the economy call in every mind, a general increase in the city would work a hardship in the long run.

Billy B. Watson, manager of the New Garden, believes conditions are against a general increase and he does not contemplate an admission increase this Fall.

"While other lines of business are raising prices, the theatre business, great as it is, gets what is left.

Half the Houses in Newark, N. J., Double Prices

Admission prices at motion picture playhouses in Newark and vicinity have been materially advanced during the past six months. It is estimated that in fifty per cent. of the houses in Newark and Elizabeth increases of more than 100 per cent. have taken place since last Winter. Exhibitors declare increased admission prices are due to the higher cost of film rentals and the scarcity of labor in the operation of their playhouses.

The opening of the Newark theatre as a motion picture house will give to that city its first playhouse whose regular price charge for orchestra seats is fifty cents. Manager J. B. McNally is confident that theatregoers of Newark will pay fifty cents for the privilege of enjoying the improved facilities offered by the playhouse of which he is the manager.

F. D. Allison, manager of the Strand theatre of Newark, has also advanced the price of admission to his playhouse to twenty-five cents. Prices at the Strand theatre of Newark are the same as characterize admissions at the U. S. Garden theatre of Elizabeth and Proctor's Broad street house of the same city. Last Winter admission to Proctor's Broad street theatre and the U. S. Garden theatre was fixed at ten cents. All exhibitors report that attendance figures at the advanced rates are practically as good as under the cheaper prices.

Henry J. Brock Goes to Tragic Death in Auto Upset

His Car Skidded While He Was Driving from New York to His Home in Buffalo, and Brock Was Pinned Beneath It—Pioneer Film Man Since Days of Penny Arcade and Potent Factor in Export

HENRY J. BROCK, president of the Inter Ocean Film Corporation, was killed when his automobile turned turtle at the Glenford Church turn in the Catskills on Friday.

Mr. Brock had with him in the car Harry Brouse, owner of two theatres in Ottawa, and Emery P. Hylamp, of Buffalo, a cadet at West Point. They were badly but not seriously injured.

It had been Mr. Brock's custom to make trips from his office in New York city to his home in Buffalo to see Mrs. Brock, who remained there with the children during the school year. He knew the road well, had driven it many times and was considered a competent and skilful pilot.

The turn is one of the worst on the road, and according to Dr. A. A. Stern of Kingston, who witnessed the accident, Mr. Brock was making it at only fair speed. But the road was soft, as it had been raining, and there was a bad clay spot. Apparently the machine skidded, and Mr. Brock tried to get back to the road and had nearly succeeded when over it went.

Pinned Fast Under Car

Mr. Brock was caught under the car, but his two companions were thrown far beyond, when the swirl came in trying to get back to the road. Dr. Stern hurried to the scene and was soon joined by many other autoists. The car was lifted, but only to disclose that Mr. Brock's death must have been instantaneous.

Dr. Stern gave first aid to Mr. Brouse and Mr. Hylamp, who had received many contusions from the fall on jagged rocks. He then took the pair in his own car and hurried on to Kingston, where they were placed in the Kingston City Hospital.

Neither of the survivors could explain the accident further than is stated here. They were talking at the time, and it all happened in a twinkling. Telegrams were sent to Buffalo, to Mr. Brock's home and to Mitchell H. Mark, of the Strand Theatre Company, in New York, who hurried on to Kingston to take charge of Mr. Brock's body and accompany it to Buffalo, where the funeral was held Sunday afternoon.

Pioneers at the Funeral

Mr. Brock, who was forty-six years old, leaves a widow and four children, two boys and two girls, ranging in ages from six to fifteen years. The three older children are in school. The funeral was attended by many of the pioneer motion picture men from New York and other cities, and there was a great outpouring of his old friends in Buffalo, where Mr. Brock got his business start.

The whole industry has been saddened by the tragic death of Henry J. Brock, who was recognized throughout the country,

HENRY J. BROCK

Mr. Brock Was One of the Foremost Men in the Advancement of Motion Color Photography and for that matter, the world over, as one of the strongest men in the motion picture industry. He was in it at the beginning and had broad views and the greatest confidence in the world-over future of the film trade.

Mr. Brock got his real start as junior partner in the Mark-Brock Enterprises, a firm which founded the penny arcades in the pioneer days of the moving pictures. Mitchell H. Marks was the senior member of the firm.

Interests in Many Cities

Quite naturally the operation of penny arcades led up to theatre ownership, and in time the company and the partners had theatre interests in many cities, of this and other countries. Mr. Brock retained many of these connections and so, for that matter, did Mr. Mark.

Mr Brock to his death counted himself a Buffalo man, though he had an apartment at the Hotel Astor, New York, and an office, headquarters of the Inter Ocean Film Corporation, in the Chandler Building, at 220 West Forty-second street, New York City. He was born in Buffalo and got his schooling there. Mr. Brock kept two Buffalo theatres as his individual properties, the Regent and the Academy. He also had two in Toronto, the York and the Strand.

Mr. Mark withdrew from the Mark-Brock Enterprises and Mr. Brock continued the business. His enterprises extended with the growth of the industry, and he was in closer touch than perhaps any other man with all international aspects of the film trade.

Michigan in a Body Joins New Association

Speakers Enthusiastic in Saying It Is First Time a National Organization Has Acted in Businesslike Way

THE Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League met at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, on Tuesday, September 4, and pased a resolution to disband the organization, and then immediately passed another resolution to form the Michigan branch of the American Exhibitors' Association.

The new association, which is temporary, has committees appointed to draft the proper set of constitution and by-laws that will make the association a permanent one. S. A. Moran, of Ann Arbor, is temporary president, and Claude Cade, of Lansing, temporary secretary. These gentlemen held similar positions in the old league.

Michigan exhibitors are very enthusiastic about the new American Exhibitors' Association, and contend that it is the first time in the history of the industry that the national organization was doing things in a real businesslike way—without petty jealousies and without resorting to politics. If only President Wells and Manager Pettijohn keep up the same determined effort for a clean administration, the Michigan exhibitors will be more than pleased with their affiliation.

The Detroit meeting was largely attended, close to 75 exhibitors being present when the meeting opened, with more coming on every train. Frank Rembusch, of Indiana, addressed the meeting, outlining the work of the new national association and urging it moral and financial support. He did not speak in vain, and he can rest assured of good support from Michigan. Another live-wire talker was Sam Bullock, of Cleveland, who spoke along the same lines.

There was an auto ride in the afternoon for the ladies; a theatre party at night, and a big stag smoker for the men at 11 p. m., which was attended by nearly 300 exhibitors and exchange managers. King Perry was chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and he gave the boys a dandy time.

A committee from the State Association will meet a committee from the Detroit association with regard to an affiliation between both bodies.

Red Cross to Distribute Smokes in American Training Camps

Giant Organization Clamoring for Cigarettes, Tobacco and Pipes to Distribute in Concentration Camps—Instructions to Exhibitors

THE Motion Picture Division of the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund has spread in a new and important direction. The Red Cross Organization is clamoring for cigarettes and smoking tobacco to be distributed among the camps where the National soldiers are being concentrated.

Millions of cigarettes, tons of smoking tobacco will be necessary for the camps. Here is the greatest opportunity the exhibitor has ever been afforded to demonstrate his patriotism.

The inquiries for "Drop a Penny" and "Drop a Cigarette" cards are coming by every mail from all parts of the country. The most enthusiastic exhibitors upon whom MOTION PICTURE NEWS has yet had reports is the manager of the Isis theatre, Anderson, Ind., whose inquiry reflects a fine and patriotic spirit.

This exhibitor went ahead without waiting for cards, collecting nearly a barrelful of cigarettes, cigars and tobacco, which he distributed among the soldiers of his local company, sending the remainder to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund.

His generous package came into the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund office almost simultaneous with an inquiry from the Red Cross for as many cigarettes and as much tobacco as could be secured from all sources. The package was immediately turned over to the Red Cross.

Lines from Live Wires

Many interesting letters accompany exhibitors' request. L. K. Gaines, manager of the Globe theatre, Arizona, writes:

"I will do all I can to boost the good cause along in this district. There are six motion picture theatres located here and two others further down the valley. Send me eight cards—quick!"

A. Howitz, manager of the H-R Theatre Company, Toledo, Ohio, writes:

"After reading about your campaign, I immediately 'phoned our local newspaper, the News-Bee. I am also running slides, telling the public how important it is that the boys at the front have their smokes. Send us four lobby cards—two for each theatre!"

Chas. F. Hardwick, of Hardwick Brothers, who operate the Lyceum theatre, Clovis, New Mexico, writes a snappy, very much to-the-point letter, saying:

"It is a very worthy cause. Please send along the cards."

L. W. McCuan, manager of the Kozy theatre, Dresden, Tenn., writes (in capital letters):

"IT'S A WONDERFUL IDEA. IF A SMALL TOWN EXHIBITOR LIKE MYSELF CAN DO ANY GOOD, SEND ME THE CARDS."

Our reply to Mr. McCuan, also in capital letters, is simply this:

THE SMALL TOWN EXHIBITOR IS THE BACKBONE OF THE BUSINESS. GO TO IT!

Charles Blaines, manager of the Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Oklahoma, says:

"Please send the cards. Will start the good cause immediately."

G. A. Hartman, proprietor of the Orpheum theatre, Bandon, Ore., thinks "it is a grand idea." He adds: "Will place said equipment in a conspicuous place. Believe me!"

The Strand theatre, Stamford, Conn., writes:

"We want to be the first to start the 'Drop a Cigarette' plan in this city as we are 'The Big House.'"

Dolly Spurr Is Active

Dolly Spurr, manager of the Royal Grand theatre, Marion, Ind., and incidentally the livest "exhibitress" in our acacquaintance, sends the following letter:

GENTLEMEN:

I received the September 1 NEWS August 25, and immediately got busy on the "Drop a Cigarette" idea. So Labor Day found the tobacco fund in full swing in my theatre. I didn't have sufficient space in my lobby for pedestals and bowls, so I had made two 12-inch square glass boxes, with wood backs which could be fastened to each side of the box office, and painted the cards myself. At the end of the first week I investigated, and found that we had 75 packages of cigarettes, 20 cigars, 10 packs of smoking tobacco, and sufficient money to buy 30 more packages of cigarettes and 30 of tobacco. Both cases are nearly full, and I would say that the idea is going to be a great success, and you should be highly complimented for originating it. Our local recruiting officer believes that we can arrange to send our donations direct to some of our boys who are now in France.

You will notice by the enclosed ad that we gave a benefit show for the soldier boys

MEET THE LIVEST EXHIBITOR TO TAKE UP THE "SMOKES" CAMPAIGN!

- He is a cripple.
- He sent a postcard.
- His name is not mentioned.
- He writes as if every word is worth a dollar—and it is!
- Count the ideas!

Anderson, Ind., Aug. 30.

Gentlemen:

Send sign. Pennies. Good idea; big!

So good could not wait for sign. Had one made for cigars, cigarettes, sacks of tobacco, new pipes, etc, for local Co. M.

Will be able to turn over to them Monday night at least 1-2 barrel.

Monday Demonstration Day in Anderson. What do we do with pennies? As I am going to get 'em!

Am a cripple and can't go myself.

Isis Theatre.

- What feeling does that last sentence stir up in you big, husky exhibitors who are reluctant about jumping full heartedly into this campaign?
- Come on—get busy—time's flying!

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

last Saturday morning. My adopted son, age four, gets the credit for this show, as it was given in his name.

The picture was donated by the Famous Players of Cincinnati, special tickets were printed free by our regular printer, and vaudeville and music was donated also. We worked in co-operation with our local recruiting officer in disposing of the tickets. The Boy Scouts aided in the sale, and Master Donald sold 150 tickets all by his "lonesome."

There was enough money realized to buy 15 wrist watches for the boys who enlist. This money was turned over to Sergeant Frank Lincing, who buys the watches and fills the orders as they come in to him.

The soldier boy who receives a watch, sends to Master Donald a picture postcard of himself. What a wonderful thing it will be for the little fellow, when he gets older, to have the pictures of these boys, many of whom may do great deeds, and die for the cause.

Master Donald appeared in his show, in a soldier suit, and sang "Long Boy," and his number was enthusiastically received. It was SOME show, given in a worthy cause, and I hope that every boy who gets one of these watches will enjoy it as much as we enjoyed the work of obtaining it for him.

Sincerely,

DOLLY SPURR.

Fine Old Estate as Location for "Nobody"

The celebrated Pembroke estate, the home of Captain De Lamar, at Glen Cove, L. I., is the scene of a great portion of Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming Metro production, "Nobody," which has been picturized by Charles A. Taylor from Louis Joseph Vance's novel of the same name.

"Nobody" is being directed by William C. Dowlan, assisted by Benjamin S. Kutler.

Vitagraph Grapples "Major Funkie" Sept. 12

Walter W. Irwin Moved by a Desire to Benefit Whole Motion Picture Industry, Not Merely to Boost "Within the Law"

IN trying to put "Major Funkie," otherwise Funkhouser, the Chicago censor, out of business by mandamus, Vitagraph will have a day in court before Judge Robert E. Crowe on September 12.

Attorney Louis F. Jacobson, who has been engaged by Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing company of Vitagraph, to represent the company, will base his fight against Funkhouser on a clause in the Chicago city charter, which provides that the city is authorized to exercise police power, and through the general superintendent of police to refuse or grant permits for motion pictures as the general superintendent may determine.

An enactment of the City Council, later passed, stipulated that the second deputy, who shall not be a member of the police department, shall censor motion pictures, but does not provide in what manner the censoring shall be done.

Mr. Irwin has gone into this fight not so much to force a complete showing of "Within the Law" in Chicago, as to do good for the industry as a whole.

Through the arbitrary rulings of Major Funkhouser many pictures have been so mutilated that the producers have refused absolutely to let them be shown to audiences in the jurisdiction over which Major Funkhouser holds sway.

The Major, who has been quoted as saying that he is the absolute god of all he surveys in so far as motion pictures are concerned, and who refuses to pass a picture even though the entire Chicago population requests it to be passed, has cost the industry hundreds of thousand of dollars by his arbitrary rulings.

The Chicago censorship proposition has cost individual producers such an amount that several of them individually have considered the advisability of remaining out of Chicago with their products.

Vitagraph's legal fight against Major M. L. C. Funkhouser in an effort to put the Chicago Motion Picture Censor out of business for good, will be called in the court room presided over by Judge Robert E. Crowe at Chicago on September 12.

Unless Vitagraph wins this legal fight against Major Funkhouser, however, it is likely that many of the producers will refuse to go into Chicago, and in this way will wipe the second largest city in the United States off the motion picture map.

American Exhibitors' Association in New Quarters

The American Exhibitors' Association has taken new quarters on the twentieth floor of the Times Building. So rapidly has the new exhibitors' organization grown since its inception at Chicago in July that it became necessary to take new offices in order to handle the increased business of the association.

Hundreds of applications for membership are received daily, many from exhibitors who have never before been allied with any exhibitors' organization.

Strand Runs "Polly of the Circus" Week of Sept. 9

"Polly of the Circus," the first Goldwyn picture released, had its initial presentation at the Strand theatre during the week of September 9. Mae Marsh was seen in the title role. Other Goldwyn pictures to follow are: Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds" and Jane Cowl in "Spreading Dawn."

Vitagraph Gets Court Order in Anita Stewart Case

Supreme Court of New York Gives Order Restraining Anita Stewart from Appearing in Pictures for Louis B. Mayer or Other Persons

LEGAL action has been taken by Vitagraph to restrain Anita Stewart from appearing in other productions than those of Vitagraph and from being exploited as appearing under another management, person or corporation until she has fulfilled her contract with the Vitagraph Company, which it is stated, does not expire until January 31, 1918.

This action was taken after Louis B. Mayer and others had announced that Miss Stewart had been signed for an indefinite time to appear in special productions to be made by Mr. Mayer and his associates. Vitagraph sought relief in the Supreme Court and was granted an order restraining Miss Stewart from appearing in pictures under the management of Mr. Mayer or any other person or corporation. George V. Mullen, Justice of the Supreme Court, signed the order, dated September 6, 1917. The order is in the form of an injunction. It reads in part as follows:

Ordered that the defendant (Anita Stewart and Louis B. Mayer), be and she hereby is enjoined from acting, appearing in or aiding in the making or funishing to the defendant, Louis B. Mayer, or any other person or corporation other than plaintiff, any motion picture of any kind or character in which she is pictured or portrayed, prior to January 31, 1918, and that the defendant, Louis B. Mayer, his officers, agents and attorneys, be and they hereby are enjoined from enticing, inducing or causing the defendant, Anita Stewart, to fail or refuse to work in the employ of the plaintiff and from employing the defendant, Anita Stewart, to act or appear in, make or furnish to said defendant motion pictures of any kind or character in which she is portrayed or pictured prior to January 31, 1918, and from in any other manner causing or inducing the defendant, Anita Stewart, to violate her contract of employment with the plaintiff, set forth in the complaint, or any of the terms thereof, and each defendant is enjoined from announcing publicly or authorizing or permitting a public announcement that the said Anita Stewart is no longer employed by plaintiff or that the said Anita Stewart is or is about to be engaged by the defendant or any other person or corporation. It is further Ordered that the defendants show cause, at Special Term, Part No. 1 of this Court, to be held in the County Court House in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 11th day of September, 1917, at 10:30 o'clock in the forenoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, why this injunction should not be continued pendente lite, and why the plaintiff should not have such other and further relief as may be just and proper in the premises.

(Signed) GEORGE V. MULLEN,
Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

D. W. Griffith Hurrying Home to Complete New Picture

With "Intolerance" launched upon its phenomenal run in Europe, D. W. Griffith called Robert Harron, Dorothy and Lillian Gish to England, along with William Bitzer, his camera man, and together these lights of the American motion picture world have been working upon a story which will be Mr. Griffith's next presentation.

The European scenes have been completed and Mr. Griffith and his forces are hurrying home to complete the production for presentation the coming winter. A studio has been secured in California, and the big production will be rounded out there.

Griffith was on the battle front in France for several months. His forthcoming production will deal in a powerfully dramatic way with the present world war.

Mr. Griffith, who left America, March 17, will arrive here the last week in September. "Intolerance," in London, proved the greatest motion picture success the British stage has ever known, and crowned its triumph by being given at a gala performance in Drury Lane before King George and Queen Mary. Mr. Griffith was presented to their Majesties. As a result of that meeting he also grouped the royal family in an impromptu scene on the stage of the famous old theatre and took moving pictures of them.

Sawyer Plans Film Building in Washington

A. H. Sawyer, of the General Enterprises, Inc., has successfully negotiated a contract for the erection of a modern film building in Washington, D. C. This deal was closed Saturday, September 1, with Alonzo C. Mather, of Chicago. The structure to be known as the Mather building, will be a ten-story affair, completely equipped with vaults, a series of projection rooms, telegraph offices, express facilities, and will be the last word in construction of this nature. The announcement by Mr. Sawyer comes as a welcome piece of news to film men adjacent to the Washington territory, inasmuch as plans for a project of this kind have been discussed for the past few years, but nothing materialized until the negotiation was successfully completed recently by General Enterprise, Inc. Construction was begun on the new building Tuesday, at 916 G street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Clara Kimball Finishes "Magda"; "Shirley Kaye" Next

In "Magda" one of the most intensely dramatic moments of the play is occasioned by the stern, hard-hearted old father who, enraged by his daughter's calm resistance to his demand, locks her in a room and threatens to kill her and himself unless she consents to do his bidding. At the moment of levelling his pistol upon Magda, he falls, victim of paralysis, and dies.

"This scene is a mighty struggle of wills," declared Clara Kimball Young, at the Thanhouser Studio, New Rochelle, where "Magda" was in course of production, "the insistent father trying to dominate the fearful but unyielding girl."

W. W. Irwin Finds Exhibitors Look for Successful Season

On Tour of West Learns Theatre Men, with Exception of Those Oversold, Are in Prosperous Condition—Screen's Opponents Awakening to Futility of Their Efforts

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of Greater Vitagraph is back at his desk after a thirty day trip which took him as far West as Denver, and during which he talked with hundreds of exhibitors and visited every Greater Vitagraph branch between New York City and the Rockies.

He is enthusiastic over the future of each end of the film industry that is being conducted along safe business lines. He declares that the exhibitors of the country who have been watching every angle of their business from the cost of film rental to the very slightest detail, are entering upon the Fall season without the usual financial deficit caused by slack Summer business to be made up.

Pay Too High a Film Rental

Mr. Irwin says that he did find some exhibitors who had failed to take into consideration the seating capacity of their houses and the maximum box-office possibility, and had been oversold by film salesmen, with the result that they were paying a film rental largely in excess of any price they should pay, and hope to make a profit on their theatres.

These cases, he said, are getting fewer, owing to the fact that the exhibitors are realizing that they cannot pay a huge film rental, bind themselves with inequitable film rental contracts, and still hope to make money.

Some of the exhibitors to whom he talked, according to Mr. Irwin, recognized the fact that they have signed contracts for film rental that eventually will drive them from the business, and they are grasping at every straw with the hope that something intangible will occur to allow them to balance their books and, at least, make a living.

Mr. Irwin's trip, which started on August 2, was made for two reasons. Primarily, to personally meet the exhibitors of the country, and, secondarily, to become personally acquainted with each member of the Greater Vitagraph sales organization over which he presides.

Some Reforms Suggested

In discussing the distributing end of the business with the exhibitors, Mr. Irwin found that many of them had very decided views as to reforms that should be made by some of the distributing companies. He declared that he was especially pleased to learn that few of these reforms had to be undertaken by the Greater Vitagraph Distributing Company, as the exhibitors who do business with the company expressed themselves as decidedly pleased with the treatment they have received, and especially with the courtesy with which they are treated when they enter one of the Greater Vitagraph branch exchanges.

"I learned from the exhibitors," said Mr. Irwin, discussing his trip, "that the present status of the exhibiting end of the business, where the exhibitors have not been oversold on film rental, is good, and the future of the wise exhibitor is absolutely assured.

Successful Summer Season

"Exhibitors in every city I visited reported that they never have had such a successful Summer as that just drawing to a close. All of the exhibitors showing Greater Vitagraph products reported to me that they will start their Fall business without any financial loss to overcome. In past years the exhibitors declare they have entered the Fall campaign syndicates with a deficit. All are exceptionally optimistic over the coming Fall and Winter business.

"War is not hurting the motion picture business. Much as we must regret the necessity for war, the exhibitors find more and more of a nervous tension and strain caused by present conditions bringing thousands of people to clean, wholesome amusements for the mental distraction gained through this form of entertainment.

No Sympathy for Trouble Makers

"Another thing that impressed me throughout my trip is the animosity displayed against those small minorities which have been continually fighting the film industry in every state, apparently for the purpose of harassing them out of existence.

"I now foresee that the activities of these small minorities will be forced to cease; because, first, and of lesser importance, of the recognition of the industry by the National Government, which has called upon us to do everything in our power to be of assistance in this present crisis.

"The second and most important reason is shown in the discussion of substantial business people that all classes are recognizing the screen as the chief vehicle of entertainment and education, and of such importance in American life that it is a most tremendous factor for good in our social life.

Vindication of Pictures

"With these two forces, the Government and the substantial people of the country lending their influence, these small minorities can no longer continue to exist because all classes of the American people are quickly beginning to realize that any harassment of the screen is a trespass upon their rights and an injury to their social existence just as much, or even more, than would be a trespass upon the freedom of the press."

Metro Takes Over Another Studio On Coast

President Rowland Announces That Five of Metro Stars Will Leave Soon to Start Productions in New Studio at Hollywood

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation, announces the acquisition of another studio to the Metro forces. It is located in Hollywood, California. B. A. Rolfe, who has been general manager of the Metro Studio, at 61st street, New York, left for the coast this week to assume active leadership of the Super-Feature studio which will be opened shortly. The Hollywood Studio will be a separate affair and will have no connection with the studio in which Harold Lockwood produces his Super-Features for the Metro program.

It is expected that five of Metro's celebrated stars will leave New York City to produce wonderplays de luxe on the Western territory. Edith Storey will be the first to go. "The Legion of Death" will be her first starring vehicle from the Western studio—she will be directed by Tod Browning, who is in charge of her first picture being made under the Metro banner.

Upon the completion of "Blue Jeans," in which Viola Dana will be starred, she and her director, John H. Collins, will leave for the coast to produce a series of special Metro productions.

Maxwell Karger, under whose personal supervision the Metro-Super-Features are being produced at the Forty-third street studio, will again go back to his old birth at the Sixty-first street studios, where he will continue to be personally in charge of all the wonderplays made from that place.

Mr. Rowland in announcing this move, predicts a new era for the Metro Pictures. He said:

"A schedule has been mapped out whereby Metro stars will alternate in their work between the studio on the coast and the one in New York. Edith Storey, who has been signed recently by Metro, will be seen in Western drama. Miss Storey has convinced the public that she is peculiarly fitted for Western drama and Metro will give her every opportunity to eclipse even her former record for this kind of work. This, I think, is one of the most significant moves Metro has made and something big in the way of Super-Features will result.

Ontario Theatre Men Wish Admission to A. E. A.

The mention picture exhibitors of Ontario are organizing under the leadership of M. Mannist, of the Royal theatre, Fort William, Ont., and when their organization is completed they will apply in a body for a charter in the American Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Mannist is a wide awake exhibitor who recognizes that the only way the exhibitor can accomplish any reforms is through concerted action with a body that is composed entirely of exhibitors who have no connections with the manufacturer.

He is avowedly opposed to the advance deposit system, which method of doing business by the producer is being fought by the American Exhibitors' Association.

Stars Help But Do'nt Make Features Says Key

Hoffman Utilizes Services of a Player Designated a Star, But Does Not Place Dependence on That Alone for Results

M. H. HOFFMAN, INC., without seeking to make the star the principal factor in a feature, declares that when possible to utilize the services of a player so designated the company takes advantage of that player's ability.

P. V. R. Key, manager of sales and advertising of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., says that the list of fine artists (Mr. Key does not incline to pronouncing the word "star") appearing in Hoffman-Foursquare pictures are sufficient to satisfy even the fan who likes a star—providing the story and the production are both of high quality.

"In 'The Sin Woman,'" said Mr. Key, "the people have Irene Fenwick, Reine Davies and Clifford Bruce. Here is a tri-star offering in cast which exhibitors tell us is excellent and that gives the utmost satisfaction to patrons.

"Edgar Lewis really is the star of 'The Bar Sinister,' although this director's leading artists—Hedda Nova, Mitchell Lewis, Victor Sutherland, Jules Cowles and Florence St. Leonard—interpret their roles far better than some much higher salaried men and women appearing in pictures who are unjustly termed 'stars.'

"Jane Grey, one of the best routined artists on the stage or screen, is the principal player in 'Her Fighting Chance,' and she deserves much credit for what was accomplished with James Oliver Curwood's stirring story of the North.

"The featured artist," continued Mr. Key, "in that well wrought picture, 'The Silent Witness,' is Gertrude McCoy, an actress of such versatile abilities that she has succeeded equally well in 'Madame Sherry,' in a role totally dissimilar from that she undertakes in the Otto Hauerback picture.

"Whither Thou Goest,' which M. H. Hoffman, Inc., controls for Pennsylvania and the remainder of the territory controlled by the Philadelphia Hoffman-Foursquare, has as its two leading players Rhea Mitchell and Orrin Johnson.

"In 'The Fringe of Society,' the first George Backer Foursquare, Ruth Roland and Milton Sills are featured, and the other members of the cast, who are in all respects stars, are Leah Baird, J. Herbert Frank, George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby, Jules Cowles and Tammany Young.

"For the eight Foursquare feature, 'One Hour,' sequel to 'Three Weeks,' the two leading artists are Zeena Keefe and Allan Hale. So, all in all, the representation of popular players in our features is large. But—it is the play which is the thing, not the player."

Harold Lockwood in "Little Old New York"

To Make Pictures Here, Beginning with "Paradise Garden," and Then Five and Seven-Reel Dramatic Feature Films

YORKE FILM CORPORATION, releasing through Metro, has removed its producing centre from Hollywood, Cal., to New York City, and will resume operations at once on the production of feature films in New York, starring Harold Lockwood.

The star and Fred J. Balshofer, Yorke's president, with Wiley Gibson, business manager; Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; John Schronberg, violinist; Lester Cuneo, principal "villain" of the Lockwood forces; William Clifford, character actor, and Antonio Gaudio, cameraman, have arrived in New York, and will begin work immediately on the completion of the forthcoming release, from George Gibb's novel, "Paradise Garden."

Harold Lockwood is living at the Claridge, and "tickled to death" to be back home.

Under the direction of Fred J. Balshofer, the Yorke Film Corporation will continue to produce five and seven-act feature photo-dramas with Harold Lockwood as the star. The length of the productions will vary according to the stories to be dramatized.

"If more than five reels are necessary for the proper development of the story," said Fred J. Balshofer, president of the producing company, "we will have more."

In the past year, under Mr. Balshofer's direction, the star has appeared in "Under Handicap," from the novel by Jackson Gregory; "The Haunted Pajamas," by Francis Perry Elliott; "The Hidden Spring," by Clarence B. Kelland; "The Hidden Children," by Robert W. Chambers; "The Promise," by James B. Hendryx; "Pidgin Island," by Harold McGrath; "Big Tremaine," by Marie Van Vorst; "Mister 44," by E. J. Rath, and "The River of Romance," by the same author. Most of these have been picturized by Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer. All but the last have been made on the West Coast. "Paradise Garden," by George Gibbs, is in preparation.

"Just say I'm happy as a kid to get back," said Harold Lockwood with the Lockwood smile. "I want everyone to say hello to me, for it sure feels good to be home again."

Henry B. Walthall Is His Own Producer

Henry B. Walthall will appear as a star-manager, at the head of his own independent producing company. It is his intention to present photodramatic productions of magnitude.

Walthall appeared in the stellar role of the Confederate Colonel in that great epoch-marking achievement, "The Birth of a Nation."

After the forming of the new corporation of which Mr. Walthall is the head, he left New York for Los Angeles, where he arrived last Wednesday.

Miss Mary Charleson has been engaged by Mr. Walthall as leading woman in his new organization. Miss Charleson is now at the coast, making preparations to appear in his initial production, which will be released by the Triangle Distributing Corporation under the "Star Series Booking Plan."

Only Motion Picture Aviator at "Front" Writes Home

Bennett Molter, formerly of Metro's directing staff, the only moving picture man "at the front," who is an aviation pilot, will return soon to America to take his examinations for a commission. The American aviator was slightly injured recently in a fall which, however, had no power to lessen his enthusiasm for the service.

Robert J. Huntington, who is associated with William Christy Cabanne at the Metro Studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, has just received a letter from Molter, which says:

"The British have a battery of heavy caliber guns near us, and have taken over an old barn in the village in which a regular motion picture show is given daily. It is run under the auspices of the British Expeditionary Forces Canteen Cinema Supply.

"A charge of thirty centimes, 6 cents, is made for soldiers, and a franc for officers. They have a portable dynamo and projection machine, etc., and all the subjects are American. Can you beat it? Last night I had the pleasure of seeing the M in Metro tumble around, and the stars take their places, and then the Drews, in 'At the Count of Ten.' Sidney Drew got many laughs, especially when he repeatedly touched the money he succeeded in borrowing to his forehead, nose and lips. Believe me, Bob, it was a real treat for me to see the old faces again."

Rosenbaum in Charge of King-Bee Publicity

Nat H. Spitzer, general manager of the King-Bee Film Corporation, presenting Billy West in two-reel comedies, announces the engagement of Ed Rosenbaum, Jr., as head of their publicity department.

Mr. Rosenbaum has resigned from the executive staff of Elliott, Comstock and Gest to take charge of this department.

For four seasons he handled the publicity of the Ziegfeld Follies, then "The Winsome Widow," Donald Brian, "Madame Sherry," Anna Held, "Very Good Eddie" and many others.

Some of the stars who have received publicity through his efforts are Eva Tanguay, Mlle. Dazie, Nora Bayes, Bickel and Watson, Frank Tinney, Bert Williams, Leo Ditrichstein, Dorothy Jardon, Ina Claire, Richard Carle, Victor Moore, Jeff de Angeles, Mae Murray, Percival King, Cross and Josephine, Thomas Jefferson and Gertrude Vanderbilt.

Bernstein to Release Through Mutual

Isidore Bernstein announces that all future productions of the Bernstein Film Productions, Inc., will be released through the Mutual Film Corporation. It is stated unofficially that Mr. Bernstein will get $10,000 advance for every negative on release date, from which sum he must spend $4,500 for prints. Mr. Bernstein is now in New York with prints of his late productions, "Loyalty" and "Humility." These two will be offered on the independent market. All future productions, however, will be released through Mutual.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors Association, left New York Friday to attend the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Canada, to be held at St. John, N. E. V. Richards, manager of Sanger Amusement Company, New Orleans, was in town last week attending the meetings of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc.

Louis B. Mayer, prominent exhibitor and State rights man, of Boston, made a hurried trip to New York last week on business. Mr. Mayer left the latter part of the week for Boston.

Among those from out of town who attended the meeting of the First National Exhibitors Association are T. L. Tally, Los Angeles; Harry Schwalbe, Philadelphia; Aaron J. Jones and Nat Ascher, Chicago; Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; E. B. Johnson, representing Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco; William Sievers, St. Louis; E. Mandelbaum, A. J. Albert Scowcroft, president of the Ogden Film Corporation, who has been in New York for several weeks looking after the interests of his recent production and establishing New York offices, left last week for Ogden, Utah, his home.

After a busy two weeks in New York and a jaunt to Ocean View, Frank Rembusch has returned to the wilds of Indiana.

Omer F. Dowd, general manager of Frieder Films Corporation, of Chicago, is in New York. Among his other duties Mr. Dowd is looking over the productions available for the Illinois territory.

Margaret Mayo to Stage "Good-bye Forever!"

Hereafter to Devote Talents and Time to Screen for the Goldwyn Productions—To Edit, Direct and Even Cut Films

MARGARET MAYO, author of "Polly of the Circus," first Goldwyn production, announces her retirement from the theatre to devote all her time and talents to the screen for Goldwyn, in which she is an active owner.

"Polly of the Circus" has just been released, and the author's announcement comes simultaneously with the first showings in leading theatres over the country.

Margaret Mayo first is an author and playwright; second, she is one of the ablest and most skilled stage managers identified with the theatre, with an uncanny gift for pictorial situation; third, she is herself an actress of established reputation on the American stage.

It will be obvious to all who see her first picture that Miss Mayo's hand is revealed in virtually every foot of the production, even to the cutting and titling. She aided actively in cutting and assembling the picture and personally did all of the titles.

Miss Mayo is the author of many plays and four of them have been tremendous successes, not only in America but in foreign lands as well.

Her greatest plays are "Polly of the Circus," now converted into photodrama; "Baby Mine" and "Twin Beds," each of which is known to audiences in many countries. "Baby Mine" enjoyed the distinction of being presented at command performances before the rulers of England, France and Russia in London, Paris and Petrograd, respectively. It also was translated into Chinese and enjoyed a run of 120 nights in Pekin, being seen at its opening performance by the Emperor of China and members of the court.

It is said no playwright of her rank and standing has ever before bade the theatre farewell and godspeed to engage solely in writing and production for the cinema.

George H. Bellman's Third Visit to Studios

George H. Bellman, editor and manager of the photoplay department of Seattle Times, spent the past ten days in Los Angeles visiting studios to get intimate knowledge of photoplay conditions with reference to production, and to personally meet principals of the photoplay colony.

This is Bellman's third annual trip to the studios. He found his past visits so profitable in the matter of better fitting him to conduct his department, that managers of the paper have made his trips to Los Angeles an annual event.

Seattle Times carries a motion picture section of eight to twelve pages with the Sunday edition, and one page daily, except in the middle of the week when two or three pages are required for advertising. He was accompanied by Mrs. Bellman.

Marry and Hold Down Motion Picture Desk

Whether it was a spirit of romance contracted through viewing so many love films, or whether it was a case of spontaneous combustion, anyhow the fact remains that on last Wednesday, Helen Muckley, acting motion picture editor of the Cleveland Leader, and John DeKoven Hill, whose position she was temporarily filling, stopped any jealousy that might have arisen for the honor of holding down the job, by getting married.

Hill, who has been at the officers' training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, was in town on furlough, and was so unaccustomed to his freedom that he promptly passed it over into Miss Muckley's keeping. Hill has returned to duty, and Mrs. Hill will continue to live her romance through the movies.

Problems and Power of Serials

First of a Series of Articles Discussing Exploitation of the Continued Story—Various Methods Offered by Different Distributors and Your Part In It

WITH the opening of the Autumn, the serial revival is with us strong. Five of the biggest companies are offering continued stories, one corporation venturing for the first time into this field. This is Paramount which has "Who Is Number One"? a story by Anna Katherine Green and starring Kathryn Clifford.

Vitagraph is presenting its second serial, "The Fighting Chance," featuring William Duncan. Mutual offers Helen Holmes in another railroad continued story, "The Lost Express." Universal will continue its record of successful running stories with "The Red Ace" in which Marie Walcamp is the star. Pathe is just launching Mollie King in "The Seven Pearls," following in the wake of Pearl White in "The Fatal Ring," which is being shown at scores of theatres.

Sixty per cent. of the theatres of the country is a conservative estimate of the number that will book one or more of these serials, and a good share of them will show more than one. A discussion of the methods of advertising a serial, therefore, is timely. On the opposite page this week, we are showing some specimens of the newspaper, billboard, poster and banner suggestions issued by Vitagraph in connection with "The Fighting Chance." In later issues we will take up the other productions.

Every now and then we hear questions as to whether the serial is a dead letter, and there follows much philosophic discussion condemning the continued stories to oblivion, but they keep on coming and keep on bringing big money into the box offices. The first run house in the big city gets along without serials, but the smaller cities and the neighborhood theatres report that the demand is as strong as it ever was.

We know of one city where no serial has ever been a financial success in a downtown house. And the reason why this has been the case is easy to see. After a couple of weeks of advertising the managements have allowed the stories to carry themselves of their own weight, and when business fell off for a few days the attraction was cancelled. The result was that at the start of a new continued story the patrons never felt sure that they would ever see the end of the story. The policy of the local managements killed their own profit-taking. Cancelling a serial because of poor business is like firing a doctor in the midst of an illness.

There is one golden rule in the exploitation of a serial. Never book one unless you are prepared to go through with it. And after you have started the showing never let it drop from the interest of the public. Advance advertising is going to do you a great deal of good, but it is not going to do everything. Put as much punch behind each episode at each showing as you can afford, advertise it as strongly as you would a feature, and you are bound to see results if the picture itself has the pulling power.

Nearly all of the companies distributing serials pursue a different policy in their exploitation. For instance, Paramount will advertise its story extensively and a selected list of newspapers will carry the story. Pathe uses the same policy, asking the papers to print a synopsis of the story each week, together with a cartoon or picture. Vitagraph is using a bill-posting campaign to create the advance interest. Mutual uses the newspapers for advance advertising. Universal has not been generally advertising its serials in the newspapers, but strongly advising its exchanges and exhibitors to take advantage of its campaign plans. In this first discussion we will illustrate the points with the case of "The Fighting Trail."

In the first place the exhibitor should understand the perfectly apparent theory of the serial. It is evident that it is not going to appeal in a house that has a purely transient patronage. Conversely, it is equally obvious that the serial is likely to bring back for the remaining chapters a great share of the persons that have seen the opening episode. The two chief problems that the showman faces is to get as many people as possible to see the first chapter of the story and second, to draw in as many more who have missed the first one or two or three incidents. The chances are that if you can bring the same patron to your house for ten or twelve or sixteen times, you have won a permanent ticket buyer for your theatre.

Vitagraph announces that it has carried out an enormous bill-posting campaign for "The Fighting Trail." Twelve thousand of the twenty-four sheets illustrated at the top of the opposite page were put up in the cities with more than 10,000 population. This was followed a month later by a second twenty-four sheet. Besides this Vitagraph has offered to give the paper to exhibitors in cities of less than 10,000 provided they will post the lithographs. This has been a novel pre-serial campaign and it remains to be seen what will be the results of this enormous outdoor publicity.

But we will assume that this advertising has made every one familiar with the name of the story. The first thing that you have to do is connect the picture with your theatre and to make the public know that you are going to present it. If you have one of the larger theatres, and especially if you are the only theatre in the town that is going to show the serial, you should carry your advertising to the daily papers. Call attention to the posters through the city and tell the people that the picture is coming to your house. If you have a neighborhood house and there are other neighborhood houses that are going to show the picture, here is a splendid chance for co-operative advertising. Go to the exchange manager and learn what other houses have booked the film and then get together with them and use the newspapers in conjunction. You need to use but one set of advertising on the picture and then carry beneath it the names of the theatres and the dates when the picture will be shown.

That is the lowest cost advertising that you can get. However, we would strongly advise you to advertise each episode of the serial separately on the day that it is to be shown. Vitagraph has prepared a series of specimen ads which are shown in the press book which has already been issued. Our only criticism of these displays is that the spirit of the fight has been featured rather strongly and that too much an appeal has been made to brute force.

Here is a live suggestion in connection with the Vitagraph serial. Feature it as a story that is typically American, that represents the same spirit that dominates our boys in France, the enthusiasm of the struggle for right. Don't try to make it appear that it is a war picture, though that element enters strongly with "Hendrik von Bleck, a foreign spy."

Read over the story of each episode and build your advertising directly on that episode. Better still if you can see the episode itself in time to prepare the display matter. But the Press Book will be of great service to you here and you will find it easy to pick out some striking action and feature that. Convince every person that he is seeing some definite portrayal in each episode and you won't find the public holding back because they missed the first or second episode.

Run your serial advertising in addition to your regular advertising. If a serial is worth running for its pulling power it is worth featuring at least for several weeks. For a couple of weeks before you show the first episode we would suggest that you use liberal space under your regular advertising telling that this picture is coming to your house and giving the date of the opening. Then follow this along on the date of the showing of each episode, emphasizing your display on something that is told in that particular episode. If you publish a program, carry these announcements as far in advance of the opening as possible, and then each week call especial attention to the current chapter.

Vitagraph suggests that your newspaper will probably be willing to publish the synopsis of each episode. Unless the city be a

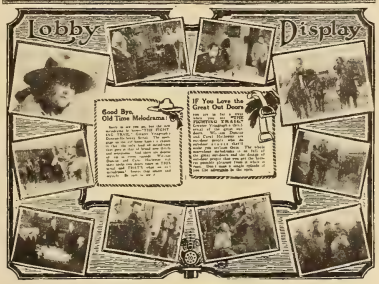
WILLIAM DUNCAN & CAROL HOLLOWAY IN "THE FIGHTING TRAIL"
The Most Marvelous Melodramatic Photoplay Serial ever produced



At the top is the first of a series of two 24-sheet stands being used by Vitagraph in every city of the country, over 10,000, to advertise "The Fighting Trail." On either side are two specimens of the newspaper advertising suggested. Electros of these are furnished free to the exhibitors. At the top in the center are some specimens of the paper, below a banner for use on serial days and then one of the suggested lobby displays. Shown inside this are two specimens of the small "teaser" ads.

WOULD YOU STAKE LIFE ITSELF IF—

Love demanded you chance it? After all what is Life if Duty and a Good Woman calls? "THE FIGHTING TRAIL" shows William Duncan's call—it shows his answer—it shows the gigantic struggles that ensued. It shows more amazing escapes from sure death, more astounding sensations, more stunts and thrills than any serial photoplay that has ever been filmed, and Greater Vitagraph, who produced it (with William Duncan and Carol Holloway as the stars) say it can never be duplicated again. Using Baseball and Football To Profit

How Reporting Games May Be Made Profitable—Valuable Suggestion for Houses in College Towns to Increase Business

SOON the world's series will be with us and the college football season is approaching. Even the strike-outs and the punts in the world war are not keeping the interest away from these two sports, and this is the time of the year for theatre managers to plan to convert this fact into an asset for his theatre.

But the idea has rarely been carried into the reporting of football games. Theatres located in college towns, and especially where the towns are small, are constantly appealing for ideas that will bring the patronage of college students. College men are very clannish. Once they "adopt" a particular theatre, they are apt to keep up their patronage for a very long time, and the manager who succeeds in drawing them to his house will score heavily on his competitors.

L. H. Grandjean, now publicity director of the Boehringer Amusement Company, New Orleans, and formerly with the Theatre Louisiana, Baton Rouge, solved this problem with a great deal of success. Baton Rouge is in the small city class and the Louisiana State University is located there. The Louisiana was built in the face of strong opposition—an established theatre seeming to have the business of the community well cornered. But here was the solution:

"I contend," writes Mr. Grandjean, "that the moving picture theatre, especially in the small town, may go beyond the mere showing of pictures to entertain the public and add to the profits. After our first few weeks the going got hard. Curiosity had been satiated and our competitor's prestige was to be overcome. In seeking to make the public get interested, I bore in mind the coming world's series—it was just at this same time of the year—and rigged up an electric diamond of the sort with which you are no doubt familiar. We netted $110 that first season in spite of the fact that there were only four games and that on the first day very few people dared separate themselves from a quarter for something they had never before experienced. I advertised big, of course.

"The cost of the board was approximately $30, but we made it ourselves and wired it. But most theatres have operators who are handy that way, and what we did they could do. We had a direct line into the theatre and service cost us $25 a day. We charged, as I inferred, 25 cents admission. Subsequent years were more profitable, as the entertainment had made a hit and was being eagerly anticipated.

"On the heels of the world's series, the football season opened. Spurred by our success with the baseball board, we rigged an electric gridiron. We were in a college town and all theatres in college towns should take this hint. The team played half its schedule at home and the other half away. The town people are always as much interested in the team as is the student body, and the football matinees were played to capacity houses. As in the baseball, our wire led into the theatre, and each individual play was called to the audience as well as indicated on the board. Full detail obtained in either case. The game was sent from the side lines, the telegraph company having its operator moving with the linesmen, his instrument on a tray suspended from the shoulders, such as you have seen shoestring and collar button peddlers use. And we sent a good scrub team player with the team to describe the plays to the operator.

"These stunts awaken the people. We were on every tongue as up to the minute after the baseball stunt was over, and the football stunt electrified them. I might add that the local Coca Cola bottlers took the hint from me and served Coca Cola free to those who attended the first two games of each series, and the manager thought so well of the advertising he got that he was ready to repeat the next year without prompting."

General Lists Offerings

A special edition of the General Film Herald contains forecasts of the forthcoming four-reel O. Henry stories, the new George Ade "Fables in Slang" and the Falcon four-reel dramas, together with the newest Selig releases and the remaining chapters of the "Stingaree" series. It is valuable for the exhibitors showing these pictures to file.

PARAMOUNT PREACHES PUBLICITY IN SENTENCES

Paramount, in its press books, is driving home the value of advertising in a series of short sentences published at the foot of each page. Here are a few of them that the exhibitors may well take to heart:

There are twenty-five mountains higher than Pike's Peak in Colorado. Does it pay to advertise?

Be not above advertising or advertising may rise above you.

Good advertising is the health of business; silence its poison.

Success uses many tools, but advertising is the handle that fits them all.

He that reckons without publicity must reckon again.

Advertising is the spice of business that gives it all its flavor.

The advertising mill may grind slow, but it grinds exceedingly sure.

Publicity is your logical promoter. Use much of it.

Paramount Offers Series of Announcement Slides

Paramount-Artcraft is sending to each one of its exhibitors, as rapidly as contracts are signed, a series of thirty-one slides that are bound to be of the greatest value to exhibitors. Their showing will make an impression on the audiences and it would be advisable not merely to show these for one day, but to show them again a week later, so as to get the fullest benefit.

The introductory slide bears reading matter as follows:

The Management of This Theatre
Announces the Early Presentation of all New Paramount and Artcraft Productions
Starring:

And then follows the pictures of the stars, a list that will certainly attract attention. And after these slides are used for this purpose they should be carefully filed so that they can be employed in announcing specific productions in which the players are to appear.

This Paramount-Artcraft service is free to contract exhibitors.

Press Sheet Features Personality Asset

In its press sheet on "Transgression" which stars Earle Williams and Corinne Griffith, one of the newer stars, the personality asset of Miss Griffith is given strong attention by Greater Vitagraph. Various stories about her early life in Texas and in New Orleans are featured and an excellent opportunity is afforded the exhibitors of those sections to get the benefit of the local angle.

P. E. Coe, of the Louisiana theatre, Baton Rouge, calls especial attention to Miss Griffith in his current programmes. He also features the fact that Mary Miles Minter, another Louisiana girl, is to be seen at his theatre during the week. Managers who feature players of particular local appeal are bound to see the results in their box office.

The Curse of Manana

MANANA is a great word.

Very likely you know that it is Spanish for "tomorrow."

It's a great word typical of those who want to put off everything to some future day.

And you are familiar with old slogan "Do it now."

Last Sunday we spent the day going over the files of the NEWS of three and four years ago. We were struck by the fact that so many of the editorials, so many of the suggestions were just as applicable to a considerable share of the exhibitors today as they were then. Why?

Because the exhibitor either passed the articles over without his attention or simply said to himself: "That's a good idea, and I'll try that—tomorrow."

And in the same way we were mindful of the theaters which were recorded three or four years ago as having modest beginnings which are now big, successful houses—many of them lengthened into strings of theaters. Those men did not turn a deaf ear to the call of the day and let it echo into the tomorrows.

There isn't the slightest doubt in our minds that the great need in the motion picture industry today is SERVICE—service that the manufacturer and the exchange man must give the exhibitor and the service that the showman must give his patrons.

SERVICE is not a theory. It is the most concrete thing in the world. But the great trouble has been that various branches of the service have treated it as a theory. Everybody agrees that it would be an excellent thing to have SERVICE, that it is badly needed, but in most cases the matter is allowed to slip by as something beautiful and ideal.

This bureau invites you to make the aids that we offer you as concrete as possible. Bring to our attention any little thing that comes up in your business and this department will give it as much attention as if it were the biggest problem that confronts the film industry—for, as a matter of fact, SERVICE is today the biggest problem of the exhibitor. The NEWS knows this, the manufacturers and the exchange men realize this. The livest exhibitors know it and are seeking service, while the remainder know in a hazy sort of a way that there is something that they are not putting into their business.

It is to be regretted that there is a strong element of suspicion among certain exhibitors. When they are offered any suggestion or any aid they think that there is something behind it and they are afraid to declare themselves.

How often does the exhibitor say, when some manufacturer tells him of the advertising aids, etc., that come with the film, "Yes, that's all very fine, but I'm the one that has to pay for them."

You don't have to pay for any service here. There is nothing behind the NEWS' efforts here except to strengthen the industry and gain its relative growth as the business grows on business principles.

You have never been offered before a department that will deal with your problems solely from the point of view of the exhibitors' good.

Forget the suspicion that some one is trying to "hand you something" and come in with those who want to improve their theaters because it will make more money for them.

Exchanges Take Notice

AND now a word for the exchange men.

This bureau has invited the co-operation of the exchanges because they come closer in touch with the individual exhibitor than any one else in the industry. It is true that the spirit in which they meet is largely one of hostility, but the wise exchange manager will realize that when he builds up business for one of his clients he is building up business for himself.

Until a few months ago the theory of exchange men was merely to sell an exhibitor film service and then forget him. Many of the progressive companies are changing this plan and holding the exchanges responsible for keeping their clients. The film industry has got to grow on these lines. The cost of selling has been too great; the cost of holding is much less and it works for satisfied customers and permanent results.

Do you know that the larger newspapers of the country spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for features that they do not expect to bring them a bit of NEW circulation, but that they spend this money cheerfully to HOLD what they have?

Let us help you hold business by keeping the exhibitors prosperous. Let us know cases where we can help exhibitors and we will take prompt action. Call the attention of exhibitors to this department and tell them that here they can find a bureau that will aid them in solving their problems. Every cent of prosperity made for them is reflected in your business.

And, Mr. Successful Exhibitor: You know that when the film business is put on as nearly a perfect business basis as possible you will get better pictures, probably cheaper pictures and certainly more prompt attention to your needs.

Make It a Self Help Club!

LET us have your good ideas and let us print them here for the benefit of the man in a town a hundred miles away who is met with similar conditions. You are not playing into the hands of your competitor by letting your stunts and your ideas be known, for if he is a competitor who needs to be feared he is going to know what you are doing.

You've been reading a lot in the war dispatches recently about camouflage. You know that it's used by armies to hide their activities from the enemy.

Let's get the camouflage out of the motion picture business.

It is a good time to kill off Old Dame Rumor and smother Mother Suspicion and come into the open.

If you have a kick, let your heels go up in the air.

If you've got a good idea let the others know about it.

If you've got troubles, bring them to us. Don't sit around in the corner and mourn poor business. Ship us your misfortunes. We'll try to strangle them in public print or in private correspondence, just as you like.

But do it today.

WE STARTED THIS TALK WITH MANANA. Strike the word out of your dictionary. Now.

CALL ON THIS BUREAU TODAY.

This plan might be amplified, and the tickets made good for any day during the entire week, and the response would probably be greater, for it is somewhat hard to pin the patron down to a specific day when other engagements may prevent attendance. It is well to remember that this stunt is put on with a specific purpose, and that those who do not respond are not tried again. So it is not well to class the recipients of the cards as unresponsive when they are not given sufficient opportunity to attend.

FERRY FIELD THEATRE, Detroit, carries out the calendar idea excellently in its weekly program. It will be noted that the dates are brought out promptly, and the suggestion should be offered that patrons clip this and use it as a calendar for the week, and at the same time the current attraction at the theatre. The calendar occupies a space in the center of the program ten inches deep, and therefore the reproduction shows only the comparative typing.

This suggestion is valuable only to the theatres changing their bills daily.

MANAGER McCUEN was not content with the picturesque elements of "The Crisis" during its presentation at the Garrick theatre, Philadelphia, but decorated the stage, and added a prelude played by live actors. It was a coincidence that the costumes for this film were secured in Philadelphia, and so it was possible to secure the identical clothing worn in the film for the real actors. For instance, Kathryn Martin, the Virginia Carvel of the stage spectacle, wore the costume of Bessie Eyton, who had the role in the picture.

This is an attractive mingling of voice, and the screen that will be found attractive now and then in the case of big productions which open at fixed hours. But don't try it in a small theatre where you haven't the facilities. Poor work will only mar a good picture.

BE different.

That's one slogan of good advertising.

Here are the advertisements of rival theatres in a city of 80,000 as they appear in one issue of the morning newspaper. Note that there is nothing to differentiate between the two theatres and a slightly different border. Of course, one house couldn't know the style of an advertisement that his competitor would show that day, but he knows the general plan.

Don't make your reader have to look for the name of the theatre to find out which is your advertisement. Make it distinctive.

This is one of the things that we want to help you do. Let us see copies of your advertising and that of your competitors, and we may be able to give you some ideas.

"THE Movie Fan," a regular newspaper size four-page house organ, which is issued by the Grand Junction, Col., Majestic theater, in its current issue hits "A Rough House," the Fatty Arbuckle comedy, a big publicity smash with a ninety-six point display head and a story calling on the mayor and the chief of police and the fire chief to be on hand on the day of the showing to prevent the injury of the crowds that will seek to get in and to guard against accident in case the laughter of the audience should damage the building. It would have been foolish to have tried to work this story into a daily newspaper, but in a house organ everyone who read this story understood that it was a joke and laughed about it, and talked to their friends about it. Your house organ is intended to make people talk about your pictures, and you can do a lot there that you cannot do through other media.

VALUABLE matter for the exhibitor and for the newspapers is provided in Greater Vitagraphics, a press sheet which is issued each week covering the current productions. It contains a series of press notices, which may be clipped by managers. For press work these are remarkably free from adjectives and exaggeration, and they can be used without editing.

One of the most attractive parts of the sheet is a department, "Close-ups of Vitagraphers," which include short stories about the players and coming productions. These will be found useful as fillers for your program. If your newspapers are not using this matter call attention to it. It appears to us just the sort of stuff that the picture fans want.

MAJESTIC THEATER, Columbus, O., issues one of the most attractive booklets that has ever come to this department announcing its new policy. It is a twenty-four page pamphlet printed on heavy plate paper and illustrated with half page cuts, which are not the stock affairs furnished by film companies, but engraving especially made for the booklet. The announcement largely concerns the signing of a contract for Paramount and Artcraft productions, but the three directors of music are features and an impress made of the future policy of the house.

One of these announcements is that there will be an increase in price and another that each production will be shown for an entire week.

The Majestic had some impressive announcements to make. It made them in an impressive manner. Any one who reads the handsome booklet will be convinced that the theatre is working for the best interests of the public.

MUTUAL'S press sheet offers a good suggestion for exhibitors' programs in "Who's Who"? which is printed in each press sheet. Here is a reproduction of that with "Charity Castle":

You can follow this plan on every picture by simply referring to the cast, and then taking up your copy of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Studio Directory. You will soon discover that a great portion of your audience likes to know as much as possible about the players and this sort of information will make a hit. Try it on a few pictures, and then stop and see if you don't have demands for the material. It takes mighty little time to prepare.

J. BARRETT McCORMICK, director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, took one of the decided plunges that mark live wire exhibitors when he was showing "Filling His Own Shoes," featuring Bryant Washburn. He engaged the Boston Symphony Orchestra, on tour, to spend the week at his house and paid the orchestra as much as it would have made had it played at an independent admission. Result was that he broke the record. Result No. 2 was that he attracted new attention to the Circle, for the public began saying: "Why, the Circle is giving us the best in moving pictures and then a special performance of a great orchestra in addition." It caused word of mouth advertising that is invaluable. His competitors asked: "How could he do it?" But we would be willing to say that the Circle's future business will answer that question.

EDWARD G. BACKIUS, of the Valentine Playhouse, Canton, Ohio, has devised a way for testing this newspaper advertising and at the same time drawing new patrons to his theatre. Occasionally he advertises a special morning performance for children, admission to which is free when the children bring a copy of his advertisement. On other occasions he attaches to his newspaper display a special coupon admitting women free at certain hours.

This not only tests the value of theatre advertising so far as your regular patrons are concerned but it causes the general public to watch for the announcements, and the free coupons. One great circulation manager once said: "Get a woman or a child to read my paper for a week and I will have a subscriber for life."

And it is the same with a picture house.

small one or you are an unusually heavy advertiser we do not agree with these. White paper cost is constantly increasing and newspapers are cutting down as much as possible on their consumption of news print. If you can induce your newspaper to carry this story, you have achieved a considerable result, especially if you can get it printed about the time that you are showing the picture. If you cannot do this, you can direct attention to the picture, as we have said, by featuring the action in the particular episode. That is bound to draw in some new patrons and you will be able to keep a considerable percentage of them.

We have before us copies of the trade press announcing "The Adventures of Kathlyn" as the first serial that was ever shown along with the publication of the stories in newspapers. As a matter of fact the newspapers actually paid for the privilege of printing the story in return for the advertising that they got on the screens of the theatre showing the picture. But the serial was a novelty then and it was the first great turn of the press toward the motion picture. But then came others and the producers were glad to supply the stories in mat form free to the newspapers. In another year the newspapers were requiring the distributors to do a certain amount of display advertising, and they have not increased this charge to a point where it comes very near covering the space used in the display and reading matter.

If you are in a smaller city go to your newspaper and call attention to the interest that there will be in this serial and the fact that it is just as good fiction as any that the paper is printing. Then agree to do a certain amount of advertising with the paper. If you can make the proposition attractive you will probably succeed. But don't work on the theory that the newspaper is going to publish this story for you without any co-operation on your part. As we have told you before, do not approach your newspaper with the attitude that the paper ought to do a certain thing. Remember that you are in the motion picture business for the same reason that your fellow townsman is publishing a newspaper—for the next revenue.

This applies to the serials of Vitagraph, Universal and Mutual that are soon to be released. These do not provide for publication of the serial. We will discuss the problem in the instances of Paramount and Pathe at a later date.

There is one point to be borne in mind here. Some theatre managers claim that it weakens the pulling power of the story to have it published in advance of the showing, and at least one of the producers declares that he has had greater success with serials that have not been fictionized. It is a point that arouses the same discussion as printing synopses of feature films before they are shown and a question that each exhibitor will have to settle from his own experience.

But with the use of the newspaper advertising and the billboards you have only touched on the advance and the continued exploitation of serials. Here is the greatest possible field for advance slides, for personal letters to your regular patrons, for circularizing your audience for a week or two in advance, for souvenirs, for cashing on on the popularity of the stars—in short, for the ingenuity of each manager.

Next week we will take up some of the other methods of arousing advance interest in the serial.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Don't be a slacker.

Real "Service" Triangle Branch in Omaha

A TRIANGLE Exchange has been established on Harney street, "Film Row," in Omaha, Neb., with George F. Bromley, formerly of Chicago, and lately of Redfield, S. D., as manager. J. W. Kirk, widely known in film circles about Omaha, is office manager. George M. Mann, general representative of Triangle, was in Omaha helping establish the office.

"This is a new idea in film exchanges, to have an office manager—for instance, a man of Mr. Kirk's ability—to do nothing but look after the service toward the exhibitor," said Mr. Mann. "Mr. Kirk will devote his time to seeing that the pictures are delivered when promised, that they are delivered in A1 condition and that every exhibitor is satisfied service rendered. Mr. Kirk will not even assist in the sales department, devoting his entire time to the service of the exhibitor."

The Standard Film Company, Omaha, Neb., Exchange is now handling the Christie Comedies in that territory. The plan of Manager C. W. Taylor of the Omaha Exchange is to add a one-reel comedy to each of the Standard Exchange's future releases.

Mayer H. Monsky, booker and assistant manager at the World Film Exchange in Omaha, Neb., has resigned to become assistant manager under Jack Solomon of the General Exchange.

If You Sell Candy, Name It for Theatre

One exhibitor, who doesn't want his name used, asks how he may get some advertising out of the candy stand that he is compelled to maintain in his lobby. He uses the word "compelled" because such is the custom of his city and he maintains the stand more for that reason than from the profit that comes.

The answer to that question is simple. Have the maker of the candy design you a special box with the name of your theatre or the name of the pictures that you are constantly using. Many of these boxes are carried away from the theatre and they form an advertisement that is taken into the homes. In many of the theatres there are little slot machines on the back of the seats from which the deposit of a nickel or a dime brings a box of candy. Have your candy stamped with the name of the theatre.

Goldwyn Pictures have adopted a new plan for advertising aid for exhibitors which ought to prove of the greatest convenience. Instead of sending out mats or printed reproductions of the advertising, an actual photograph of the series of advertisement suggestions for each picture is sent to the exhibitor. The above contains the suggestions on "Polly of the Circus." One of the notable features of these advertising suggestions which will appeal to the exhibitor is that they do not try to feature the brand name ahead of everything else, but tell the managers to carry the name of the theatre prominently at the top of the advertising.

Newspaper Aids Theatre in Inviting Soldiers

Manager Jules H. Michael of the Academy and Regent theatres, Buffalo, has combined with the Buffalo Evening News on a stunt that is giving his houses much publicity on the front page of the News. Mr. Michael has invited every member of the Seventy-fourth Regiment, the Third Artillery, Troop I and the Naval Militia to attend any performances at either of the theatres when in uniform.

This same plan has been followed in a number of other cities, and the manager is fortunate where he can tie up this offer with one of the leading newspapers and have the paper invite the soldiers attend the theatre as the guests of the paper and the management.

Stock Ticker Announces British War Films

Tom North, special representative of Pathe, attracted unusual attention to the new British Official War Pictures, "The Retreat of the Germans," an its initial showing in Chicago.

Every stock ticker in the city carried a message addressed to the Citizens' Unit, First Regiment, Illinois Engineers, announcing that this showing was being given for their benefit. The Citizens' Unit has recruited an entire regiment and will continue to care for the men after they are in service, and this ticker message showed the members how they could help in stirring up patriotism through these pictures of the British on the battle line.

Triangle Restores Music Cue Sheet Service

Triangle announces that the music cue sheet which accompanies each picture has been restored. Recently it was eliminated from the work of the Triangle Service Bureau together with a number of other material that did not seem to be in demand. However, calls have come from exhibitors for the restoration and the request has been granted.

It is the policy of Triangle now to give the exhibitors just the sort of service that they want and to base its plans on the requests that come from the theatres.

Rubber Stamp Emphasizes National Advertising

E. V. Richards, general manager of the Sanenger Amusement Company, which controls theatres in ten or twelve cities through Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Arkansas, has evolved a simple plan for utilizing the national advertising that Paramount is doing in the Saturday Evening Post.

He learned the names of the distributors of the Post in the various cities and then ordered rubber stamps announcing that Paramount pictures were to be shown at his theatre in the town concerned. The copies of the Post then went out to the readers with this localized advertising.

This illustration reproduces one of the advertisements from the Post and shows it stamped with the announcement that these pictures will be seen at the Strand theatre, New Orleans.

STAY OFF THIS!

¶ Practically every press sheet that has come to the Motion Picture News has told of what this or that star is preparing to do for his dear country. If you are a wise publicity man, don't hand this to your newspaper and expect it to print it. It will be time enough to get this sort of publicity when the picture star really does something. The public does not want cheap heroics and fakes about the war, and you are not going to help your theatre by printing them.

Song Used in Presenting "The Slacker"

Jules Rachman, owner of the Grand, a suburban house in Omaha, is invading the downtown field this week in the presentation of "The Slacker" at the Boyd, a big legitimate house. Later he will show the same picture at the Auditorium in Topeka, Neb.

Mr. Rachman has "doctored" the opening of the patriotic picture. The opening scene is acted on the stage, presenting a soldier boy as he parts from his mother at their home and includes a series of songs. Then on the screen appears a flag and "The Slacker," with the flag fading away and the title appearing. As the various patriotic music is played during the picture, the words of the songs are thrown on the screen and the audiences invited to sing, and in every known case they have acquiesced with avidity.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST 43

Paramount Pictures
AUGUST 5
Red Letter Day In Motion Picture History
AUGUST 5, 1917, is a big and memorable day for playgoing America. On that day Paramount begins its new policy of Paramount stars and Paramount plays for all the people all the time. It will no longer be necessary for you to go out of your way to find Paramount Pictures, nor will you be denied the particular star in the particular play that pleases you most. Paramount Entertainment is yours for the asking.
This new policy is the result of your demands. You have insisted, more and more, upon Paramount players and Paramount productions. And, urged by you, theatre managers asked us for the right to secure them in open booking—just as they wanted them.
Your will is law with the theatres—and with us. For Paramount plays we cheerfully assume the responsibility of Public Service. And it is fine proof of the upward trend of taste in motion picture enjoyment that you will not be satisfied short of Paramount quality.
Think what this means! You need no longer go to your favorite stars. Instead, they come to you.
At the theatre 'round the corner you can see Mme. Petrova, Sessue Hayakawa, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Vivian Martin, Billie Burke, Julian Eltinge, Margaret Illington, Marie Doro, Fannie Ward, Ann Pennington, George Beban, Wallace Reid, Pauline Frederick, Marguerite Clark.
You can enjoy the Paramount-Arbuckle two-reel comedies, Victor Moore and Black Diamond single-reel comedies, the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, weekly "Magazine on the Screen" and Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.
And don't forget that, beginning August 5, you can see the stars you select as your manager prefers to book them. Use the Box Office Request below. Vote for Paramount quality pictures in your favorite playhouse. We are telling your manager about this new plan. Why not add your influence to ours. It's well worth your while—and it's well worth it.

"A Stormy Knight," with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon—Mystery Drama

(Bluebird Five Reel Production)

A Bluebird production entitled "A Stormy Knight" is the coming attraction at the ——— theatre. Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon are co-starred. These two Bluebird stars who have been seen to advantage in some of the best productions released by this company, are seen in a detective story which will keep you "guessing" from the flash of the first scene to the last. In his cabin in the woods, John Winton is surprised one night by the appearance of a young girl seeking shelter from a storm. John did not know it, but his father and the girl's father who had been chums from boyhood, had set upon a plan to bring about a marriage between their son and daughter. The girl was appraised of the fact but the son was kept in ignorance, and because he did not know that it was all a scheme, he was led into a series of adventures which when told on the screen furnish rare entertainment. In this production you will see reproduced on the screen, scenes of electric storm that will startle you because of their realistic appearance. There is a certain quality of suspense kept throughout the run of this picture that holds and holds tight. The manner in which young Winton is led into the net set by his father for the purpose of having his son settle down and make something of himself, is cleverly done. The mystery element predominates. There are nice bits of comedy injected and Mr. Farnum and Miss Vernon are given every chance to furnish the brand of entertainment of which, they alone, are capable.

Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon in "A Stormy Knight" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Don't miss this. It's something good.

William Desmond Supported by Triangle's Best Artists in "Flying Colors"—Detective

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

William Desmond is seen in his latest picture from the Triangle Studios, "Flying Colors." It's a "corker." A detective story is always interesting whether it be told between the covers of book or on the screen. This one is written by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith, two of Triangle's best scenarioists, who have written some of the most successful dramas produced by this company. Supporting Mr. Desmond in this production are Golda Madien, Jack Livingston, Laura Sears, J. Barney Sherry, George W. Chase, John Lockney, Bert Offerd, Mary McIvor and Kay Jackson, some of the best artists of Triangle stock. Mr. Desmond has the role of Brent Brewster, a Yale athlete, who turns detective after proving a failure in the different business enterprises which he had attempted. Brent's father is wealthy. One of the best artists to which he is assigned calls for the solution of a robbery in the home of a wealthy family. At a house party, Mrs. Lansing is robbed of jewels valued at a considerable sum. Brent in working on the mystery meets Mrs. Lansing's sister, a beautiful young woman whose beauty makes Brent forget that the most important business at hand is the solution of the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Mrs. Lansing's jewels. But when she informs him that she could manage to live nicely on an income of $40,000 a year, Brent figured that he had better tend to business. He forgets his newly met acquaintance, and sets out to solve the mystery or die in the attempt. He does, and is surprised to learn that he has fallen heir to a legacy that will permit him to supply the woman he loves with the $40,000 a year.

William Desmond in a stirring mystery drama, "Flying Colors," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Bessie Love in One of Her Characterizations of a Demure Little Girl in "Polly Ann"

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

One of the most engaging little personalities on the screen is to be seen at the ——— theatre in a Triangle production titled, "Polly Ann." She is Bessie Love. This is the unanimous opinion of those who have seen Miss Love in other Triangle productions. In her late picture she presents the part of Polly Ann, who as an orphan lives on a small farm. Jud Simpkins engages her to work in his tavern as a maid of all work. A theatrical company comes to town and Polly is so impressed by the "one-nighters" that she decides to become an actress. One of the actors is attracted to Polly, but his attentions are not of the kind to be encouraged. A young professor comes to town to take charge of the village school. He persuades her that her admirer's attentions are not well meant. She and the young professor become close friends, and after her work is finished at the tavern, she is seen constantly in the company of her new friend. On one occasion she takes to him a bottle of "bitters" which she has obtained at the tavern. The young professor, a few days before he had met Polly, had been turned out by his wealthy uncle for indulging too freely, and when he is confronted by the bottle of "bitters" which Polly had brought him, he feels again the old craving for drink. Polly discovers later that this same uncle is a distant relative of her family. She brings about a better understanding between the professor whom she had learned to love and his uncle and she is assured a better place in life than maid-of-all work in the little country tavern.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Bessie Love in "Polly Ann," a Triangle production.

Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Picture of Laughter and Tears—Circus Life

(Goldwyn Eight Reel Production)

"Polly of the Circus," adapted from the popular work by Margaret Mayo, has been produced by the Goldwyn Pictures, and has for its star Mae Marsh, who won world-wide fame for her work in "The Birth of a Nation." "Polly of the Circus" has been converted into a tremendous photo spectacle and presents the acme of artistry on the screen. Miss Marsh is seen for the first time in nearly a year, and her work in this production equals her long-to-be-remembered success in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," both Griffith productions. It presents a picture that will make you laugh and cry. You will get thrills such as you have never experienced. Every action has been made realistic. Life under the circus tent, a mammoth circus parade, daredevil stunts of circus performers, an exciting horse race, and the picturesque scenes accompanying the departure of the circus at night, when all is commotion—all these have been woven together, and the result is a spectacle on the screen that has seldom been equaled and never excelled. Miss Marsh is at her best. She is supported by a cast of competent screen artists. The production was made under the direction of Charles Horan and presents one of the wonders of the screen. Polly is a circus girl, whose life has been spent among circus people and under the "Big Tops." She has never experienced the real joys of childhood. When a young girl she is injured and left at the home of a young minister, to recover. She develops into a beautiful young woman. But she is made the target for the wagging tongues of the villagers and leaves the home of her benefactor. The next year the circus returns, and with it comes Polly. She has not forgotten the minister, nor had he forgotten her.

"Polly of the Circus," with Mae Marsh in the title role, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. A spectacle of the screen.

Bryant Washburn Supported by Virginia Valli in "The Fibbers"—Comedy-Drama

(K.E.S.E. Five Reel Production)

"The Fibbers" is Bryant Washburn's latest. The star of the Skinner stories, which have been seen recently on the screen, has another of his very human roles in his latest picture from the Essanay Studios. Mr. Washburn has the part of Peter Cort, who is a struggling young architect, whose income does not represent more than three figures. But kindness to a fellow man seldom fails to reap a reward for the one from whom the kindness comes. Peter Cort is one of those men who finds happiness in helping others, even though he has to sacrifice to give the assistance. A hobo is injured on the railroad tracks near Peter's home, and he is received into the Cort home for treatment. Peter's wife, Barbara nurses him back to health. Barbara when she was at school had written a play, and in order that the doctor bills might be paid she offers her play for sale. The hobo suggests that she submit it to Phillip Allen, a noted theatrical producer. She does so and her script is accepted. Peter also gets a commission from a Mrs. Stoddard, a wealthy society woman. In attempting to conceal good fortunes from each other, misunderstandings arise between Barbara and Peter. She sees him in the company of Mrs. Stoddard and he sees her with Allen. The breaking point is almost reached when Barbara's play is presented, and it is a big success. It develops that Allen is an old friend of the hobo, and that Mrs. Stoddard is the mother of the hobo. A better understanding between husband and wife results, and Peter and Barbara settle down to enjoy prosperity.

Bryant Washburn, supported by Virginia Valli in "The Fibbers," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

George Beban in "Lost in Transit"—Mr. Beban Gives Another Italian Characterization

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

"Lost in Transit" is the late picture in which George Beban, the popular impersonator of character parts, is seen. In the supporting cast are, Helen Eddy, Pietro Sosso, Vera Lewis, Henry Barrows, Frank Bennett and Bob White. Mr. Beban again impersonates the role of an Italian —this time a junkman. Niccolo Darini is his name. Mr. Kendall, a man of wealth, whose only child had been sent to a home after the death of its mother at birth, decides after three years, that he needs the company of the little boy to brighten his home. He sends for his son, and on the way to his father's home, the boy mysteriously disappears from the carriage in which he is being taken to the home of the father whom he has never seen to remember. Niccolo, a Italian junkman, finds a boy about three years of age, hidden away among the rags in his wagon. A note is found which reads that "whoever finds this child may have him." Niccolo is delighted with his charge and is proud to know that he can harbor the little one. The neighbors advise him to take the child to the nearest police station, but he refuses because he has grown fond of the little stranger who had come so mysteriously into his life. A friend of Niccolo, seeing an advertisement in the papers, asking for the return of a lost child, answering the description of the one Niccolo had found, goes to the address and says that he knows where the boy is. He goes to the home of Niccolo, takes the child and returns it to the one who had advertised. Another child is also brought in answer to the advertisement. They resort to the court and the judge lets the little boys decide which father they would prefer. Niccolo is chosen and he receives the check for $5,000.

George Beban, in another of his famous Italian characterizations, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Lost in Transit."

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

"For France," a stupendous out-door military spectacle, with Edward Earle and Betty Howe in the leading roles will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a Greater Vitagraph production, and is one of the best stories that has been told on the screen. A love romance is told of a West Pointer who is serving in the Aviation Corps of the French Army. He rescues his sweetheart from her German captors, and the two have many thrilling experiences. Edward Earle has the part of Gerald Ackland, the young American aviator, and Betty Howe presents the role of the beautiful French girl whom he saves from the Germans. Mary Anderson in "Sunlight's Last Raid"—A Stirring Western Drama

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

A gripping drama of the West is enacted in this late production from the Vitagraph Studios. Mary Anderson is the featured player. In the supporting cast are Alfred Whitman, V. Howard, Fred Burns and A. Garcia. Janet Warned is the part presented by Miss Anderson. She is an Eastern society girl traveling through the West, and is kidnapped by outlaws from the train. She is held a prisoner in the hills until rescued by Jack Conway, a rancher and the father. There is a strong resemblance between the young rancher who rescued her and the leader of the outlaw band. Janet gets the two confused, and the rancher is turned over to the posse at the point of a pistol. The confusion, however, is straightened out, and Janet, although believing her friend to be an outlaw, falls in love with him and promises to marry. Her father seeking revenge organizes a vigilance committee to round up the outlaw band and arouses the enmity of the leader. He makes repeated attempts to capture Janet and finally succeeds. The story of her escape and the happy ending of her adventures in the West is told in this most interesting drama of Western life. "Sunlight's Last Raid" is the title of this drama. The scenes of Western life depicted, are realistic in every detail, for they were taken in the mountains and plains of the Western country. There is a stirring climax which calls for the appearance of a troop of Uncle Sam's cavalry.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, "Sunlight's Last Raid," a Western drama, with Mary Anderson in the featured role.

To defray her expenses, she teaches school. She learns that years before her grandfather had come to California in search of gold and struck it rich. He was held up by road agents and suspicion pointed toward one, Henry Stanley, a man of bad character. Miriam has resolved to return to her home in Vermont, having given up hope of ever learning of her grandfather's disappearance, when one day, while returning from school at the little red schoolhouse, she is accosted by a strange man who asks her to accompany him to the place where he said a woman was in grave trouble. She learns that his name is Stanley. She finds, on arriving at the place, that there is a dead man and a dying woman. Tony Moreno Supported by Helen Chadwick in "The Angel Factory"—Astra-Pathe

(Astra-Pathe Five Reel Production)

"The Angel Factory" is an Astra-Pathe production, featuring Antonio Moreno and Helen Chadwick. The angel factory is a moral uplift society in the slums. David Darrow (Antonio Moreno) is devoting his life to enlightening the people of the tenement districts of New York. In the course of his work he meets Florence Lamont, a girl of the tenements. Tony Bodessa admires Florence, and when he finds that Darrow has taken an interest in his girl he makes known his enmity. Florence gradually draws away from Tony and is seen often in the company of Darrow. Darrow's fiancee becomes jealous of Florence and attempts to persuade Darrow to give her up. Thinking that she can disgrace Darrow, his fiancee invites Florence to a reception. Instead of acting awkward and unladylike she acts very much the part of a lady and is admired by the young men present. The next night Darrow stops at the angel factory to see Florence. Tony has followed him there, and when he sees him with Florence, he becomes enraged. Tony draws his revolver and is about to fire through the window when a shot is heard and he, Tony, falls. Darrow rushes out, and as he is bending over the body of Tony a detective approaches and arrests him for the murder. Florence tells the detective that she is the one who did the shooting, but a revolver with Darrows initials engraved on the handle is found near the body of the murdered man, and Darrow is accused on circumstantial evidence. It develops that one of Tony's enemies had shot him, and it is Florence who clears up the mystery. Darrow's fiancee breaks her engagement and he and Florence join forces and continue their work in the tenement district.

Antonio Moreno in his first appearance under the Pathe banner will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Angel Factory" in five parts.

Virginia Pearson, the Beautiful Fox Star, in "When False Tongues Speak"—Mystery Drama

(Fox Five Reel Production)

Virginia Pearson, one of the most popular screen actresses, is seen in "When False Tongues Speak," a William Fox production, under the direction of Carl Harbaugh. You will see on the screen a mystery play that will hold your undivided attention for sixty-odd minutes. Thrills, adventure and mystery are the three elements of the drama which are contained. The story of a woman's forgiveness, when she learns that her husband is deceiving her, is told. There is food for thought in the drama which is enacted on the screen by a cast of competent screen artists from the Fox stock. Assisting Miss Pearson in her work are Carl Harbaugh, Hardee Kirkland, Claire Whitney, Carl Eckstrom and William E. Meehan. The story was written by George Scarborough. Miss Pearson has the role of Mary Page Walton, a refined and public spirited woman. She knew that Fred Walton had his faults, but like many another woman has done, she married him hoping that he would mend his ways. She tried to overlook his faults, but when a friend tells her that her husband is seen frequently with another woman, she rebels. She is advised to resort to the divorce courts, but refuses. To escape the unhappiness of her home life she establishes a settlement house in the tenement district. She meets Eric Mann, a reporter, who is assigned to cover the settlement news, and the two become close friends. Shortly after she had left the house of her husband she returns one night for her belongings and finds her husband entertaining a party of his friends, among them being the girl for whom he had given up his wife. A murder is committed, and the girl is the victim. How the mystery is solved is told in this most interesting mystery drama, with Virginia Pearson in the leading role.

The order came following injunction proceedings brought by the local Fox office. After granting the injunction Judge Alschuler issued a permit for the showing.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

New Triangle Policy—Diversity Production

Something for Everybody to Be Provided by Its Studios So That Its Program May Have Spice of Current Magazine

DIVERSITY of subjects, having an appeal for all classes, ages and professions, is to be a feature of the Triangle policy according to a schedule recently evolved, which provides for kiddie features, Western dramas, stories of business, patriotic plays, mythical fables, and comedies ranging from those of human interest drama in five parts—to the fast and furious burlesques in one and two-reel comedies.

These will be presented in rotation, with the intention of providing exhibitors with a program, which, like the leading national magazines, will have something of interest for everybody.

During the past few months the Triangle Distributing Corporation has issued the following plays in keeping with this policy: "The Sawdust Ring," a play with juvenile characters, calculated to entertain children from seven to seventy; "The Food Gamblers," a drama of the moment, dealing constructively with a national problem; "Master of His Home," a domestic drama, centering in the home; "Borrowed Plumage," a play of poetic beauty of the Georgian period; "Wooden Shoes," a comedy of picturesque Dutch locale; "In Slumberland," a kiddie feature with fairy scenes and settings; "An Even Break," a tale of Broadway and the bright lights of cabaret life; "Golden Rule Kate," a Western drama; and the Keystone and Triangle comedies designed solely to amuse.

Providing a full quota of family entertainment should be one of the responsibilities of the producer and distributor for the program system is the view advanced by the Triangle magazine, the official spokesman for the distributing corporation.

"This is one of the greatest of the advantages of the program system," says the editor. "Of course, if the manufacturers of the pictures are insensible to their obligation to provide pictures of diversified kinds, the whole scheme loses greatly; but if the plan maintains variety as in the proved record of Triangle, it may not be matched."

"Draft 258," Metro's Timely Play, Has Patriotic Pageant

FROM the Battle of Bunker Hill to a lawn fete of the present day in honor of the Red Cross, marches the patriotic pageant of Metro's "Draft 258," the logical successor to "The Slacker." This great forthcoming photodrama starring Mabel Taliaferro is being directed by William Christy Cabanna, author and director of "The Slacker," and has been written by him and June Mathis.

Cavalry troops of the New York National Guard, who left recently for France, took part in the picture, and will be seen both in the Bunker Hill scenes and in the reproduction of the Battle of San Juan Hill. The men, under orders from their own officers, went through some splendid manoeuvres and did some magnificent riding, also making some desperate and dangerous falls.

"Draft 258" answers the much-mooted question as to who really deserves the credit for winning the Battle of San Juan Hill. Mr. Cabanne has spent a great deal of time and careful research on this subject. In "Draft 258" the battle will be lived over again.

Walter Miller, leading man for Miss Taliaferro, leads a cavalry charge. There is a Red Cross bazaar with a spy posing as a newspaper woman—a role given to Camilla Dahlberg. Among the impersonations are Matthew Osborne as Benjamin Franklin, David Turner as John Adams, Louis Dean as Thomas Jefferson and J. C. Kline and Charles Thompson as other signers of the Declaration of Independence. Richard Tucker, a favorite Metro player, appears in the part of John Hancock and is said to acquit himself most creditably.

Making Stars of Press Notices Not Russian Style

N. S. Kaplan, who brought films of fifty productions to this country for the Russian Art Film Corporation, has compared the system by which stars are developed in America with that in Russia. He emphasizes the point that the failure of films made here is due to some extent to the American policy of accepting as stars many who have not justified their position either by experience or ability.

He refers to the stars of the Russian Art repertory—Mozukin, Lesienko, Fetner, Colodna, Nelska, Karabanova and Zovska—as examples of artists who have achieved their position by reason of long experience and development of special talent.

Mme. Petrova in Portuguese Play, "The Exile"

The title of "Exile" is derived from the name of a town or colony—a Portuguese settlement. This is the picture in which Mme. Petrova will appear September 17, under the Paramount banner. It is a Lasky production, directed by Maurice Tourneur, and is said to be a really "red-blooded" picture, with opportunity for the star as well as the cast, and settings that are far beyond the ordinary.

The story is by Dolf Wyllarde, with a scenario prepared by Charles E. Whittaker. Mahlon Hamilton, Wyndham Standing, Warren Cook, Charles Martin and Violet Reed, and others almost as well known, are in the cast.

J. Stuart Blackton and Sir Gilbert Parker Discusing Paramount's Adaptation of "The World For Sale"

Sir Gilbert Parker Pleased with "The World for Sale"

Keenly enjoying every moment of the time, Sir Gilbert Parker, the gifted English novelist, and M. P., whose books have sold into the millions, and a number of whose most popular works are now being filmed by J. Stuart Blackton for Paramount, was the guest of Commodore Blackton, Sunday, at the latter's beautiful country estate, Harbourwood, at Oyster Bay, Long Island.

Sir Gilbert witnessed a private projection of "The World For Sale" the other night at Oyster Bay and expressed himself as delighted by the outcome of the careful and artistic work that had been devoted to the production.

Thomas Meighan Again Signs with Paramount

Thomas Meighan is to continue to appear in Paramount productions having just signed a new contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Meighan will next be in "Arms and the Girl" in support of Billie Burke, with whom he has appeared since her association with Paramount. His last picture with her was "The Mysterious Miss Terry."

Prior to his appearances in Billie Burke's screen vehicles Thomas Meighan was leading man for Pauline Frederick.

Work Resumed on Charlie Chaplin Picture

Charlie Chaplin has resumed work at Hollywood on his twelfth Mutual picture under the $670,000 contract. The title is "The Adventurer," and in it Chaplin is a convict, chased by sheriffs, who just miss him.

Dorothy Dalton Entertains in Her New "Set"

Dorothy Dalton is pleased with the cast chosen to support her in her first Paramount-Ince picture which is now being filmed at the Thomas H. Ince Studios. Mr. Ince himself directed the first scenes for the production. The players include Thurston Hall, William Conklin, Dorcas Matthews, Adele Farrington and several others.

Miss Dalton returned recently from her vacation and saw with delight the magnificent apartment built for the opening scenes of the new photoplay. Then an idea came to her and she invited a number of her friends to attend a reception in the new "set." Among the guests were Mr, and Mrs. Thomas H. Ince, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Robert McKim, William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Misses Sylvia Bremer, Marjorie Bennett and others.

Emile Chautard to Direct Mme. Cavalieri

Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the beautiful operatic star, will be directed in her first Paramount picture, "The Eternal Temptress" by the eminent French expert, Emile Chautard.

Work will begin the first part of September upon the production, which is an original play, written expressly for Mme. Cavalieri by Mme. Fred de Grisac.

Alchemy in Changing Liquids in "The Hungry Heart"

The last scenes have been "shot" for Pauline Frederick's next Paramount picture following "Double Crossed," which will be released September 17. "The Hungry Heart," David Graham Phillips's well-known novel, was the subject, and Director Vigrola has been expending every effort to make it thoroughly realistic.

When the picture is shown photo-play goers will be pleasurably surprised and considerably thrilled by the realism of the laboratory scenes. They will see strange liquids change in color mysteriously and witness an explosion.

Miss Charlotte Swirls on Skates to Screen

Girl Who Started Craze That Cost Chicago and New York $3,000,000 Will Be Filmed in Special Feature Production

MISS CHARLOTTE, ice skater, has been signed for the screen by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, Chicago. A six-reel feature is to be produced under the direction of Oscar Eagle. H. A. Spanuty, president, makes the announcement.

According to the Commonwealth, she is to have a good cast in support, including Jack Meredith, who is to be featured, and Louise Murray, who ran away with the beauty prize at the National Exhibitors' Convention in Chicago, last year.

In "Hip, Hip, Hurrah" Miss Charlotte started the skating craze. It is estimated the girl already has cost New York and Chicago perhaps as much as three million dollars. That much has been spent for skates, skating shoes, skating scarfs and skating costumes, and in restaurants adjoining rinks since Charlotte started the craze.

Charlotte comes into the rink for her performances like a shot from a 42-centimeter gun. In the center of the stage she brings herself up on the right toe and begins to whirl. She makes ninety-four revolutions. She does as many things on ice as Pavlova does on the stage; she is even more daring, because there is more chance for the skates to slip than for Pavlova to lose control of her educated tootsies.

The picture is to be made in Chicago during Charlotte's engagement at the College Inn. Mr. Eagle will begin the filming of the story at the Rothacker Studios. He had his first picture experience in Chicago with the Selig Polyscope Company, since which time he has made features for the World, Famous Players, Reliance and others. Before entering the picture field, he made many productions for the regular stage and had experience with David Belasco, Liebler and Company, and Chas. Frohman.

Meredith was in the cast of "Poppy," with Norma Talmadge, and for Triangle in "The Man Hater." "Seven Deadly Sins," "Search for a Hidden Soul," "The Almighty Dollar" and "The Magdalene" are others of his picture productions.

The camera work will be in the hands of Jack Rose, for six years with Essanay. Robert M. Lee, formerly of the Chicago Tribune, writes the scenario.

Ann Pennington in Comedy Role in New Picture

Ann Pennington has begun work on her new Paramount picture, a charmingly written little comedy entitled "The Antics of Ann." Edward Dillon is directing the production and a number of the interior scenes already have been made.

The play permits of her wearing many fetching costumes, including something new in the way of satin pajamas and bathing suits that were never made for the water but which are nothing short of bewitching.

Girls galore are used in the picture—there are schoolroom and ballroom scenes that call for large quantities of extra people and the result should be particularly effective.

More Money and Two Years' Work for Love

Montagu Love has been re-engaged for World-Pictures Brady-Made under a contract covering the next twenty-four months. During this period Mr. Love will be either "starred" or "featured." His salary is raised.

Mr. Love has been a member of the World Film Corporation's acting forces for something more than a year. He commenced with "character parts."

He was in "Forget-Me-Not," with Kitty Gordon; "Yankee Pluck," with Ethel Clayton and "The Guardian," with June Elvidge, and has been the star player in "The Brand of Satan." He now heads the all-star cast of "Rasputin, the Black Monk," assuming the title part.

Bar Harbor Takes Kindly to Fox's Sirens

Girls with Annette Kellermann Clapped Under Rigors of Special Curfew Law by Director-in-Chief John G. Adolfi

SOCIETY in Bar Harbor, Me., is said to have taken so kindly to the invasion of sirens for the production of William Fox's "Queen of the Sea," with Annette Kellermann and company, that Director John G. Adolfi put into effect a curfew law of his own.

After the first few days the girls had to be at their hotels not later than 11 p. m. This was necessary because of the fact that the sirens and mermaids had to be on "location" as early as 5 o'clock in the morning—sometimes. Of course, there was plenty of time during the days, too, for the weather has not been propitious for picture making.

The water up this way is even too cold for ducks to bathe in with any degree of pleasure.

Society danced with the sirens, it fed them delicacies unheard of except on the Great White Way; it took them driving and it watched them work. It liked to see the chiffon-clad maidens disport themselves on the rocks and in the icy waters, and it willingly gave up an admission price to aid the Bar Harbor Hospital for the privilege of seeing the young women pose.

In fact, the making of "Queen of the Sea," with its hundreds of girls, has been society's chief diversion during the season. The Danish Minister, Constantin Brun, and Colonel Creighton Webb have been among the earliest arrivals on "location" since the picture making began.

Much of the work has been on Schooner Head and on the Sand Beach on the estate of Herbert L. Satterlee. Mr. Satterlee and his family have taken a great interest in the making of the picture and have been constant visitors.

Some of the more prominent society people who have witnessed the making of "Queen of the Sea" from the rocky vantage points are Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. McCormick and the Misses Mildred and Elizabeth McCormick, of Chicago; Sir Gilbert Parker; Herbert L. Satterlee and the Misses Mabel and Eleanor Satterlee; Miss Suzette Sturges, of Boston; Miss Bell Gurnee, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Pierce Hamilton, of New York; Mrs. Ernesto Fabbri and Miss Theresa Fabbri, of New York; General Horace Porter, formerly Ambassador to France; Assistant Secretary of State Polk, of Washington; Col. Creighton Webb; Mrs. Chandler Hale; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lorillard.

New Toto Comedy Reported to Be Good One

Hal Roach, director general of the Rolin Film Company, and the man who is personally in charge of the direction of Pathe's new Toto comedies and the well-known "Lonesome Luke" and Harold Lloyd comedies, is now in New York on a business visit to the Pathe offices.

Mr. Roach brought with him the second Toto comedy which was shown to the Pathe film committee. The report on it was to the effect that it easily ranks as one of the best laugh producers that has ever been made and that Toto is destined to be a great favorite.

Empire All-Star Leads Exodus from Legitimate

The Empire All-Star Corporation which is producing Charles Frohman's plays for the screen will be long remembered because it has been the means of bringing to the films so many stage people who had resisted the call heretofore.

Ferdinand Gottschalk is one. In "My Wife" he is taking for the picture the same part he immortalized on the stage—that of "Gibby." Warburton Gamble is another. His Sir Barnes Newcome will be remembered by theatre-goers. He and Eileen Dennes have parts in "The Unforeseen" in which Olive Tell is starred.

Others who make a first bow to moving picture audiences for this company are Hubert Druce, Amy Veness, John Harwood, Rex McDougal, Edward Fielding and Norman Trevor. Then finally Julia Sanderson, who would be first, but that her determination to play on the screen has already attracted much notice. Her first picture is "The Runaway," September 24.

Pathe Secures Al Griffin to Direct Comedies

Al Griffin, for five years technical director with Essanay, and later for some time with Rex Beach, has been secured by Rolin as technical director on the "Lonesome Luke" comedies, the Harold Lloyd comedies and the "Toto" comedies, all on the Pathe program.

Nate Erber of the Lincoln Square, Decatur, Ill.; Harry Grant of the Orpheum, Rockford, Ill., were among the visitors at the Pathe offices last week.

"God's Outlaw" Is New Bushman Play, Location Ithaca

Metro has decided to title its new play, a starring vehicle for Francis X. Bushman, "God's Outlaw." This multiple reel feature is being produced at Ithaca, N. Y., under the direction of Charles Brabin.

The story by Max Brand, from which it has been picturized, will be published under that name in the All-Story Weekly simultaneously with its release by Metro, the cover-design of the magazine showing Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in one of the striking scenes of the production.

Mr. Bushman has a warm spot in his heart for Ithaca, since it was there that "Dear Old Girl," one of his earliest successes, was made. He appeared in person at an Ithaca theatre when the Metro wonderplay "Pennington's Choice" was shown, the announcement that he would appear filling the theatre to overflowing.

Kind Words from Dorothy Dix

Dorothy Dix has written to William Fox as follows:

"In 'The Spy' you have done more than make an interesting play. You have rendered the country a great patriotic service, for its propaganda is of the kind that will go straight to every heart and stir every latent drop of patriotism in it.

"If I were Uncle Sam, I should order every playhouse in the land to run it until I had all the volunteers I needed."

David Powell as Man Suddenly Stricken Blind

David Powell, in the Empire-All Star picture, "The Unforeseen," is supporting Olive Tell and taking one of the most difficult parts that an actor could be asked to interpret. He is in the role of Walter, who is stricken suddenly blind.

"For a man that has been blind since birth or has gradually lost his sight, things are made a little easier," said Mr. Powell when questioned about his part, "but when a man is suddenly plunged headlong into pitchy blackness, and endless night—there are no end to the things that perplex and terrify him.

"For instance, when cautiously walking along, he suddenly runs into something and is hurt, by experience, acquired in this picture, has been that his first thought is—not 'how badly am I hurt,' but 'what hit me'? Then again the 'feel' of things worries him—speaking of the suddenly blind man—the change from a carpeted room to boards, is disconcerting to encounter suddenly and shaking hands with a person who has gloves on—if not expected—is positively uncanny.

"But the list of things that especially worry a man suddenly deprived of his sight is endless and among the things I have learned from putting myself in such a position, is not only boundless sympathy for him, but an appreciation of how he may be helped."

Trade Showings for Essanay's "Men of the Desert"

Trade showings of "Men of the Desert," the fourth of Essanay's series of Western photodramas featuring Jack Gardner, the musical comedy star, are in progress at all branch offices of the George Kleine distributing system.

This picture, presenting a screen version of the Taylor-Norris feud, one of the most notorious of the West, is said to be the strongest unit of this series. It will be released September 24.

Mr. Gardner is supported by Ruth King, Carl Stockdale and the remainder of the company which has been seen with him in "Land of Long Shadows," "The Range Boss" and "Open Places." The picture was staged on the plains of Arizona, and presents many picturesque settings. It has a screen time of about sixty-five minutes.

Peggy O'Neill Signed by Wholesome Films

Peggy O'Neill, creator of the title-role in "Peg o' My Heart" has been signed by Wholesome Films Corporation to play the lead in "The Penny Philanthropist."

Miss O'Neill will have ample opportunity in this feature. Miss Clara Laughlin, one of America's best-known women writers, is author of "The Penny Philanthropist." Guy W. McConnell will personally supervise the production.

Miss O'Neill will have playing opposite her, Ralph Morgan, who had a part in "Turn to the Right." The story of "The Penny Philanthropist" is described as virile and yet gentle, carrying a message of good deeds in a manner compellingly interesting and unique. The photoplay will be released in five parts.

"The Conqueror," Cost $300,000, at Globe

William Fox Presents Picture in Making Which 8000 Extras, Including Indians and Mexicans, Were Filmed

WILLIAM FOX will present his Standard picture, "The Conqueror," with William Farnum, at the Globe Theatre Monday night, September 10. Mr. Fox says of this play:

"I believe a new standard has been set in motion picture production—a standard which, going further than the thrill and the spectacular in which "The Conqueror" abounds, affords a new and higher plane for dramatic exposition through the medium of the screen.

"Given Henry Christeen Warnack's engrossing, virile story, and the enormous facilities afforded by the unlimited resources of the Fox producing organization, it needed but the master hand of R. A. Walsh, the famous Fox director and the man who staged "The Honor System," to make of "The Conqueror" a photodramatic masterpiece. This Mr. Walsh has done."

"The Conqueror" was photographed in California, Texas and Mexico. Six months were consumed in the making, and on the production Mr. Fox spent about $300,000.

In the making of the picture 8,000 people were employed. Among these were 450 Sioux Indians secured through the Department of the Interior from the Pine Ridge Agency, and for whose safe return at the end of their artistic labors a bond of $50,000 was deposited. And among the 8,000 also were Mexican soldiers, negroes from Southern plantations, Texas Rangers and United States cavalrymen.

Weeks were spent on the big battle scenes, thousands of dollars worth of ammunition went up in smoke, and as a result the battle scenes in "The Conqueror" are reality itself. Fully one thousand horses appear in the picture and numerous other animals, among which is a dog that figures prominently in the action.

Prominent in Mr. Farnum's support are Jewel Carmen, who appears as Eliza Allen, Charles Clary, J. A. Marcus, and William Eagle Shirt, Chief Birdhead and Little Bear, Indians all.

Vivid Photography in Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus"

GOLDWYN pictures have developed something distinctly new on motion picture photography in the production of "Polly of the Circus," their first release for September 9, in which Mae Marsh is the star.

Much of "Polly of the Circus" was filmed at night, owing to the character of the story, and at the same time many of the scenes were exteriors. As a result the lighting effects were a very important item in the making of the production. Among the big night scenes are the departure of the circus from the little town, the circus performance under the big top, and a spectacular fire. The vividness of these scenes is an achievement in photography.

"Polly of the Circus," which was adapted from Margaret Mayo's famous play of circus life, has seven big spectacles, but it does not depend on these for its interest. Through it runs a very sweet and, at times, pathetic story and romance. Miss Marsh plays "Polly," the little circus waif, who is left an orphan, and raised by Toby, the clown, until she grows up and becomes a bareback rider. Then she is injured in an accident and taken to the home of the minister in a little town, where there begins a romance which has many interruptions before it reaches a happy conclusion.

Camera Stand Sixty Feet High for Fox Play

BIRD'S-EYE views were taken to bring out the action in "When False Tongues Speak," a new William Fox production. It was deemed necesary to show the movements of five persons at the time of a murder—the murder itself not being screened—and the only way to do this and not destroy the mystery—was to picture it from above.

Virginia Pearson stars in the picture, and it was the director, Carl Harbaugh, who made the technical arrangements.

To secure the desired cross-section "shot" of the room, a large setting was built out-of-doors at the William Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J. The room was fully furnished, and even a complete garden laid out with trees and shrubbery, adjoining it.

Over this "set" was built a bridge sixty feet high, spanning the room and the garden. Holes were bored through the floor and through them were aimed the lenses of three cameras directed upon the scene. Openings were also left for the camera man and his assistants to watch the action, and for the director to shout instructions through a megaphone to the actors below.

It was found necessary to elevate the bridge to sixty feet to give the camera wide enough range to include the entire setting.

Edna Goodrich Filming "The American Maid"

Edna Goodrich is at work at her studio on Long Island under Albert Capellani's direction in "American Maid," a five-reel patriotic picture.

"Reputation" was released on September 3, and met with an enthusiastic reception. The other Goodrich productions are "Queen X," written by Assistant United States District Attorney Edwin M. Stanton, of New York, and "A Daughter of Maryland," scenarioized by Anthony Kelly from a play by Samuel Morse, and directed by John B. O'Brien.

Not Easy to Get Play for Lillian Walker

Twelve novels and no less than forty-eight plays with fifty original manuscripts in addition were submitted as possible vehicles for Miss Lillian Walker's pictures this last week. The Ogden Pictures Corporation states while many of them were worthy of production, none of them met the high standard which has been set for the Lillian Walker releases, and none of them were considered as suitable for Miss Walker's peculiar and unusual talents, and so the search must continue until the proper material is found.

Miss Walker's work on the screen must contain a dramatic element, with a strong vein of refined comedy proper for a six or seven-reel production that might be classed as a special. Up to this point it has been the company's greatest difficulty to secure just such a vehicle.

The Ogden Pictures Corporation control the rights of three novels, but require twelve more to cover the entire series of eight a year for the next two years.

Two Walshes Again in One Photoplay for William Fox

A. WALSH will direct George Walsh, his brother, in a screen play in process of production at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal. The alliance of the two Walshes on a single work is of more interest because of the prominence each has attained since they held this relation before.

George Walsh has appeared in an even dozen photoplays and R. A. Walsh has directed nine subjects for the William Fox organization. Three of George's features were made by his brother, but they were screened before George had the fame that has come to him since R. A.'s initial Fox picture. "The Serpent" was also the first in which George was seen on the canvas. "Blue Blood and Red," Director Walsh's second film, gave brother George a vehicle in which he was co-starred.

Then the "dual alliance" was split up. Director Walsh was assigned to another company by Mr. Fox and "Smiling George" received his first starring photoplay, "The Beast." Other pictures followed and the Walshes were not reunited until "The Honor System," the cinemelodrama which R. A. staged and in which George had a prominent role.

It was "The Honor System," more than anything else, perhaps, which builded the reputation of R. A. Walsh. The director's handiwork showed in every inch of the celluloid—in the details, in the drama, in the pathos.

Another notable film which R. A. Walsh directed was the Fox version of "Carmen."

Both George and R. A. Walsh were born in New York City. The former attended Fordham and Georgetown universities, while the latter holds a degree from Seton Hall College.

Paramount's First Serial in Fifty Newspapers

Anna Katherine Green, who has written Paramount's first serial, "Who Is 'Number One'?" will be seventy-one years old on November 11, but it is said she still possesses her remarkable facility for evolving fascinating tales of mystery and baffling intrigue. Kathleen Clifford is starred in the serial.

When "Who Is 'Number One'?" is ready—sometime in October—exchanges will be furnished prints of the entire production so that if exhibitors choose they can see every reel of the serial before they sign a contract.

Paramount has been able to place the novelization in the very best newspaper in each of the fifty or more cities where newspaper advertising will give powerful aid to every exhibitor who shows the Paramount serial.

In order to protect newspapers that print the story and theatres that show the Paramount serial, Paramount has made special arrangements so that "Who Is 'Number One'?" will not be published in book form until after the serial's first run of fifteen weeks is entirely completed. Thus the solution of the mystery is kept an absolute secret and the dramatic value of the climax is preserved.

A corps of motion picture experts—writers, art directors, photographers, producers, editors and artists—are concentrating their efforts toward making "Who Is 'Number One'?" a serial of undisputed quality.

William Fox to Authors, "Write of Love"

To buoy up the aspiring writers who desire to make scripts for photoplays, William Fox, as an acknowledged master hand at selection, makes these suggestions:

"Ninety-nine per cent. of the scripts submitted by embryonic writers are rejected because the story is timeworn or because the author has no understanding of what can and what cannot be done upon the screen.

"I believe that the author is deserving of every consideration. He is the one that conceives the thought which is finally to strike the emotions of millions of people the world over.

"The simplest of stories through the use of suspense may be made just as gripping and moving as the most strenuous melodrama. The Fox census has shown this.

"The writers of scenarios, therefore, cannot be amiss if they play on the keyboard of human passion, sounding the impressively dominant theme, the subtly appealing undertones, compelling overtones, and, most of all, the happy, joyous, sunny notation of love."

Goldwyn To Handle Caine's "The Manxman"

Henry J. Brock, Owner of the Picture, Signs Contract with Samuel Goldfish After Seeing New Productions

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER'S picturization of Hall Caine's story, "The Manx-Man," is to be distributed throughout the United States and Canada by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. The picture is just completing a four weeks' run at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

Henry J. Brock, owner of the picture, signed a contract with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, after he had seen the new Goldwyn productions and had examined the booking on the pictures.

The picture has been shown in this country only at the Criterion and already it has had one of the best advertising campaigns in the industry. Further widespread exploitation will at once be carried on by Goldwyn. One by one Goldwyn is gathering in strong attractions, in addition to its own scheduled output of twenty-six pictures a year. Henry J. Brock, owner of "The Manx-Man," makes this announcement:

"I have ararnged for the distribution of my big production through Goldwyn because I have a tremendous confidence in this newest of film organizations. I know that the Goldwyn owners understand showmanship and promotion. I know that they have built one of the greatest selling organizations ever effected in the picture inductry and I have every confidence in this organization's methods of marketing. Goldwyn begins its career with more prestige and more exhibitor confidence than many other picture organizations have had after two or three years of operation.

"As a George Loane Tucker production 'The Manx-Man' will at once have added popularity in America, because all of this great director's pictures have had fine drawing power and have therefore made a profit for exhibitors everywhere. Mr. Tucker, incidentally, is now one of Goldwyn's own directors and is making the picturization of Oliver Morosco's great Broadway stage success, 'The Cinderella Man,' by Edward Childs Carpenter. Mae Marsh is the star of this production."

Vachell's "A Man of His Word" in Falcon Series

George Loane Tucker is the producer of the fifth of General Film's series of Falcon Features, "A Man of His Word." It is a picturization of the famous play "Jelf's" by Horace Annesley Vachell. In this picture Henry Ainley, who does such conspicuous work as a principal in "The Manxman," is the featured lead. Opposite him plays Mary Dibley, one of the most versatile of the English actresses of the film.

Horace Annesley Vachell's story made a memorable success as a drama for the speaking stage. In "A Man of His Word" the play "Jelf's" is screened in a most excellent fashion, developing a wealth of good situations and real human interest.

No Title Yet for Picture by Lee Children

The first of a series of eight light comedy-dramas, starring the magnetic Jane and Katherine Lee, the "Fox Baby Grands," is now rapidly nearing completion in William Fox's Eastern studios. Kenean Buel, who screened the highly successful "Two Little Imps," is again in charge of the direction.

Mr. Fox has not yet decided upon a title for the subject.

Pearl White Says "Fatal Ring" Is Her Most Exciting Film

"THE FATAL RING" is the most exciting serial I have ever worked in.

This is the statement of Pearl White, Pathe's serial star who is starring in "The Fatal Ring," the Pathe serial released July 8, which broke the booking records despite the heat and is reported proving popular with serial fans all over the country.

"Other serials I have worked in seem almost like child's play in comparison to 'The Fatal Ring,'" continued Miss White. "The audiences are getting more exacting and they require the real thing now-a-days. When we have a fight it is not a stage fight but a real one. Warner Oland, who takes the part of the villain whose fiendishness is continually putting me in tight places, is an actor who really lives the part he is portraying. After a fight with him the first aid kit is brought out and I am doctored up. Incidentally Mr. Oland also finds use for the first aid kit and he says that I should be given the Croix de Guerre for my battles with him. I think I should be made at least Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, because they are some battles.

"The serial is full of real happenings. For instance, in one of the episodes the scenario called for the running of an automobile from a ferryboat in the middle of the river. Mr. Gasnier, president of the Astra Company, hired a ferryboat for the day and bought an automobile to send overboard. He was told he would have trouble with the authorities of the Port of New York if he sent the automobile overboard in the Hudson and that he would have to give a bond that the automobile would not interfere with navigation in any way. He made all arrangements for this and a real auto was sent over with the real actors in it. After the stunt a tug with the diver recovered the auto."

Reports from all the Pathe Exchanges show that "The Fatal Ring" has increased in popularity with motion picture audiences and that it is even more popular than "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of "Elaine," and "The Iron Claw," the three Pearl White serials.

Triangle Creates an Editor's Place for Julian Johnson

JULIAN JOHNSON, until recently editor of the Photoplay Magazine, and a former Los Angeles drama critic, has been appointed editor-in-chief of the Triangle Film Corporation, and is en route to Los Angeles, California, to assume the important post.

The position was created for Johnson by H. O. Davis, general manager and vice-president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and is one of exceptional responsibility. He will be held responsible for all pictures produced at the Triangle Culver City Studio from the time they leave the scenario department until they are ready for marketing.

"It is a new department for us," stated Mr. Davis. "No such position has been open in our company until now. I saw the need of a final supervisor or editor-in-chief, and I simply created the post. Of course, I first made certain we could obtain Mr. Johnson's service.

"He will act as sort of a middle-man between our script editor, Mr. Cunningham, and myself. His word on the stories will be final, and a picture will not be released until he has placed his O. K. on the film following the cutting operation.

"In this way we hope to bring our production department up to a standard of efficiency never before attained. The new system will, I think, eliminate a lot of waste and will work for the betterment of Triangle pictures.

"Mr. Johnson is rated among the best newspaper and magazine writers of the country, and my opinion is best expressed by the dictatorial powers which have been granted him."

General Film to Send Papers to the Front

Joining in the great national spirit that looks toward the comfort and relaxation of the country's young men who have been called to war, General Film Company is to send all its spare magazines and other reading matter to the boys in camp and at the front.

A home office order has been given to save particularly all motion picture magazines and trade papers that accumulate in the various offices, these to be stamped with one cent under Postmaster General Burleson's regulation permitting them to be carried by the postal service and distributed to ships or to camp.

It is believed by General Film that it is the first motion picture concern to make this attention to the fighting men a part of its organization rules. It knows that motion picture topics of all kinds are particularly interesting to soldiers and sailors.

Goldwyn Gets Applause from Many Directions

Goldwyn productions continue to get applause wherever they are shown. Among the press notices for "Polly of the Circus," which number thousands, is this by Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune:

"Mae Marsh makes a most lovable 'Polly.' She bubbles over with personality plus. This Goldwyn production possesses both humor and pathos. Among its big scenes, the great horse race may be slangily described as a 'pippin.'"

Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene" was first shown outside the projection room at Camp Mills, near Mineola, L. I.

Working at Fort Lee on "Thou Shalt Not Steal"

Work progresses rapidly on Virginia Pearson's starring vehicle for the William Fox productions. The picture is to be called "Thou Shalt Not Steal," and is being directed by William Nigh at the Fox studios in Fort Lee, N. J.

Norma Talmadge in City Studio Completing Picture

Norma Talmadge has again returned to her own studio at 318 East Forty-eighth street to make the interiors of her new picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country."

First Goldwyn Comedy, "Baby Mine," Sept. 23

"Baby Mine," adapted for the screen from the famous farce by Margaret Mayo, with Madge Kennedy as the star, is announced as the first comedy production by Goldwyn Pictures. It will be released September 23. In this production Miss Kennedy, who has had a series of stage successes, will make her first appearance as a star in motion pictures. In the cast with her is John Cumberland, who will also make his debut on the screen. He has appeared in roles opposite to Miss Kennedy in a number of stage successes, notably "Twin Beds" and "Fair and Warmer." Other well-known players supporting the star in "Baby Mine" are Frank Morgan and Kathryn Adams.

"Baby Mine" was directed by John Stuart Robertson and Hugo Ballin.

"Rips and Rushes" a "Big V" Comedy, Has Kidnapping

Vitagraph's comedy offering for the week of September 17 will be "Rips and Rushes," a whirlwind of fun, written by Graham Baker and directed by Lawrence Semon, the latter also playing the star part.

Semon is ably assisted by the "Big V" riot squad.

The comedy is considered by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, to be one of the most elaborate "Big V's" yet produced. The heroine is kidnapped and the hero manages to trace her to a den and get admittance by a ruse, and single handed defeats the gang.

Keene Thompson to Write Fairbanks Scripts

Douglas Fairbanks last week engaged Keene Thompson, the well-known magazine contributor, as a member of his scenario department in the production of Artcraft pictures. Mr. Thompson started his professional career as a comic artist on the staff of the New York World, when still in his knickerbockers at the age of fifteen.

Thompson has sold over six hundred short stories, novelettes and verses .

Gilson Willets Added to Pathe's Scenario Department

GILSON WILLETS, well-known novelist and traveller, who for a number of years has been associated with the Selig Co. as scenario writer, has been engaged by Pathe, and has already started work in his new position in the Pathe scenario department.

This is not the first time that Pathe has made use of Mr. Willets' talents. The rights to his novel, "The Double Cross," were purchased by Pathe for adaptation into a serial which was later put out under the title "The Mystery of the Double Cross."

In his review of this novel for the New York American, Edwin Markham, author of "The Man With the Hoe," characterized it as by far the greatest American mystery novel that had ever been written.

Mr. Willets is the author of twenty other books, among them "The First Law," "His Neighbor's Wife," "Anita the Cuban Spy," "The Workers of a Nation," "The Rulers of the World," "The Inside History of the White House," etc. In addition to his books Mr. Willets is a prolific magazine writer and has had published over a thousand different articles in such media.

As a scenario writer Mr. Willets has many successes to his credit, among them the first motion picture serial, "The Adventures of Kathlyn," and the special features "The Thundering Herd," "The Lily of the Valley," "I'm Glad My Boy Grew Up to Be a Soldier," "I Hear Her Calling Me," etc., etc.

Mr. Willets has had a very busy and interesting life. He began his literary career at the age of nineteen, and at twenty-one published his first book. When hardly more than a boy he became editor of Current Literature. In search of literary material he traveled in all parts of the world, among his exploits at this stage of his career was traveling for three months through the length and breadth of India in famine and plague time, making a sledge journey of 500 miles through northern Russia, Finland, Lapland and Sweden, and crossing northern Mexico on horseback. And these are not all of his globe-trotting stunts.

Scenario Successes Beat Adaptations—Arthur F. Beck

DOCTORS disagree, it may be admitted, even in motion pictures. William A. Brady recently said that the most enduring screen successes have been based on well-known stage plays. This statement is challenged by Arthur F. Beck, general manager of Art Dramas, Inc. He says:

"Mr. Brady seems to be misinformed," said Mr. Beck. "While it is true that some of the most successful pictures are adaptations of successful stage plays, still there have been just as many, if not more, really big and enduring successes which were especially written for the screen.

"As proof of this, I need mention only one picture, which was not adapted from a stage success. I mean 'Cabiria.' Surely, 'Cabiria' is entitled to be classed as one of 'the biggest and most enduring hits.'

"Then there are 'Civilization,' 'Intolerance,' 'The Battle Cry of Peace,' 'Womanhood,' 'Joan the Woman,' 'Traffic in Souls,' 'Neptune's Daughter,' 'A Daughter of the Gods,' 'The Soul of a Woman' and 'The Spoilers.'

"Then there is that notable instance of a success that had its origin purely as a scenario, 'The Cheat,' by Hector Turnbull. Here is a photoplay that reverses the usual order of things. It was such a phenomenal success that it was dramatized, which seems to be conclusive proof that the screen is capable of doing big things without looking for aid from the legitimate stage.

"And again: What about Mary Pickford's successes such as 'Rags,' 'Hearts Adrift,' 'Poor Little Peppina,' and many others? And, finally, take the Fairbanks pictures—tremendous successes and written for the screen.

"I might go on to enumerate hundreds of substantial screen successes, but what's the use? The above mentioned will surely convince the most skeptical.

Farrar Again Leads Troops in "The Woman God Forgot"

THE new Geraldine Farrar motion picture spectacle, staged under the personal direction of Cecil B. DeMille, "The Woman God Forgot," has been finished in California and marks the initial Farrar release through Artcraft Pictures.

The last scenes for this big production were staged in the Yosemite. Director De Mille took 200 people by special train to this beautiful section for several immense exteriors.

In building the gigantic pyramid, over 200 feet high, together with the other structures in this set, which covers an area of over two square miles, a force of five hundred carpenters and stone masons were busy nearly two weeks working day and night.

In the spectacle Geraldine Farrar again leads troops to battle in the spirited manner presented in "Joan," which thrilled every audience before which it appeared.

The Lasky Home Guard, which has the honor of being the crack organization of the Pacific Coast, was sworn into the service of the State of California between scenes of "The Woman God Forgot." Director General DeMille was the first to sign the roll.

In spite of his many duties, Mr. DeMille insists upon personally cutting and assembling the production. He believes this has a great deal to do with the success of a picture.

Months Ahead in World-Brady Production

Christmas and New Year's Day Have No Terrors for This Producing Company, the Program Being Fixed to Feb. 11

WORLD-PICTURES Brady-Made are now completed for publication far beyond the beginning of 1918. This is the result of steady accumulation in following out the policy long ago established by Director General William A. Brady, under which the rate of manufacture has been considerably in excess of the volume of issue.

The outcome has been brought about not by speeding up the making of each picture —which might have affected the quality of the product to some extent—but by increasing the number of plays simultaneously in process of production.

The situation thus developed places World Pictures in a very advantageous position.

Following are the World-Pictures Brady-Made, in the order of their publication up to and including the week of Februarv 11 of next year:

September 24, Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath"; October 1, Lew Fields and Madge Evans in "The Corner Grocer"; October 8, all star cast, headed by Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Henry Hull, Julia Dean, Irving Cummings and Hubert Wilke in "Rasputin, the Black Monk"; October 15, Carlyle Blackwell, Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley in "The Burglar"; October 22, Alice Brady in "The Maid of Belgium"; October 29, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "Shall We Forgive Her?"

November 5, Ethel Clayton in "The Dormant Power"; November 12, Madge Evans in "The Little Patriot"; November 19, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Good for Nothing"; November 26, Kitty Gordon in "Her Hour."

December 3, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley in "A Creole's Revenge"; December 10, Montagu Love in "The Beast"; December 17, Ethel Clayton in "Easy Money"; December 24, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Ladder of Fame"; December 31, Kitty Gordon in "The Divine Sacrifice."

January 7, June Elvidge in "The Way of the Strong"; January 14, Alice Brady in "The Spurs of Sybil"; January 21, Madge Evans in "True Blue"; January 28, Ethel Clayton in "Stolen Hours."

February 4, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Almost a King"; February 11, Kitty Gordon in "Making a Man Pay."

This list insures a definite program for twenty-one weeks, which is said in the offices of World Pictures, to embrace a much greater number of releases than were ever made in advance by any other picture-producing company.

Kerrigan Out of Hospital; His Productions Scheduled

J. Warren Kerrigan has left the Cottage Hospital at Santa Barbara, Cal., where he was taken when his right leg was broken four weeks ago. He remained at the hosbelow the knee by the fall of his horse pital three weeks.

Mr. Kerrigan's first Paralta play, "A Man's Man," will be released on Sunday, the 23d inst. Sixty prints will be run that day in sixty cities throughout the United States. His second release, Frederic Chapin's "Turn of a Card," is in the hands of the Paralta editing board and will soon be ready for publication.

"Madam Who," Paralta, to Precede "Rose o' Paradise"

Bessie Barriscale's first Paralta release will not be Grace Miller White's "Rose o' Paradise," as at first announced. Instead, Harold McGrath's "Madam Who," Miss Barriscale's second Paralta production, will be presented in October, and will be followed by "Rose o' Paradise."

Mrs. White's story may be termed an emotional optimistic romance in which the principal characters—"Jinnie Singleton," played by Bessie Barriscale; "Lafe Grandoken," acted by Howard Hickman, and "Peg," impersonated by Edythe Chapman—are beset by poverty, intrigue and danger, and yet they form a "Happy in Spite" club.

"The Warrior" Sold for Canada to Globe Films of Toronto

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprise, Inc., announced on Monday the sale of the Canadian territorial rights to their super feature, "The Warrior," to The Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada. This is a new organization of prominent exchange men and leading financiers, and branches in all of the large cities have been opened in order to properly distribute the seven-reeler starring the famous Maciste, hero of Gabriele D'Annuncio's "Cabiria."

Gun Explosion in Studio, Filming "Madam Who"

In filming "Madam Who," Bessie Barriscale Paralta production, the company narrowly escaped injury by a gun explosion. To add to the war semlance, an old cannon was obtained and dressed to look like a modern weapon. Director Barker built a platform thirty feet back and fifteen feet from the ground for Cameraman DeVinna.

DeVinna began to crank and Barker shouted the command to pull the lanyard. Then the unexpected happened. The charge exploded with a resounding boom. The gun, apparently overcharged, had badly shattered near the muzzle and pieces of metal went whistling through the air. It was a miracle that no one was hurt. The only damage done was by a small piece of metal that went through the roof of one of the studio buildings.

Bluebird Goes Back to Title, "We Are French"

Last November, when this country was still neutral, Bluebird released a screen version of Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis' novel, "We Are French," as a program number, and to maintain neutrality entitled the photoplay "The Bugler of Algiers."

Now that exhibitors find patriotic issues not along profitable, but beneficial in our state of war, Bluebird has re-titled the feature, giving it the original caption of the novel, "We Are French." Rupert Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict are the featured ones.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" Is Complete

An early release of William Fox's Kiddies pictures will be the picturization of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." This fairy story film has jusst been completed and those who have seen the uncut film believe the picture will even surpass "Jack and the Beanstalk," the first Fox Kiddies picture, shown at the Globe theatre in New York.

It was felt by those who had seen "Jack and the Beanstalk" that the acting of Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin and the other children could not be bettered, but in "Aladdin" they have gone even beyond their first essay. According to those who have seen the new film, the portrayal of the eastern characters is a revelation.

Selig Uses Dictating Machine in Projection Room

The Selig Company is preparing to install a phonographic dictating machine to assist the film editing department. As the editors watch the picture in the projection room they dictate their orders into the transmitter. The film is returned to the cutting room with the phonograph record.

Film editing takes place in the projection room. Like an author's manuscript in the hands of an editor, it is shortened here and there, the sub-titles altered, some portions entirely cut out and the entire film dressed to suit the ideas of the men closest in touch with the dramatic desires of the

J. G. Blystone Keeps Five Directors Busy

General Director J. G. Blystone, of L-Ko Comedies, is leading a busy life in supervising the work of five directors, preparing the scenarios, and editing the finished product at L-Ko Studios, Hollywood, Cal.

Noel Smith, Archie Mayo, Vin Moore, Dick Smith and Phil Dunham are rushing work on future L-Ko's in which Gladys Varden, Myrtle Sterling, Eva Novak and Lucille Hutton will be featured. The leading comedians include Hughie Mack, the latest addition to L-Ko's staff of players; Bob McKenzie, Walter Stevens, Chester Ryckman, Eddie Barry, Billy Bevan, Al Forbes and Russ Powell.

Eva Tanguay, As Girl, Raised As a Boy

In Eva Tanguay's first scream production, "The Wild Girl," it is promised the theatre-going public will see a new Eva. The role is that of a child who, having been left with the gypsies, was raised as a boy, and when claimed by her rightful estate brings to the household of her benefactor all the wild qualities which give the title character its name.

The story of "The Wild Girl" is based on a suggestion by George M. Rosener, and was directed by Howard Estabrook. The play has been given a costly production and is unusually handsomely mounted.

The cast supporting Miss Tanguay includes Stuart Holmes, Tom Moore, Valerie Bergere, Herbert Evans and others.

Cut Film on Trans-Continental Journey

The new Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft picture, "The Man From Painted Post," was cut and assembled during the recent trans-continental trip of the Fairbanks organization from Los Angeles to New York.

As soon as the special car carrying the players and technical staff left Los Angeles, Director Joseph Henaberry, assisted by Billy Shay, commenced work on the film in an improvised work room.

Marguerite Clark Working on Third "Sub-Deb"

Marguerite Clark begins work this week on the third in the Paramount series of "Sub-Deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which are being filmed under direction of J. Searle Dawley from the stories originally published in The Saturday Evening Post.

The first story, "Bab's Diary," will be released on the 24th of this month, and in October "Bab's Burglar," also completed, will be placed on the market. The idea is to follow in regular sequence the order of the stories as published in the Post.

Title Jolivet Picture "Lest We Forget!"

"Lest We Forget!" is the title which has been selected for the screen drama of international events in which Rita Jolivet is starred.

This picture deals with occurrences involving the beginning of the war and especially the early German invasion of Belgium and northern France and the sinking of the Lusitania.

Many scenes in the picture are laid on board the ill-fated steamship. Particularly fine, it is claimed, are the scenes in which the Lusitania is shown on the high seas just previous to and at the moment of its destruction by a German submarine. Prominent personages in the public life of England, France and America are represented in these scenes. One tableau shows a group, including Charles Frohman, Alfred Vanderbilt and Rita Jolivet, who, it will be recalled, were standing hand in hand at the time that the Lusitania sank—Miss Jolivet alone survived her companions.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Bluebird Will Star Carmel Myers

The announcement comes from Bluebird that Carmel Myers will be introduced as a star in that series November 11, having just completed her introductory issue under the direction of Harry Solter. Miss Myers is being shown to New Yorkers as the vampire in "Sirens of the Sea" during the Broadway theatre run of that feature.

"The Dynast" is the title of the photoplay in which Miss Myers will be first presented as a Bluebird star, with Kenneth Harlan, Charles Hill Mailes and Gertrude Aster her chief supporters. J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton wrote the story, with a specific purpose in giving Miss Myers a favorable introduction to the series.

Mrs. Castle Away Again to Marblehead

Mrs. Vernon Castle and her company—a large one—will go to Marblehead, Mass., for a location for certain scenes in a new photoplay. Headquarters are to be made there, it is said, for a number of days.

Marblehead was selected some time ago by Mrs. Castle's director, but it was felt best to delay the visit until after the close of the Summer season, when it would be easier to obtain the desired scenes without annoyance from curious crowds of vacationists anxious to see the celebrated dancer and movie star at work.

Mrs. Castle has returned to the Pathe studio after a Summer spent in the Adirondacks, where many scenes were taken for forthcoming features.

H. C. Hoagland Back with Pathe as Film Editor

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, has engaged H. C. Hoagland, recently general manager of the Selig Company, to act as film editor with supervision over the titling, cutting and film editing departments.

Mr. Hoagland was for five or six years with the old Pathe Freres in Jersey City, holding in succession the positions of publicity and advertising manager, editor of the Pathe Weekly, manager of the film department and later, after the resignation of Mr. Berst to accept the presidency of the General Film Company, acting general manager of Pathe Freres.

Ruth Clifford's New Leading Man

Bluebird advances Ruth Clifford to the position of single stardom with presentations of "The Desire of the Moth," screen version of Eugene Manlove Rhodes' story, scheduled for release October 22. She has been co-star with Rupert Julian in recent Blubirds, but will in future issues go it alone.

Mr. Julian will have an important role in "The Desire of the Moth," but Miss Clifford's new leading man, Monroe Salisbury, will come to the front in that feature and play opposite the star in future.

Rupert Julian will be featured as a producer, and it is the intention of the management to make the "Rupert Julian Bluebirds" an important factor in their scheme of publicity and promotion. "Mother o' Mine," the Bluebird Extraordinary, just released on state rights lines, is a Rupert Julian production that will have "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" to follow it on the regular program September 17, with "The Desire of the Moth" featured a month later.

Heredity Problem in This Universal Drama

Director Allen J. Holubar's next production will be entitled "The Twisted Soul," the story of which is by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton.

It is a psychological drama in which heredity figures to a considerable extent, and it will be produced in five reels.

Brownie Vernon will be starred with William Garwood, while Murdock MacQuarrie will have the principal character role.

New Pictures of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew (Stars of Metro-Drew Comedies)

Snapped During Three Tense Moments in Rita Jolivet's New Selznick Picture, "The Lusitania Disaster."

Jack Meador Publicity Man for Longacre

Longacre Distributing Company has appointed Jack Meador its general press representative. Mr. Meador has been engaged in newspaper and magazine writing and publicity promotion the past twelve years.

He was formerly a reporter on the Record-Herald and Tribune of Chicago. Ten years ago he came to New York to join the staff of the New York Herald.

Mr. Meador went to Europe in 1912 in the interests of the Authors Inter-Ocean Magazine and Newspaper Syndicate. Later he was made president of the syndicate, with headquarters in Paris.

Flirtation Leads Off in "The Spindle of Life"

Ben Wilson is the featured player of "The Spindle of Life," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release September 17. He will be supported by Neva Gerber, Richard La Reno and Hayward Mack.

"The Spindle of Life" is a picturization of Sidney Robinson's novel, "Gladsome," arranged for the screen by Karl Coolidge and produced by George Cochrane.

It tells the story of the unconventional meeting of Gladsome Harrison, an interesting young tomboy heiress, and "Alphabet" Carter, crown prince of America's financial realm, in a quaint seacoast town.

"The Lincoln Man's" Picture for Lincoln House

O. H. Oldroyd, noted as the owner of the house in which Lincoln died in Washington, D. C., which now contains the famous Oldroyd Lincoln Memorial collection, requested a photograph of Benjamin Chapin, "the Lincoln man," for framing in the Lincoln House just after the Lincoln Cycle was shown privately in the National Capitol.

Mr. Chapin felt so pleased with the request that he immediately arranged for a special sitting and the portrait has been sent.

"The Flaming Omen" Story of the Incas

Director William Wolbert's Western Vitagraph company is confident that "The Flaming Omen," Vitagraph's forthcoming "Blue Ribbon" feature, is what Albert F. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is pleased to call a "happy" picture.

It is a story of romance, with the atmosphere of Peru at the time of the Incas and far removed from the distressing atmosphere of war.

William Farnum Has Title for Book—His Book

"My Friend's Little Daughter" is a title suggested by William Farnum, Fox star, for his forthcoming book. He explains:

"I have noticed that nearly every man who comes to me to get a woman a place to act for the movies begins by saying, 'She is a friend's little daughter.' It is the familiar title that is the good title, and this phrase 'My friend's little daughter' is certainly more trite than anything else I can think of. They say to me, for instance:

"'I have a friend who has a little daughter who is crazy to go into pictures.' I usually agree sotto voce to this part of it —she would be."

David Smith, Who Knows Cowboys, Directs O. Henrys

The Broadway star feature series of two-reel Western O. Henry stories for General Film has been directed by David Smith. Of a whimsical, lovable personality, with a penchant for details truly Dickenesque, Director Smith is enthusiastic over these stories.

Many of David Smith's years were lived on the edge of the cowboy land. He knows cowboys intimately. Up and down the California coast he has journeyed with them, bunked and supped with them. He knows their foibles, their roystering, blustering funning, their unquestioning faith in each other.

Snow-Tipped Mountains in Pathe-Combitone

"Colorado's Scenic Wonders" is the title of the next Pathe-Combitone picture, and it will be released on September 9.

As the expedition leaves the more or less flat and arid country of the Southwest the subjects photographed become of much greater scenic interest. The scenery of this newest release is truly magnificent and is calculated to make the dweller on the prairies of the Middle West or the less favored section of the East envious of the persons who live in daily sight of such beauties of nature.

Huge mountains, some of them tipped with snow; vast gorges, strangely shaped rock formations, flowered uplands and rushing streams make a series of scenes which are particularly appropriate for the hot season.

Not Quite Five Feet, but All Fun

Jesse Weldon, who belongs to the Henry Lehrman forces which are making Sunshine Comedies for William Fox, is funny all over—from his head to his feet and sidewise.

Jesse is 4 feet, 8 inches tall, weighs 185 pounds, has a waist line of 44 inches and measures 46 inches around the chest.

Fox Star Wears Dress of Pearls

A gown consisting almost entirely of Treton pearls is worn by Gladys Brockwell in "The Soul of Satan," her forthcoming William Fox Photoplay.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Don't be a slacker.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

"Under False Colors" Heads Pathe's Program

Two Features, a Comedy and Two Serial Episodes, with Jeanne Eagles, Mollie King and Pearl White Among Stars

THE Pathe program for the week of September 23 is characterized by two features, a comedy and two serial episodes. The box office stars who appear on this program are Frederick Warde, Jeanne Eagles, Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd.

The five-reel production of the week is Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagles in "Under False Colors." It is an original story by Lloyd Lonergan, produced by Thanhouser, under the direction of Emile Chautard, with what is said to be one of the best starring combinations ever seen on the screen.

"The Bow String" is the title of the second episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial in which Mollie King is featured with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. The suspense of the first episode is heightened in the second, one of the features of which is a fight between two men dressed in armor and thus disguised as knights of old.

Pearl White stars in the twelfth episode of "The Fatal Ring" entitled "The Desperate Chance." At the point of a revolver in a fight on top of a fast moving train, Carslake and Pearl both fall off.

The second feature of the week is the three-reel Official French War Film entitled "In the Wake of the Huns." Pathe calls attention to the drawing power of this title "plastered all over town on the most striking paper you ever saw and advertised big in the newspapers."

"In the Wake of the Huns" is official. It is the first French picture of its kind to be seen in this country.

Harold Lloyd is seen in "Pinched," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. In it the star and Snub Pollard manage to get their clothes and identities mixed and both land in the police station with "a-laugh-a-foot" complications.

International cartoon and scenic, and Hearst-Pathe News, Nos. 78 and 79, complete an unusually strong program.

Vampire Woman in "The Painted Doll," Russian Release

Natalia Lesienko is the "vampire woman" in the Russian Art Film Productions brought to this country by N. S. Kaplan. She is said to be the most famous creator of vampire roles in Russia.

The appearance of Lesienko, it is promised, will reveal an artist whose methods are entirely different from the traditional conception of such roles so closely copied by American players.

Announcement of the forthcoming release by the Russian Art Film Corporation of Pushkin's "The Painted Doll" states that Lesienko has the role of a woman who leaves no stone unturned to accomplish her purpose and is persistent in revenge when she fails. Her role is that of a wife who is jealous of her husband's success in his profession because it eliminates him from her aspirations for social achievement.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Cecil B. DeMille, Adolph Zukor and Jeanie Macpherson, Discussing the Script of the Farrar-Artcraft Production, "The Woman God Forgot"

"The Eternal Magdalene" All Against Black Background

Goldwyn's third release is Arthur Hopkins' picturization of "The Eternal Magdalene," Robert McLaughlin's stage success, starring Maxine Elliott. In it all the conventions of the screen are thrown away.

The picture opens with a brief but remarkable prologue showing the Biblical Magdalene, and this prologue reaches its climax with the stoning of the Magdalene and the intervention of the Christ, who absolves her of sin.

The modern parallel of this ancient story then begins, and when the famous dream period of the play is reached Arthur Hopkins discards all conventional motion picture sets and settings and virtually abandons every accessory or bit of furnishings, playing the entire sequence of the action in the dream against a black velvet background.

There isn't a room, a home or a set to be seen. In the studio Mr. Hopkins erected a velvet curtain one hundred and sixteen feet long and thirty feet in depth, and his characters fade in and fade out of this background and play their parts vividly defined to the eye against the soft blackness of the velvet.

The effect parallels the feeling of anyone who has a dream. The background of the human brain is black and the objects, persons or things dreamed about are as clear and bright as if a spotlight were playing upon them.

Mountain Scenery in Vivian Martin's "Sunset Trail"

Vivian Martin appears in a new Paramount picture, "The Sunset Trail," September 17.

Beulah Marie Dix made the scenario of the photoplay from a story of Alice McIver and George H. Melford directed it. Cameraman Percy Hilburn will come in for a good share of praise when the picture is exhibited, owing to the remarkable work he has done in perpetuating in celluloid some of the exquisite scenery in the mountains.

Pauline Frederick in "Double-Crossed," Sept. 17

Loyalty to her husband, even when she discovers that in his past there is a black spot which is cropping up to menace their happiness, forms the theme of "Double-Crossed" in which Pauline Frederick will appear September 17. This is a Paramount picture produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola.

Hector Turnbull, author of "The Cheat," which was one of the most successful of all Paramount pictures, is responsible for the scenario of "Double-Crossed," and in the cast are such well-known players as Crauford Kent, Clarence Handyside, William Riley Hatch, Harris Gordon and Joseph Smiley.

New Prints of Essanay's Charlie Chaplins

Essanay has bowed to the call of the public for its famous Charlie Chaplin comedies and will put out new prints of all the Essanay-Chaplin productions The first one will be offered on September 15, and one a month will be issued thereafter. "The Champion' with a screen time of approximately thirty minutes, will head the program.

This will be followed by other equally humorous comedies, including "In the Park," "By the Sea," "A Woman," "Shanghied," "Work," "A Jitney Elopement," "The Bank," "A Night in the Show," and others. They will be distributed through the General Film Company, Inc.

These comedies were all made in the heyday of Chaplin's popularity.

Two "Punches" in Rex Beach's "The Auction Block"

In "The Auction Block," Rex Beach picture for early release by Goldwyn, are two strong scenes.

One is the overturning of a ladle in a steel mill, killing a workman, while his daughter stands at the door. She leads a mob that storms the gates. The scene is taken by the light of the furnaces alone.

The other is a fighting raid on a Tenderloin gambling house and the arrest of the owners and their lieutenants. Sixty extras, all fighters, are used.

"Blind Man's Holiday" Is a Four-Reel O. Henry

Scarcely a better story could have been chosen for picturization than O. Henry's "Blind Man's Holiday." This is the second of the four-reel features released through General Film Company, as a departure from the two-reel subjects from the author's repertoire.

"Blind Man's Holiday" has its scene laid in New Orleans. Incidentally there is another New Orleans four-reel story to follow this one in another month, "The Enchanted Kiss." Before that, however, there will be one with a Washington atmosphere, "The Duplicity of Hargraves," also in four-reel form.

In "Blind Man's Holiday" the story is that of Lorison, a young man who is the victim of extreme moods. His romance is one of psychological peculiarities handled in a most telling and lucid fashion, an art which O. Henry more than any other popular short story writer has mastered. Added to that O. Henry puts sentiment into the story that irresistibly sways the emotions. This story also has one of O. Henry's most triumphant "happy endings."

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Battle Flashes in Vitagraph's "For France"

In Accord with President Smith's Policy the War Element Is Subordinated in the Picture to a Bright Bit of Romance

AUGUST 17 is the date set for the release of "For France," a Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" feature, introducing Edward Earle and Betty Howe. "For France" is a romance of modern France with the present world's conflict as a background. It is a Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady creation.

Although the war plays a large part in moulding the destinies of the main characters, the battle element is confined to a few flashes, romance being the predominant feature of the picture. The battle flashes are but incidental to the main theme of the story. Infinite care was taken by Director Wesley Ruggles in securing authentic reproductions of battles as they are being staged "over there," and results are described as marvelous.

In the course of production, Edward Earle, as the young West Pointer, in France to study aviation, is given opportunity to indulge in his pet diversion—flying.

A force of Germans, numerically superior to the English contingent, plan a surprise attack. A decisive battle is fought near a little farm, and the "Tommies" are saved from rout by the heroism of Ackland (Earle), who mans a machine gun and, with the aid of Marthe (Betty Howe) succeeds in turning a defeat into a glorious victory.

Badly wounded, Ackland is transported to a Red Cross hospital and is nursed back to health by Marthe, who answers in the affirmative when asked by Ackland as to whether she would become a party to a genuine war romance.

Miss Howe was with the International Film Company and had a prominent role in the "Beatrice Fairfax" series. Others in the cast are Arthur Donaldson, Mary Maurice and Frank Andrews.

Triangle Arranges Program

THE Triangle September schedule has been carefully arranged with plays of contrasting type succeeding one another.

"Idolaters," a drama of city life, with a designing adventuress as the chief character is followed by "The Haunted House," which presents a spiritualistic girl living with her fairy fancies in a quiet New England village. "Polly Ann," the next release, is described as a play of gladness, recounting, as it does, the humorous experiences of a little orphan. "Mountain Dew" is a story of a girl of the Kentucky Cumberlands who learns the secrets of love and "larnin'" at the same time. A Yale athlete who becomes a society detective is the central figure of "Flying Colors."

The following week, September 23, presents "The Devil Dodger," a western drama with the new bad-man star, Roy Stewart. This is followed by "Broadway, Arizona," with Olive Thomas as the gay young chorus girl, who is abducted and carried to the western mountains where she creates a Broadway of her own.

The October productions are being completed and the order of their release is now being planned. The schedule will lead off with "Ashes of Hope," a drama that is said to be similar in action and spirit to "The Flame of the Yukon." "Doing Her Bit," a patriotic play, is another feature of the month which was devised with an eye to timeliness of appeal.

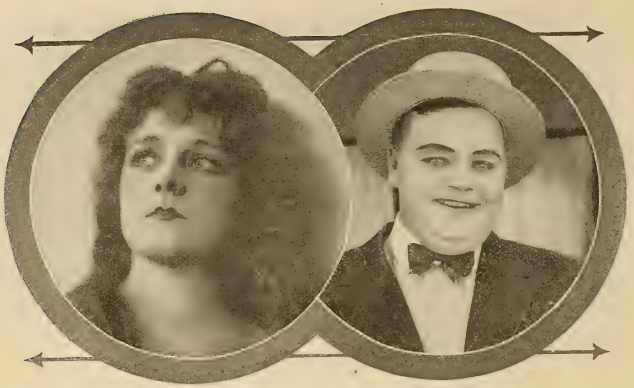
About October 21, Alma Ruebens, one of the most attractive of the Triangle leading women, will come forth as a star in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," scenes of which are now being filmed on the deserts of Arizona. The Triangle kiddies, headed by Georgie Stone, Beulah Burns and Thelma Burns will appear in support of Margery Wilson, who stars in a gypsy role of "Wild Sumac."

So Plays Sharply Contrast

This Carpet Figures in a Ducking

In "Tom and Jerry Mix," latest Sunshine Comedy, produced by Henry Lehrmann for William Fox, Tom and Jerry are at the beach. They send Daisy to shop and they go to the hotel—for ice cream soda.

Tom and Jerry are in such good humor after their thirst is quenched that they hook a pair of ice tongs to a long carpet on which stand a number of beautiful girls. A stout rope connects the tongs to the pummel of one of the saddles and before the girls realize it, they are plunged into the briny.



Ince and Blackton in Paramount's Program

Marguerite Clark, Vivian Martin, Billie Burke, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Sessue Hayakawa and Ann Pennington Are in List

THE October schedule marks the first appearance of a Blackton production on the Paramount schedule and also contains the first of the Paramount-Ince photoplays, in addition to embracing such stars in its roster as Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Vivian Martin, Jack Pickford, Louise Huff, Sessue Hayakawa and Ann Pennington. The stellar forces of the Thomas H. Ince organization are represented by Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray. In the Blackton production, which is an adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's celebrated novel, "The World for Sale," the principal roles are played by Anna Little and Conway Tearle.

"The Ghost House," starring Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, directed by Wm. C. DeMille, leads off. It is a picture calculated to thrill as well as entertain.

"Arms and the Girl," from the successful stage play, has as its bright particular star the lovely Billie Burke. Joseph Kaufman directed the film and Thomas Meighan, who played opposite Miss Burke in her first Paramount picture, also supports her in this one.

"The Trouble Buster," with Vivian Martin in the star role, is a "cheer-up" story with plenty of action.

"The Call of the East," starring Sessue Hayakawa, Oriental actor, gives him a chance. Margaret Loomis supports Hayakawa, while Tsuru Aoki, Jack Holt and other well-known Paramount players appear in the cast. The story is by Beulah Marie Dix and George Melford is director.

"The World for Sale," by Sir Gilbert Parker, directed and produced by J. Stuart Blackton, is a picture with a carefully chosen cast of type actors, and headed by Conway Tearle and Anna Little.

"Bab's Burglar," second of the "Sub-Deb" stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart, directed by J. Searle Rawley and starring Marguerite Clark.

"The Son of His Father" offers Charles Ray, among the most popular of all the younger stars. This Ince picture is directed by Victor Schertzinger and stages a thrilling hand-to-hand fight that is said to be a "hummer" and not wanting in action.

Dorothy Dalton will make her first appearance in Paramount-Ince pictures in "The Price Mark," a drama suitable for Mr. Ince and Miss Dalton.

Ann Pennington, the Ziegfeld Follies star, returns to the screen after a season upon the stage, in "The Antics of Ann."

In the October list there appear the names of not only several new stars—new, that is, on the Paramount schedule, but already established favorites with the film-going public; several authors of world-wide prominence, and withal a series of offerings intended to supply every exhibitor's need.

Selig Release Is "The Law, North of 65"

"The Law, North of 65" is the title of the Selig drama released in General Film service on Monday, September 17. The cast of players includes Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman and Tom Mix.

"The Law, North of 65" is a stirring drama of the far Northland in which an enduring love withstands all tests. Colin Campbell, who directed a majority of the Selig feature plays, was responsible for the production. The scenic effects are said to be elaborate and the photography clear.

On Saturday, September 22, the title of the Selig one-reel drama is "Vengeance versus Mercy." The production carries the lesson of "blessed are the merciful."

First Showings of Goldwyn's Rex Beach Picture

The Rex Beach Pictures Corporation, which made the splendid motion picture production of Rex Beach's great novel of Broadway life, "The Auction Block," has promised officials of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation that finished prints of the production will be ready for the trade in a few days.

Goldwyn plans to have enough prints for trade showings delivered to each of its branches in the United States and Canada within two weeks.

Pathe Play Has Exteriors Taken at Flagler House

ON September 23 Pathe will release another "Gold Rooster" play in which Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels have the leading parts. It is called "Under False Colors," written by Lloyd Lonergan, directed by Emile Chautard and produced by Thanhouser.

The story is most timely—dealing as it does with Russia just prior to the dethronement of the Czar. Mr. Warde plays the part of John Colton, an American millionaire. The illusion is aided by the fact that the house obtained for use as his "residence" in the picture was the residence of a real multi-millionaire—Henry M. Flagler. All the outdoor scenes were taken on the Flagler estate at Oriental Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y. Jeanne Eagels plays the "Countess Olga," a Russian nihilist.

Matrimony and Militancy in Vitagraph Comedy

"Slips and Slackers" is the Vitagraph "gloom chaser" for September 17. Lawrence Semon is assisted by the Big V riot squad which includes Joe Simberg, Earle Montgomery, Joe Basil, Pietro Aramondo and Murray Simberg.

The story tells of Mr. Slacker whose ambition to serve his country is considerably in excess of his personal valor. He picks up a card on which is the welcome enlightenment that married men are exempt. When the soldiers prepare to examine him he manages to escape.

In his flight he comes across an eligible spouse in the person of a scrubwoman. He drags his prospective better half unceremoniously to the parson where they are spliced. The soldiers arrive just as the ceremony is concluded. Mrs. Slacker subjects him to the ignominy of dishwashing, onion peeling, etc. Finally, the recoil comes and Mr. Slacker decides that war is a heavenly bliss compared to marital strife.

General Film Releases Six More Trick Comedies

General Film announces a group of six new Jaxon comedies for release beginning September 14.

All these subjects feature Jaxon's eccentric comedians. The titles are "Speed Demons," "The Collectors," "Jolly Tars," "Wild Injuns," "Deviled Crabs" and "The Triple Cross."

These are one-reel subjects of a type that have become well-identified and very popular. All the well-known people who have worked in Series No. 1 and No. 2 of these comedies appear again. In each release some highly novel tricks are introduced. Success in getting fine humor out of tricks has made this brand of pictures well known among exhibitors.

October Release for "When a Man Sees Red"

William Fox's present schedule of releases calls for the issuing of "When a Man Sees Red," the extra-reel drama, with William Farnum in the stellar role, during October, Frank Lloyd was the director.

Bathing Girls Figure—Largely—in Keystone Comedies

WITH new directors and players added to its already large staff, the Keystone Company has been in a position to complete all October productions for Triangle during August and early September.

"His Crooked Career," with the blond Keystone siren, Claire Anderson, and the character comedian, Fritz Schade, is scheduled as the first October release, the week of the 7th. Robert Milliken, who has been in pictures a comparatively short time, flashes forth.

The Keystone beauties in a fashion show will be one of the features of "Pearls and Perils," released October 14. A classic dancer, Alice Maison, who was a member of the Koslof dancers during a recent tour of the Orpheum Circuit, is among the features players who include Dora Rogers, Alatia Morton, Harry McCoy, George Hall and Lloyd Bacon.

Dale Fuller, George Binns and Maude Wayne are the comedy trio appearing in "A Hindu Hoodoo," the October 21st feature. Binns is a get-rich-quick gentleman of the Wallingford school.

Myrtle Lind and J. Dwiggins are the victims of "A Seminary Scandal," the comedy scheduled for the last week in October. They are supported by two of the Keystone feather-weights, Caroline Rankin and Martin Kinney. The Keystone Beauty Squad will be represented in this comedy by Rose Carter. Aileen Allen, the champion diver, who has won numerous medals for her swimming and fancy diving during the past few months, is another siren of the bathing scenes, which were filmed in Venice, Cal.

Antonio Moreno in "Angel Factory"

THE Pathe feature for the week of September 16 is "The Angel Factory," starring Antonio Moreno. Vitagraph Pictures, in which he has had leading parts, are "The Island of Regeneration" and "Kennedy Square." He has played on the stage with such famous stars as Mrs. Leslie Carter, Tyrone Power, Constance Collier, Wilton Lackaye and William Hawtrey.

Opposite Moreno is Helene Chadwick, who before her picture experience was one of the best-known artist's models in New York. She was the pretty adventuress in "The Last of the Carnabys."

Suzanne Willa and Margaret Greene were cast in support. Miss Willa created the part of Aggie Lynch in the original "Kick In." Armand Cortez and Francis X. Conlan are in the cast, and Laura West and Leslie Stowe contribute two characterizations.

This picture was produced by the Astra Company, under the direction of Larry McGill. It deals with a little East Side girl (Helene Chadwick), whose father (Leslie Stowe) is a drunkard, and whose mother (Laura West) is a slattern. It tells how she meets and falls in love with a rich young man (Antonio Moreno), whose hobby is his work as superintendent of a Settlement House in New York's slums. The story works up to a big punch when the hero and heroine are held for the murder of Tony Podessa, leader of a gang of toughs.

Helen Holmes, American-Mutual Railroad Girl, in New and Charming Poses

Two Dramas and Episode in Mutual Release

Margarita Fischer, Juliette Day and Helen Holmes Are Stars in Productions, All Dated for September 17

MARGARITA FISCHER in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," Juliette Day in "The Rainbow Girl," and a first episode of Helen Holmes' "The Lost Express" are released by Mutual on the same day—Monday, September 17.

Margarita Fischer after the production of "The Devil's Assistant" was ill and spent the summer recuperating. In "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up" she comes back in middy and trousers, oversized dress suit and adorable pyjamas. There are a dozen intricate and comical situations in the five reels.

Juliette Day, after the successful run on Broadway of "Upstairs and Down," early in the Spring went to the Pacific Coast to produce a series of plays for American, Mutual release, and "The Rainbow Girl" comes first. She is declared to screen well, and the five-reel story is described by Mutual as "a cracking one." Rollin S. Sturgeon directed.

"The Lost Express," the serial release for the week of September 17, has been pronounced a corking photo-novel by the reviewers who have seen the opening chapters. It opens—bing—with the mysterious disappearance of a trainload of valuable documents. A band of pirates has raided the laboratories of old General Thurston to steal his formula for granulated gasoline and the old general himself has been shot in the fight. His daughter, Helen, played by Helen Holmes, orders that the documents in his safe be removed to a safety vault in a nearby city and charters a train to take them. Between stations the whole train disappears.

"The Lost Express" will be released, a chapter at a time, for fifteen weeks. The chapters are in two reels each. The production was directed by J. P. McGowan, celebrated for his stage management of photo-melodrama, starring Helen Holmes, described as the most fearless of motion picture actresses. It was produced by the Signal Film.

The Cub comedy, "Officer Jerry," released on September 20, gives George Ovey the role of a masquerading policeman in which he goes through a series of humorous situations.

Reel Life No. 73, released the same day, carries scenes showing the making of army rifles, running an aeroplane without danger, portrays the principle of the gyroscope and animated drawings from Life.

Mutual Weekly, scheduled for September 19, includes current events up to the time the reel is assembled.

Essanay Has Three Taylor Holmes Pictures on Schedule

ESSANAY has completed the production of three pictures, in which Taylor Holmes, the stage comedian, is featured. A fourth is now in the filming process.

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," the first of this series, and, incidentally, the star's initial screen vehicle, was released Sept. 3.

The second picture, entitled "Fools for Luck," will be released October 8. This production is a screen version of Kennett Harris's story, "Talismans," which was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

It hinges on a youth's desperate attempts to woo Dame Fortune by a rigid observance of all the omens of luck, including the horseshoe, the rabbit's left hind foot, spilled salt and ladders. He meets the girl of his heart's desire, however, so his luck tokens fail to aid him.

This picture will be followed in November, with the release of "Two-Bit Seats." "The Small Town Guy" will be the title of the December releases.

In line with the policy recently announced by George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, that his organization henceforth will produce only pictures of a lighter vein in an attempt to offset the gloom of war, all Holmes pictures will be comedy-dramas. The George Kleine System will distribute.

"When False Tongues Speak" for Sept. 9

The Fox release for September 9 will be "When False Tongues Speak," in which Virginia Pearson has the chief part. The story is by George Scarborough, the noted playwright, and the direction is by Carl Harbaugh. Hardee Kirkland is the leading man.

Virginia Pearson is the Central Figure in a New Fox Production, "When False Tongues Speak"

In the William Farnum series, after "The Conqueror" will come the drama, "When a Man Sees Red," from the story by Larry Evans, a film version of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," and an adaptation of Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor."

The Fox Special Features will be issued once a week and will star George Walsh, Virginia Pearson, Gladys Brockwell, Miriam Cooper, June Caprice, Dustin Farnum and Valeska Suratt.

"The Spindle of Life" Leads Universal List

Comedies Scheduled Are "Welcome Home," "A Prairie Chicken," "Hawaiian Nuts," "Marathon Maniacs" and a Joker, "Circus Sarah"

"THE PULLMAN MYSTERY," a "Gold Seal" drama released Tuesday, September 18, heads Universal's schedule for the week of the 17th. On the previous day, released under other arrangements, "The Spindle of Life" is the regular Butterfly feature for the week.

"The Pullman Mystery" was written by Robert Von Saxmar and Jack Cunningham, Charles Swickard being the director in charge. An excellent cast, including Molly Malone, Larry Peyton, Hayward Mack and Ray Hanford is provided.

The release for Wednesday, September 19 is a two-reel L-Ko comedy entitled, "A Prairie Chicken," directed by Vin Moore. Merta Sterling plays the part of the "Chicken."

Thursday, September 20, a J. Warren Kerrigan feature in two reels, "The Right Man," by E. M. McCall and William Parker, directed by Henry McRae is released. "Hawaiian Nuts," a Joker comedy, is dated the same day. It was filmed under the direction of W. W. Beaudine.

"Marathon Maniacs," a Victor comedy, is scheduled for Friday, September 21. Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson are featured and a funny "Marathon race" is staged. Universal Screen Magazine No. 37 is scheduled for the same day.

For Saturday, September 22, a thrilling Bison drama, "The Last of the Night Riders," is the offering. As the name implies, it is a story of the night-riding days in Kentucky, in which the course of true love is ruffled by enmity between the riders and the officers of the law. "Circus Sarah," a Joker comedy, written and produced by Allen Curtis, the scene of which is laid under the "big top," completes the bill.

To Release George Ade Fables One a Week

General Film announces that the opening subjects released in the series of George Ade "Fables in Slang" are "The Twelve Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class," "The Wandering Boy and the Wayward Parents" and "What Transpires After the Wind-up."

There will be twelve of these American humorous subjects in approximately two-reel lengths, the time of run being from 25 to 30 minutes. The releases come one a week.

In "The Twelve Cylinder Speed of the Leisure Class" the story concerns the sudden rise to wealth of Mr. and Mrs. Basker, plain, homespun people of the Middle West. Particularly happy types for the Baskers have been found by Essanay in George Bean and Frankie Raymond. A cast that is fine throughout includes Rodney LaRock, Hazel Coats and William Brotherhood.

Symphony Concerts for Goldwyn Picture at Strand

A screen adaptation of Margaret Mayo's famous play by the same name, "Polly of the Circus," the first of the Goldwyn pictures to be seen in New York, will be the principal photo-dramatic feature at the Strand theatre next week.

Mae Marsh, the talented screen star, will be seen in the title role. With the initial presentation of the Goldwyn pictures the inauguration of the new Strand Symphony Orchestra will take place. Afternoon Symphony Concerts will be given every day except Saturday, Sunday and Holidays, under the direction of Adriano Ariani.

French Rebuilding War-Ruin in Pathe Film

Pictorial evidences of the progress the French are making in regaining the northern part of their land from the Germans is shown in the Official French War Pictures titled "In the Wake of the Huns," which will be released by Pathe, September 23.

These pictures are different from any other war pictures shown, because, while they show war as it really is they also show France recovering herself from the blows struck by the Germans. They depict the French army rebuilding the railroads, the bridges and the roads. They show the ruin left by the Germans, in the orchards, in the villages, in the cities and the devastation of churches and other public buildings.

The pictures show the Chateau de Coucy as it was before its occupation by the Germans. These pictures, of course, were taken before the war broke out. Then is shown the devastation wrought by the Germans when they were forced to evacuate the Chateau, and it typifies in a measure the wanton spite that is being taken out on French monuments and on France itself by her invaders.

Troops in action, troops on the march, troops moving forward to engage the enemy are shown and will arouse the enthusiasm of American audiences.

CHERRY BLOSSOM TIME IN NIPPON LAND

To the snowy austerity of Glacier Park. "Japan the Floral" (Pathe) tinted in nature's colors, is a gentle contrast. Here are rosy cherry blossoms, iris and water lilies, and one of those delightfully funny arching bridges whose outline is completed in the clear stream beneath.

Not all the boys who train for the sea look forward to a military career. Whether there is peace or war, merchant vessels must sail, and the men in command of them must be trained for their task. "Making a Merchant Marine" (Hearst-Pathe, on reel with above) shows our young sailors learning the principles of navigation, signalling, launching a lifeboat, and racing like monkeys, barefoot, up the ropeways that lead to the very top of the mast. Fine looking lads they are, and an augury of the time when our American merchant ships take a place worthy of our great country on the sea.

Happy Hooligan finds himself the centre of attention from a band of tropical cannibals and maintains his accustomed spirits with difficulty.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Don't be a slacker.

Our Boys in France Up to the Very Minute

Gaumont Rushes to America Pictures of Americans at Fighting Front for Instant Release—Magazine in Film

THE Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which will be released September 19, will contain unusual scenes of timely news interest . As the Weekly is an up-to-the-latest-minute release, it is not possible to say in advance just what happenings will appear in a number until it "goes to press."

A staff of enthusiastic news-photographers stationed all over the world, including the military cameramen of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, who are with the American expeditionary forces in France and on the battle front, insure spectators of the Mutual Weekly the earliest possible photographic advice of the march of our boys toward Berlin.

"Reel Life," the Mutual film magazine, does not show news events, but longer, fuller subjects which are current at all times. Issue No. 73, released September 20, contains three subjects which are real features:

"Running an Airplane Without Danger" shows aviators can learn to fly before they leave the earth. "Student Officers" illustrates young commanders of our new army learning up-to-date methods of modern warfare. "The Principle of the Gyroscope" is a rare, scientific article so clearly pictured that no one can see it without being entertained.

A picture of the weaving of President Wilson's portrait in fabric, and an animated drawing from America's leading humorous weekly, "Life," showing how you feel when a big car passes your "flivver," complete this highly interesting reel.

Citizen Soldiers Filmed in One of Selig's Releases

"OVER the Top to Victory" is the title of one of the latest of motion pictures by William N. Selig for release in General Film service on Monday, September 24. The production is in two reels. It shows details of the development of America's young men into soldiers. From daybreak until "Taps" are sounded, we follow the citizen soldiers through their drills and pastimes.

For release Saturday, September 29, the Selig Company announces a one-reel drama, "The Angel of Poverty Row," with Bessie Eyton as the star. Colin Campbell directed this production.

On Monday, October 1, the Selig Company releases a two-part Western drama, "The Rustler's Vindication," with Tom Mix performing many feats. Myrtle Steadman is also seen in it.

"The Witness for the State" is the title of the Selig one-reel release in General Film Service for Saturday, October 6. Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer both have parts in which they appear to great advantage.

Chinese Comedian in Screencraft Company

"Fang's Fame and Fortune" is the title of the first Charlie Fang release for Screencraft. It is a one-reel feature. According to George W. Shepard, president, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks will have to look to their laurels for the Chinese comedian is right on their heels. He is described as the possessor of a blank countenance not to be resisted.

The Screencraft Company announces the acquisition of two new members to its producing staff, Hal Benedict, formerly of the Frank Powell forces, and William Zollinger, of Thanhouser Films.

George Ridgwell Returns to Vitagraph

George Ridgwell, who has been brought back to Vitagraph by Albert E. Smith, president, is directing little Bobby Connelly in "Bobby and the Fairies," at a New Jersey location.

Mr. Ridgway a short time ago was director-general of the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

WHY IS A GOAT?

Naughty little goat babies, waxing big and strong, first on bottles and then on barren pastures where no cow could live (Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 83), grow into big goats and help Mr. Hoover and the Health Department by furnishing cheap and absolutely tuberculosis-proof milk to babies. The many pictures taken on the hilly farm where goat raising is a profitable industry are lively and attractive.

But very good little goats are translated by a goat angel into kidskin, and form the material out of which beautiful ladies make beautiful and very expensive bindings for rich men's treasured volumes. Various processes in this ancient and honorable craft are illustrated by Marguerite Lahey, who binds all of the books that go into the famous library of J. P. Morgan.

Goodrich Dirt spends a day at the shore among the Beach Nuts, and finds a German submarine much less elusive than an American mermaid.

MUSIC BY WIRELESS

It's not the initial cost of a photograph; we all know that! And how tantalizing the new records are when our purse is empty. Universal Screen Magazine No. 39 doesn't tell us how much one pays for the wireless music that comes out of what looks like a telephone with an enlarged transmitter, nor just how one orders what he wants. We suppose the menu could be telephoned in ahead, and the tunes would then emerge in the order requested. The bill would not appear until conveniently later. Perhaps Music Service Stations, Oratorios and Dance Music on Request will soon take their place in the telephone book.

Very attractive are the pictures of Mr. McFadden's children going through the exercises that have given them healthy, agile bodies and strength beyond their years. Apparatus that can be set up in any home is all that is employed.

Menhaden fishing, and pictures showing how milk is tested for the market, complete this Screen Magazine number.

FLYING ON DRY LAND

It is all very well to learn the motions (out of a textbook) and pull the levers that would make the aeroplane go up or down or to one side. All very well so long as you are on dry land and nothing to happen should you do the wrong thing. But how about it when you are actually and literally up in the air? A. C. Beech, aviator and inventor (Gaumont Reel Life No. 173), undertakes to bridge the appalling difference with a machine that while fastened securely to the ground responds to air currents and control entirely as does a flying aeroplane. While currents of air are forced now from one direction, now from another, upon the machine, the student aviator learns balance and the control of wheels and levers.

The principle of the gyroscope is illustrated in a series of pictures which are somewhat puzzling to the novice in mechanics. Here is a case where fewer pictures and more explanation would add to popular understanding and interest.

Among many views of our student officers in training, that which catches the attention shows a group of them around a relief map, fifty feet square, on which the principles of marine warfare are being illustrated.

A LONG WAY FROM CALIFORNIA

We don't know just where you will find these travelers from the Golden Gate state. But if at some point 1,500 miles from San Diego you should stub your toe against a turtle-backed raft of giant redwoods, you would know that without conveyance other than the tug that pulled them through the water they had made the long ocean journey from their native state. Mutual Weekly No. 136 shows them en route.

While the big trees are seeking sea level, other Californians aim for higher altitudes. An exciting event is the motorcycle climbing contest up the side of a 78 degree hill. There is more than one spill by the way.

California adds still another item to this issue with pictures of the black hogs being raised by Uncle Sam to add to his larder.

There are glimpses of doings on the other side of the water, and a final view of our new army going into camp at Van Cortlandt Park.

NEWPORT TO JAVA VIA AFRICA

A far cry from the marble palaces of Society's Summer Playground to the sugar plantations of a tropical island, yet so interesting is each that our visits in both places are too short. The beautiful streets and massive "cottages" of Newport have been taken by a camaraman who does full justice to their extent. And either he, or a cheerful-minded editor, has added a bit of "Coney" to show that, after all, sunshine, salt water, and good fellowship are the only essentials of midsummer happiness.

The picture covering the sugar industry of Java is a model of good camera work and intelligent editing. There are plenty of attractive outdoor scenes showing the natives planting and harvesting, and just enough of the machinery, with good close-ups, to enable us to follow the process of crushing and refining.

To the subject under treatment, the painful slowness and torturing tools of the African barber are not mirth-provoking, but to the onlooker the sight of vanity gratified at such a price is more than a little funny.

THE EVERLASTING CAT

The delightful Puss, who, with nothing but a pair of boots and his native wits, won riches, honor, and a bride for his master, comes to life in the latest of the Mo-Toy dramas (Educational Films Corporation). Never does Puss dissappoint us. When his old master dies, Puss weeps real tears, which have to be wiped away by young Master William. Yet adversity acts as a spur, and when opportunity beckons, Puss, with that royal dignity known only to cats and head waiters, advances to meet it with proud expectancy. Master William (a mean-spirited creature compared to the noble Puss) does exactly as he is bid, and so receives, as the Marquis of Barabas, the hand of the king's (or is it the duke's) daughter.

UNCLE SAM, SHIP BUILDER

We are standing in front of a towering mass whose form we cannot yet discern (Hearst-Pathe Weekly No. 72). It starts to move back. Slowly, with gathering speed, it withdraws. Then we realize that we are directly in front of a great steamer, taking its initial plunge into the sea. I have seen many launchings on the screen, but none so startling and impressive as this.

Fine views are afforded of our troops on parade in front of Buckingham Palace, London, with the King, Queen, and Lloyd-George reviewing them. With all due respect to their worthy majesties, we find the once "picayune little Welsh lawyer" by far the most interesting figure of the group.

"You can't smoke your pipe and have it too." So while the boys at the front are burning up tobacco, our dusky workers in the South are gathering and drying the leaves that are later to bring a bit of home and comfort to the tired soldier men.

AN ARMY IN THE MAKING

Fully half of Universal Current Events No. 17 is taken up by views of the great Parade of New York's 30,000 National Guardsmen on the eve of their departure for training quarters. From roofs, street corners, and from the very center of the avenue, the cameras have caught the marching men, and a splendid, inspiring sight they are. No one person could have had so comprehensive a view of the procession, nor have caught the little personal touches—the mayor, the governor, and "Teddy" exchanging enthusiastic comment, the girls running out from the sidewalks with drinks of cold water for the ranks at parade rest, the boys themselves laughing over the good dinner served at Van Cortlandt Park.

This willing and courageous army of democracy must have its trained leaders. For the moment our interest in the guardsmen and the young officers from the training camps makes us forgetful of the lads up the river who are giving up almost a year of West Point training to get into the game of real war. It is good to see the splendid body of 152 going through their famous evolutions on their beautiful parade ground, and receiving each in his turn the parchment that marks the completion of a course of training and study that in intellectual and physical standards is not surpassed in the world.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

¶ Art, in its various forms of expression, obtains a following only so long as it maintains a lead. Sophistication, more than familiarity, breeds contempt. If you permit your audiences to grow beyond the pictures you show, you lose their patronage.

¶ The most progressive managers are the first to recognize this condition as they are the first to suffer from it. The average feature, or the best feature produced in the average way, not only does not solve the problem, it makes matters worse by false promises.

¶ Yet——There are directors unhampered by producers, and a few producers unfettered by greed or tradition, who have "seen visions and dreamed dreams." Their work marks the present limit of the moving picture art. As the art advances in the future, these men will be behind the movement, and the pictures will reach the screen thru JEWEL Productions (Inc.).

¶ You are asked to see and judge these pictures on their merits—unprejudiced by what we think of them. Write to the address below for further particulars and the address of your nearest JEWEL Exchange.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Albert Scowcroft,
Pres. Ogden Picture Corp.

Scowcroft Returns to Ogden

Albert Scowcroft, the president of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, left for Ogden, Utah, last week, after having seen the establishment of the eastern executive office of that company well on its way. Mr. Scowcroft, before leaving, stated that his visit to the East was for the purpose of securing a competent eastern manager of productions and general representative.

"Our eastern organization is now completed," said Mr. Scowcroft, "and the second Lillian Walker extraordinary attraction will be made in the East; the third will be made at Ogden, Utah, the fourth at Los Angeles, and the remaining four of the first year's series will also be made in the East. I shall report to my co-directors the progress we have made and will present to them a plan of enlarged operations that will call for an extensive scheme of advertising, publicity and exploitation. We know we have made no mistake up to this point. What those plans are, however, cannot be given to the trade at this time, excepting to say that we hope to teach the photoplay public a few additional startling innovations that will convince them of the wonders that motion pictures can really perform. Several such innovations, we are advised by our attorneys, are patentable and we have already applied for patent rights on them. When I state that I hope to present to the world, through the medium of Ogden Pictures, a stereoscopic form of photography that will present the characters of the screen almost as if they were in the flesh and on the stage, you can well appreciate what I mean."

Mr. Scowcroft will return to New York when his present picture is completed.

Jewel Offers No Set Release Dates

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, INC., has made an announcement of its aims for the benefit of the trade. It states that there will be no elaborate schedule or set dates for releases.

"It may release a picture a month, two, three, or no picture in six months; ten pictures, twelve, or only eight a year—this being entirely dependent on that standard of superiority which they have set and which they will continue to maintain," says an officer of the company.

"Jewel Productions, Inc., is in no way a producing concern. Its sole activities consist of the marketing of pictures which they will buy outright, or book for the producer on percentage, solely on the basis of merit, and before any production is purchased or even considered, it must have received the unanimous stamp of public approval during its run of at least a week in a metropolitan centre, thus eliminating entirely that gambling chance which many distributors must assume in passing a production to an exhibitor.

"It is capitalized at such a figure that it is enabled to purchase outright for distribution in the United States and Canada the most notable special features obtainable, and independent producers are invited to submit their products to the Reviewing Board of the company. It is establishing and will conduct one of the most efficient and co-operative string of exchanges in the industry.

"After reviewing a great number of features, Jewel Productions, Inc., thus far, have acquired the rights to only five.

"One was made by Edwin Thanhouser, with the idea of selling on the state rights plan. Last week Jewel Production, Inc., secured the world rights to it. They offered it for the first time to the public at the Broadway theatre, New York, on September 9. It is Edward Everett Hale's 'The Man Without a Country.' Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert are the stars. Lloyd Lonergan wrote the screen version. Ernest C. Wards is the director.

"When 'Come Through' was shown on Broadway it instantly became one of the genuine picture hits of the season, and every photoplay critic in New York said so. George Bronson-Howard wrote the story and Jack Conway is the director. Jewel Productions, Inc., bought it from Universal.

"'Pay Me' is another, with Dorothy Phillips as its star. A drama of the West, big, primitive, human, put on by Joseph DeGrasse is this.

"'Sirens of the Sea,' the picture beautiful, so termed by every New York reviewer, is another for which no effort or cost was spared. And a fifth will come from Lois Weber.

"Jewel offices have been established in the principal cities of the country, and headquarters on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, New York."

To Sell Twenty-five Art Dramas on Open Market Plan

THE Standard Film Corporation, R. C. Cropper, president, to date has purchased and is distributing twenty-five Art Dramas productions, including "The Rainbow" and "The Peddler," and it is understood that these subjects will from now on be sold on the open market plan. The Standard has in preparation a book which will list these subjects and carry full details as to their box-office value, as proven by statistics compiled from results obtained with them by the exhibitors who have used them. This book will shortly be in the hands of the exhibitors of the Middle West, who will be glad of the chance to book these Art Dramas, the Standard believes.

The future policy of the Standard has not been definitely announced, but it is believed that the opinion of the Standard's executives is that the exhibitors are very much interested in the really big state rights features. The Standard with its immense distribution could easily handle a large number of state rights productions, and such a step would be most logical.

The Standard Film Corporation is the largest independent film exchange system in the country and has offices at Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Omaha and Kansas City. R. C. Cropper, president, is widely known and the sales manager, Phil L. Ryan, has come to the front with many original ideas on film distribution.

Blumenthal Enthusiastic Over "Tyranny of Romanoffs"

BEN BLUMENTHAL, president of the Export and Import Film Company, is enthusiastic over "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs," recently purchased by him. The picture, in six reels, was made under the supervision of Cines, of Rome.

The first big Russian production to be released this season is "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs," a six-reel photo-spectacle, based on the tyranny of the Czars of the great Russian Empire, which is now well on its way towards becoming one of the greatest democracies of the world.

"This picture was made in Russia by an exceptional cast of Russian players, who at the time the production was in course of construction, were under the guidance of the Czar, and were members of the National Dramatic theatre of Moscow," says Mr. Blumenthal. "In fact the ex-Czar, Nicholas Romanoff, was so incensed when he heard that his actors had depicted the tyranny of his ancestors for the screen that he refused permission for the picture to be taken out of the country or to be shown to the Russian people. Therefore, up until the time of his abdication, the reels were never allowed to leave Russian soil.

"The role of Ivan IV., the most brutal ruler the world has ever known, was portrayed by Amleto Novelli, the famous Italian actor, who was sent to Moscow where the picture was made. There he succeeded in surrounding himself with the best actors in the Empire, with the aid of the monk, Illiodor, who told the story of the brutal reign of Ivan, and, through his personal influence with the Romanoffs, selected the cast. The monk, Illiodor, assisted in the production and appears in the picture as the narrator of the story, in various interesting characteristic and dramatic poses."

Mr. Blumenthal feels that there is a great future in store for the picture in this country, for it cannot fail to be appreciated by the American. It will be a material aid in building up a sympathetic understanding of our Russian allies, for it portrays faithfully the hideous conditions which have prevailed in that country throughout the past centuries, and which have led to the final throwing off of the yoke and to the emancipation of the people and the exiling to Siberia of the late Czar Nicholas.

Illiodor, the monk exiled by the ex-Czar of Russia, recently attended a private showing of the new Russian picture, "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs." It was the first time that the completed picture had ben shown and Illiodor took a keen interest in the result. He admired the picture immensely and was not slow to express himself.

Replica of Czarina Wireless in Brenon Film

In Herbert Brenon's forthcoming production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" he has reproduced a wireless room used by the Czarina in her communications with the German Emperor. Although Mr. Brenon had received the account of its existence from Iliodor, it was only recently that he was able to find the man who had installed the wireless in the palace. And to his surprise he found that it was an American, William Hubilier, a wireless experimentor, with New York offices at 217 Centre street.

"Redemption" for Cleveland

The first of the new features that Leon D. Netter recently bought to be released in Cleveland is "Redemption," the life story of Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw. The Stillman will show it the week of September 23.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Blumenthal Is Proficient in Film Marketing

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, is applying modern efficiency methods to building up the business of the new organization. He has had fifteen years' training in European business, the last five of which have been spent in the film industry.

He never undertakes to import a picture until its statistical foreign popularity is established, and he has made a thorough investigation of its American possibilities. By an exhaustive study of the American market, and the demands of the American public, he has evolved a system of accurately judging the foreign products, and guaging the financial future for them here. The business is run precisely like a great commercial importing house, and there is consequently practically no waste.

Mr. Blumenthal is too keen a business man to simply sell his product and desert his customer. On the contrary, this is only the beginning of their transaction. After the picture is bought it is his custom to enter into an auxiliary advertising campaign for his customer, furnishing him with all the material at hand and all the advertising matter that he has received from the foreign market on that subject. This is not only good business; it is efficiency, and Mr. Blumenthal has received ample proof of the fact that it pays in the long run.

Herbert Is Lead in Jewel Film

H. E. Herbert, who plays opposite Florence La Badie, is the leading man in the Thanhouser version of the Edward Everett Hale production, "The Man Without A Country," which the Jewel Productions, Inc., brought to the Broadway theatre last week.

He made his appearance in New York about five years ago as Billie Burke's leading man in Pinero's "Mind-the-Paint-Girl," and was later seen in leading roles with Blanche Bates in "Witness for the Defense" and with Grace George in "Half an Hour."

Glimpses of a New Production, "Lorelei of the Sea"

Standard Is Making Offerings Comprehensive

The Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, is adding new features to its extensive and comprehensive program. It has Mo-Toy, Ditmer, Billy West, Christie comedies, war weeklies, Mutt and Jeff, and the Plain Dealer Magazine. Beginning Septemper 17, Art Dramas will release through it, the first picture being "Pride and the Devil," featuring Alma Hanlon. Now it has acquired the rights to several new ones. They are Norma Talmadge in "Captivating Mary Carsted" and "War as It Really Is," the pictures made by Captain Donald C. Thompson, photographer for Leslie's Weekly.

Syd Rosenthal, Ohio representative for the Standard Film Service Company, said that the Billy West comedies are going great all over the state. He recently placed them in eight Youngstown houses and twelve Akron houses. In the neighborhood of thirty Cleveland houses have contracted for them. Until recently the Standard handled the comedies only for Ohio and Kentucky, but has now succeeded in buying the Michigan rights from Paley of Detroit and they will be handled by the Detroit branch of the company.

Two Exchanges for Cleveland

Manager Mentz of the Jewell Productions Company is busy getting his furniture for his new office, 810 Columbia Building, Cleveland, but he did take a few minutes to say that they are going to release their first picture September 15. It is by George Bronson Howard and is called "Come Through."

The Exclusive Features Company, Cleveland, will open a branch in Columbus in the near future at 272 North Third street.

"Idle Wives" Is Busy Again

"Idle Wives" is back on the job. They have been idle long enough. E. T. Schmidt, Cleveland, sponsor for "Idle Wives," locked all the prints up in a nice cool, dark safe, and hied himself off for a three weeks' vacation. Mr. Schmidt said they both met a cordial welcome on their return to the city. In fact, so popular has the film become that Schmidt had to open a permanent office in Indianapolis to take care of Indiana. He will continue to look after Kentucky and Ohio himself.

Billy West Comedies Booked for Thirty Days in St. Louis

PHIL L. RYAN, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, paid a visit to the organization's St. Louis office, which resulted in the securing of several large contracts from the local theatre men on the Billy West comedies, which the Standard is handling throughout the Middle West.

Mr. Ryan, who is also advertising manager of the Standard, gives considerable credit to a persistent advertising policy for his success in selling the Billy West comedies, not only in St. Louis but in other cities served by the Standard as well.

"We have," said Mr. Ryan, "virtually created this question in the mind of the theatre-goer: Why has not my theatre manager booked the Billy West comedies? And the theatre manager is not the last person in the world to sense the existence of this question either, as is illustrated in the case of Messrs. Cella and Tate, the leading exhibitors of St. Louis, who operate the Columbia and several other theatres.

"Cella and Tate have arranged with us for the Billy West comedies for a run of fourteen days in their theatres, and Mr. Cella was frank in admitting that, aside from the value of West as a drawing card and a comedian, he was booking him because of the accumulative interest-force of advertising that we have placed in the St. Louis and surrounding papers."

Mr. Ryan placed the Billy West feature comedies in several other St. Louis houses during his stay there, giving the Standard a booking of thirty solid days on Billy West in St. Louis.

"Italian Battlefront" Increases in Popularity

"THE ITALIAN BATTLEFRONT," controlled by William Moore Patch, opened at the Garrick in Philadelphia last week to crowded houses. The opening performance was attended by the mayor and other public dignitaries, including the various foreign consuls of the Allies stationed in Philadelphia.

Audrey Burelle, Under the Personal Direction of William A. Sheer

The Chicago run at the Auditorium was extended to September 9, and arrangements have been made for the return of the pictures to the Forty-second Street theatre, New York, where they lately played to excellent business.

Mr. Patch said that the only reason the New York run had been interrupted was because of the total inability to obtain a theatre along Broadway for Labor Day week. He stated also that a return engagement would be played in Boston in the immediate future. It was intimated by Mr. Patch that so gratifying had been the support given the films wherever shown, that it was not unlikely they would be routed throughout the country like a legitimate production.

Arrangements are being made in quite a number of western states, including Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, and in the East in Baltimore, Providence, Washington, Norfolk and similar centers for showings.

In addition to the runs in Philadelphia and Chicago, the production was presented last week at the Majestic theatre, Brooklyn, for one week, and at the Avon theatre, Rochester, for a similar period.

Publicity Necessary for Film

So many varying opinions have been expressed by exhibitors and others regarding the open market situation in the Northwest that an analysis of one phase of the conditions in one state might be of interest to independent operators.

It has long been the custom for an exchange man or exhibitor to say business is good, even if it isn't. It is simply optimism that makes him do it. He knows there is a limit to success in the picture business and especially in the independent field. A picture under the present system of marketing is not a one-night stand matter; yet the great majority of the towns in Minnesota and Wisconsin, the best of the Northwest, are one-night towns.

Publicity is just as much a part of the industry as the actual film making, and publicity without the aid of a newspaper is futile. At the same time the industry seems to be having a hard time keeping up with its publicity. Sometime a press agent will arise who will weigh his publicity and extravagant words in the scales with the film and try to derive an equation. Newspaper publicity is the solid rock on which good advertising stands, and it is safe to say that any film venture in a newspaperless town will be futile.

Jewell and Dawn Exchanges Open in Detroit

The Jewell Productions, Inc., has opened temporary Detroit offices at 120 Broadway, in charge of Harry A. Bugie. Mr. Bugie later will have permanent offices in the new film building, John R and Elizabeth streets.

The Dawn Film Exchange has opened for business at 202 Owen Building, Detroit, handling Modern Mother Goose pictures and "Woman and the Beast."

Lucas Entrusted with Important Role in "Ambition"

Wilfred Lucas, for a long time with the Triangle Fine Art Films, and known as leading man in "Hell-to-Pay Austin," "Orpheus in Our Square," and lately appearing in the leading male part of "The Food Gambler," has been entrusted with a big part in "Sins of Ambition," written and directed by Ivan Abramson.

Co-starring with him we find such screen favorites as beautiful Leah Baird, charming Barbara Castleton and James Morrison, who as always in Ivan productions carries away his full share of honors. Other well-known stars appearing in the picture are, Madaline Travers, Anders Randolf and Edward Lawrence.

Zena Keefe Soon Seen in "Shame"

Zena Keefe, who in spite of her long stage career and many notable appearances in important picture productions, still enjoys the distinction of being one of the youngest stars in the theatrical firmament, will soon be seen in the leading role of the special state rights feature, "Shame," recently completed by John W. Noble.

The new Zena Keefe vehicle is in seven reels, and is said to represent ten weeks of Mr. Noble's greatest effort as a director.

Zena Keefe starred as a child, being closely identified with the success of "The Fatal Wedding" and later becoming an established vaudeville headliner. Her long engagement with the Vitagraph Comedy early made her a prominent screen star and was followed by appearances in "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "One Hour" and other features. Miss Keefe is only twenty-one years of age, having been born in San Francisco, June 26, 1896.

Musical Score for Ogden's First Release

George W. Beynon has been engaged by the Ogden Pictures Corporation to prepare a complete and original musical score for "The Lust of the Ages," the company's first production for the independent market, featuring Lillian Walker. This musical score will be distributed in connection with the advertising matter which is being prepared for this production. In connection with the advertising matter, an advance trailer will be put out showing Miss Walker in various poses. It is said that an extensive advertising campaign will be followed in the exploitation of all of Lillian Walker's features and that each release will be announced by new innovations in this respect.

Perkins Buys Art Dramas for Canada

George F. Perkins, owner of the Independent Film and Theatre Supply Company, who has exchanges in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, has bought the Canadian rights to the Art Dramas program. This is the third deal to the credit of Arthur F. Beck, general manager of Art Dramas, since he assumed his duties with the company three weeks ago.

Mr. Perkins has engaged A. Fischer, who accompanied him on the trip to New York, as general manager. Both were in conference at the Art Dramas executive offices, and matters of distribution were discussed at length.

Also accompanying Mr. Perkins and Mr. Fischer was George Rotsky, general manager of Montreal's two leading theatres, the Holman and the New Grand. Mr. Rotsky arranged to run Art Dramas in his houses.

Eugenics Basis of "Married in Name Only"

Eugenics is the basis of "Married in Name Only," the picture written and directed by Edmund Lawrence for Ivan Film Productions. "The idea of making this a eugenic drama was prompted by the fact of the great number of men rejected as physically unfit by the exemption boards who examined the drafted men for the national army," says Mr. Lawrence.

"Unquestionably eugenics are of vital importance to the nation, yes, even to the world at large, and the Ivan Film Productions has attempted to present an issue which in the minds of some might be debatable—but, surely any one seeing the film will readily realize the necessity of eugenics in their life."

Sidney B. Lust, of the Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C., distributor of the Peter Pan Film Corporation's Mo-Toy Comedies for Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina and District of Columbia, announces that these comedies have been placed in the following theatres: The Garden, Washington; Strand, Washington; Lyric, Washington; Navy, Washington; American, Hopewell, Strand, Petersburg, and American, Norfolk, Va.

"Today" and "Mad Lover" Sold to Civilization

Pathe announces that the rights for the State of New York on "Today," with Florence Reed and "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick have been sold to the Civilization-Pioneer Film Corporation.

"'Today' is the refutation of the theory which once held that a successful play suffered by transposition to the screen," says an officer of the company. "In the opinion of competent critics 'Today' as a picture is as great as the play was as a play. The punch, the vitality which Messrs. Broadhurst and Schomer put into the situations and dialogue of the spoken drama is retained and accentuated in the feature. Miss Reed adds materially to the laurels which she has gained as an emotional star of the first magnitude. It is called Ralph Ince's best work.

"'The Mad Lover' enjoys with 'Today' the distinction of being called by Harry Rapf, the producer, the two best pictures he ever made. Leonce Perret, who wrote and directed it, put into it a rare beauty and finish. Elaine Hammerstein plays opposite Mr. Warwick."

Pathe reports that the announcement that the pictures would be sold in the open market, has created a great interest among buyers and that many letters are being received from the independent operators.

Five-Reel Comedy for West

The King-Bee Film Corporation announces that it is considering the production of a five-reel comedy with Billy West as the star in a modern version of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," with Billy West playing the great lover.

No Release Date in Hoffman Exchanges

Company Will Put Feature on the Market the Moment the Prints and Advertising Material Are Ready for Runs

"ANCIENT methods of booking subjects on release dates have been done away with by Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges," declared M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of his organization, on his return a few days ago from his western trip. "From now on there will be no such thing as a release date in any of our service stations.

"Every Hoffman-Foursquare exchange will be ready at any time to supply the demands of the exhibitor, and will release any desired feature the moment prints and advertising material are ready for runs. Because of this, exhibitors need not look for release dates on any picture we control. They have merely to examine our list of subjects available and act accordingly.

"There is one thing, however, I wish to emphasize: the elimination of release dates does not mean that there will be no protection of first, second or third runs in territories or towns. Each run will be amply guarded by our division and branch managers, whose instructions to salesmen will be clear in this most important matter.

"It is my belief that this policy—which I regard as a long step in the direction of advancement—will work to the advantage of both exhibitors and public. When an exhibitor requires a certain production we have we will see to it that he gets it. The fact that some of our pictures may not suit his need of that particular moment will not prevent him from getting those of later production which he can use.

"Priority runs, as one may readily see, can and will be protected under our system as well as any other. It is simply that our method, which is new, has all the advantages of the old system and none of its disadvantages. An exhibitor interested in the tail-end feature may have it; 'the last will be first' whenever he says the word.

"My western trip was most satisfactory, and I found my managers and selling force happy because they were getting fine prices, a splendid volume of business and—because they are partners in our business; for they profit when we profit and the exhibitor profits.

"I told my men to go after volume, and that they would have no difficulty in carrying out instructions if they impressed upon exhibitors that they are getting a so-called $100 product for $50 when they buy a Hoffman-Foursquare for that price.

"And the question of price, after all, is one of the factors that has attracted exhibitors to our features. For with their quality, the prices we set down are established with the single view to allow for a small margin of profit, and only that, to us."

Essanay's Drama Based on Famous Old Feud

"Men of the Desert," fourth of Essanay's series of Western photodramas, is a picturization of the Gaylor-Norris feud, one of the most notorious of its kind in the West. The picture was staged actually on the locations of the desperate, blood-spilling fights which punctuated the quarrel.

It will be released through the K-E-S-E service September 24, and is being given trade showing now at all branch offices. Jack Gardner, Ruth King and Carl Stockdale head the cast, made up principally of cowboys and ranchmen.

Wage Conferences at Buffalo Theatres

The Buffalo Managers' Association, after several meetings, has submitted a compromise wage scale to the local musicians', operators' and stage hands' unions. The Musicians' Union has called a meeting to consider the offer. The three unions have demanded increases in wages.

Chadwick Buys "Tyranny of Romanoffs"

Ben Blumenthal, who is about to release "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs," announces that the New York and Jersey state rights have been disposed of to I. E. Chadwick, of 126 West Forty-sixth street.

"An exceptional line of advertising matter has been prepared," says Mr. Blumenthal. "The picture will first be released in New York.

"Iliodor, the mad monk, of international fame, appears with the picture, and arrangements are being made whereby Iliodor may occasionally appear in person at the large theatre where the picture will play."

The release date of "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs" will be announced shortly. Bookings can now be arranged for with Mr. Chadwick at his office.

Selig World Library Has New "Poison Squad"

In the Selig World Library, No. 16, released through General Film, August 29, are pictures of the Government arsenic squads engaged in the fight on grasshoppers. The breeding of foxes to obtain the rare "silver" fox skins is shown.

Other scenes depict the harvest in Western fields of 25,000 acres, where machines thresh out 2,000 bushels of grain daily. The bomb meter and other new Government Weather Bureau devices are filmed.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" in St. Louis and Washington

"Jack and the Beanstalk," William Fox's cinema spectacle which concluded its run on Broadway August 26, opened at the Belasco theatre, in Washington, D. C., on that date. A week later the picture will go into the Garrick theatre in St. Louis, while still showing in Washington.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw in "Redemption"

Everybody Anxious to Help, Says Warde

EVERYBODY approached by Ernest Warde, director of Thanhouser's version of "The Man Without a Country," released by the Jewel Productions and now running at the Broadway theatre, New York, seemed anxious to help make the photoplay a success, according to Mr. Warde. They realized, says Mr. Warde, that its patriotic appeal would be of value to the cause of freedom.

"I had one episode in a Red Cross headquarters, and thought the New Rochelle members would give us some advice," he says. "They surprised and delighted me by supplying furniture and paraphernalia, and sending some twenty of their youngest and most attractive nurses up to play in the scenes.

"A recruiting office was another necessity. Major Elliott Smith, in charge of the New Rochelle recruiting station, turned the place over to us, loaned us his real army and navy aides and told us to go as far as we liked. We did.

"From Washington we received word that we could use one of the old navy frigates, but were unable to do so, because they had been modernized, and you cannot fool the camera. We did, however, take some pictures on the schoolship, Newport, and were treated with the greatest courtesy by the officers there. And at Fort Slocum the regular army men made us so much at home that we really hated to go away.

"It was a pleasant picture to work on, for everybody made us feel that we were really doing something of importance for the United States, and in a manner that truly delighted us.

Cast of First Petrova Picture Announced—October Release

MADAM PETROVA is making the Biograph Studio a hive of activity as she produces the first of the pictures to be made under her personal supervision.

In this subject Mme. Petrova plays the part of a beautiful American girl, the daughter of an American Ambassador, who carries her American ideals with her to Europe, and who emerges victorious from her conflict with European statecraft. Those who have seen the scenario of the play and watched the first stages of its filming have expressed the opinion that Petrova has in this part of a democratic American girl the greatest opportunity any cinema drama has thus far afforded her for the display of her great emotional powers and for the varied subtle shades of expression and of repression which have stamped her in the public mind as a woman of intellect as well as an actress of remarkable ability.

It is practically assured that the first Petrova picture will be ready for release by the latter part of October.

Petrova has personally selected the following cast:

Thomas Holding, leading man, will play the part of the prince who succumbs to the charms of the beautiful American. Robert Broderick plays the part of an American Ambassador.

Anders Randolf, Henri Leone, Richard Garrick, Carl Dietz, Warren Cook and Anita Allen are other well known players in the cast.

"The Crisis" on Pretentious Scale in Philadelphia

Under the management of Jacob Thies of Wilkesbarre, Pa., "The Crisis" will play its first Philadelphia engagement at the Garrick, a first-class legitimate theatre, opening August 13. Many novelties will be used, among them a prologue acted by real live actors, a chorus of thirty voices and a symphony orchestra of eighteen. Two seventy-foot cars of special scenery are to be used.

A big publicity campaign is being waged and regular theatre prices will prevail. Walter G. Murray of Local 307 will be master of projection, assisted by John Stevens of the same local.

Demand for Short Subjects on Increase, Says Vandivert

R. M. VANDIVERT, Vice-President and General Manager of the Peter Pan Film Corporation, who has just returned from a trip covering the distribution centres of the country, in connection with the policy of extension of the Peter Pan organization, has made an exhaustive study of the conditions of the independent market. Mr. Vandivert is an authority on sales conditions, and his opinions on this subject are always based on a sound business judgment. In an interview in his office recently he gave an outline of the results of his investigations:

"Throughout the West and South," he said, "I found that the exhibitors wish to book short features. They are coming to see the necessity of taking the likes and dislikes of their patrons more and more into account, and the desire of the public is turning toward this type of picture.

"Added to this, the exchanges are demanding exorbitant prices for their long features, and only the large theatre owners can afford to pay them. The small exhibitor is entirely left out. Consequently, they are making up their programs from the shorter features, primarily a number of two reelers and one reelers. This is borne out by the fact that the independent exchanges are demanding more and better short subjects, and still are finding great difficulty in supplying the market with them."

Chicago House Holds "God's Man" Over a Week

"God's Man," the multiple-reel motion picture attraction, which stars H. B. Warner and which is the latest from the studios of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, enjoys the distinction of having been retained at the Studebaker theatre in Chicago for another week owing to the popular demand. Originally booked for but one week by Samuel Van Ronkel, who controls the exclusive rights for the subject in the states of Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana, the box office reports justified the management extending the engagement indefinitely.

Composer May Write March for "The Warrior"

The General Enterprises, Inc., controlling "The Warrior," which features Maciste, the giant of "Cabiria," announces that a well-known musical composer has offered to write a march based on the subject.

"The author in question has to his credit innumerable popular and standard song hits, and his name coupled with the reputation of Maciste, would make a combination almost unbeatable for purposes of advertising and exploitation," says A. H. Sawyer, who with Herbert Lubin, controls the film for United States and Canada. The proposition is under advisement and Mr. Sawyer will come to a decision this week, at which time proper announcement will be made of the author's name, and the details of the arrangement entered into.

"A playwright whose name has glittered in the electrics of the White Way more than once during the past few seasons has submitted a plan to dramatize 'The Warrior' for Broadway production next year," says Mr. Lubin. "The picture lends itself readily for adaptation into spoken drama form. However, it is not probable that negotiations will get under way regarding the playwright's plan to humanize the character of Maciste. General Enterprises, Inc., feels that 'The Warrior' in its present screen form is distinctly entertainment for the masses, and with the allotment of territorial privileges to high class state right buyers, the public will undoubtedly see the picture play in the very theatres which would house it as a spoken drama.

"A special musical setting of unusual adaptability to both large and small orchestras is being prepared and the author will hold the completion of the score temporarily in abeyance until a decision is reached regarding 'The Warrior' march. If the prominent melody writer's offer is accepted, his work will be made the dominant theme in the music score, necessitating a revision of the present orchestrations, for everything will be made to conform to a high class production."

Boston Photoplay Secures "Mormon Maid"

The Boston Photoplay Company has purchased the New England rights to the Friedman Enterprise feature, "A Mormon Maid," in which Mae Murray is the star. This is the feature which created so much discussion when it was shown at the Park theatre, New York. It deals with pioneer days in Utah and it served to bring Mae Murray into the lime light as one of the few, charming photoplay stars.

In addition to owning the New England rights to "A Mormon Maid," the Boston Photoplay Company controls the New England rights to "Joan the Woman," "The Common Law," "The Foolish Virgin," "The Price She Paid," "The Easiest Way," "War Brides," "Panthea," "The Argyle Case," "The Libertine," "Where Are My Children," "Wars' Women," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Conquest of Canaan," and "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea."

Gertrude McCoy in Person at Showing of Her Film

Patrons of the Adelphi theatre, at Eighty-ninth street and Booadway, New York, were entertained last Thursday evening just prior to the showing of "The Silent Witness," by a brief talk by the star of the Hoffman-Foursquare feature, Gertrude McCoy.

In the course of her remarks Miss McCoy paid a high tribute to the excellent work that is being done by the trade publications in the progress the motion picture industry is attaining. Said Miss McCoy:

"It would be well nigh impossible for the exhibitors to obtain even a small percentage of the fine pictures they now present if it were not for the intelligent reviews of the various subjects which appear each week in the trade publications' columns. The criticisms are tempered by a fine sense of judgment and a fairness which all players appreciate.

"When 'The Silent Witness' was being produced by the Authors' Film Company, I said to General Manager Gerald F. Bacon that if the trade reviews were favorable the artistic achievement could be set down as absolute. The result amply bears out all that I have said."

Miss McCoy will appear at the Park theatre, Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, on the evenings of September 23 and 24, when "The Silent Witness" is to be shown there.

Essanay Is Organizing for War First Aid

Essanay employes who go to war are certain of being far better provided for than the majority of the boys who will be fighting for Uncle Sam.

In the first place all are assured that their positions will be open for them when they return. Not to be outdone by the displays of co-operation on the part of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, the remainder of the employes, those who do not go to the front, have organized for the purpose of providing comforts for those representing Essanay in the great national army.

Nearly every girl or woman employed at the studio, irrespective of capacity, is doing something for the good of the cause. Preparations are being made to first supply the Essanay soldiers with material for emergency kits containing gauze and bandages which can be used as first aid equipment.

Among those who hope to pass the examinations are Thomas Guinan, F. S. Jacobs, Charles J. McGuirk, H. Tipton Steck and Andrew J. Callahan.

King-Bee Exchange for New York

Nat H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, announces that the Billy West Comedies are in such demand that the company has decided to open its own exchange for the state of New York. All the other state rights have been disposed of. King-Bee releases two comedies a month.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Longacre Plans for Alice Howell Comedies

Exchanges in Many Cities to Arrange Exclusive First Run Showings in Districts—Twelve Productions Yearly

PLANS are completed for the distribution of the Century comedies, in which Alice Howell is starred. The Longacre Distributing Company has arranged exchanges in many cities and provided booking aids and advertising.

The Longacre plan calls for the division of the territory into districts. The "district rights" will be sold in each of these divisions. The Century comedies will be furnished to exhibitors regardless of any other service which they may be receiving. Longacre has no connection whatever with any other service.

Longacre designates a district as a town, or in the case of a large city a section of the city, in which there is either one theatre which draws from the entire populace, or two or more theatres, which run in competition to each other, and to which only one of the so-called "first-run" of a picture can be sold. This constitutes the selling plan of Longacre and the prices are already scheduled in every district.

Longacre exchanges are in Atlanta, Kansas City, Salt Lake City, Boston, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, New Orleans, Dallas, Wichita, Omaha, Seattle, Portland, Washington, D. C., Toledo, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Denver, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Butte, Detroit, Oklahoma City, Cleveland, San Francisco, Spokane and Pittsburgh. Screenings are held in all of the districts in these cities.

The purpose of Longacre is to issue twelve of these comedies a year. At least ten are guaranteed. The direction of Miss Howell's pictures will be in the hands of J. G. Blystone. The first comedy is "Balloonatics."

Miss Howell is described as the only woman to have attained world-wide distinction in the "slapstick" end of the business. Though young and comely enough to win recognition in the dramatic field, she prefers to continue in the work that has won her so many admirers. Her rise has been meteoric. She is only twenty-two years old and a few years ago was working in the coast studios for as little as $5 and $9 a week.

"Her Bareback Career," one of the first of these new Century comedies, has entered upon its second week of an indefinite run at the Broadway Theatre in New York.

William Fox Theatres Will Show Goldwyns

Contract Signed by Mr. Fox, Samuel Goldfish, Charles Levine and John Zanft Covers Twenty-nine New York Houses

GOLDWYN PICTURES will be presented in every theatre in William Fox's chain of great amusement institutions

Under the terms of a contract made between Mr. Fox himself, Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn; Charles Levine, general manager of the Fox amusement enterprises, and John Zanft, managing directer of the Academy of Music and other William Fox houses, all of the productions will receive the advantages of the Fox type of showmanship in his big houses.

The Academy of Music, in Fourteenth street, will be the first house in its section of New York City to play the Goldwyn productions and introduce the famous Goldwyn stars to the audiences of downtown New York.

Managing Director Zanft at once arranged to liberally display the Goldwyn stars in his lobbies and on all of his elaborate system of electric sign locations, and he also announces that the Academy of Music orchestra, one of the finest symphony organizations in the metropolitan district, will be increased to forty-two pieces simultaneously with the first presentation of a Goldwyn picture.

William Fox's personal stamp of approval on Goldwyn pictures constitutes a significant indorsement of the quality and attraction value of these productions, for Mr. Fox is one of the ablest showmen in America, a man with an uncanny sense of foreseeing public taste and demands, besides being the head and owner of the great Fox Film Corporation, one of the most successful organizations in the motion picture industry.

Among the other big Fox houses in which Goldwyn will play are the Audubon, Crotona, Folly, and Fox's New Britain, Conn., and Fox's Springfield, Mass., houses.

Leading Theatres Booking Harold Lloyd Comedies

Harold Lloyd has become a screen comedian of the first rank, so says Hal Roach, director general of the Rolin comedies. The one and two-reel comedies featuring him are being booked by many of the leading theatres of the country who report that these comedies have real draft, so Pathe announces.

Mr. Roach reports the engagement by Rolin of a number of new players, directors and technical men. The company has shown an uninterrupted and rapid growth from the time when its produce was first placed upon the Pathe program two years ago.

Pickford Play Six Days in 17,000 Town

Manager Milton Phelos of the Strand in Elyria, Ohio, played "The Little American" for six consecutive days last week. He would have played it the seventh day, but the picture was unavailable. This is a record-breaking run for a town of 17,000.

Phelos has just concluded a deal whereby he takes over the Elyria Opera House for a long-term lease. He plans to spend about $20,000 on the theater to put it in first-class shape. Then he will put in Paramount and Artcraft pictures, showing alternately at the Opera House and Strand.

Eight Houses in Chicago Book Taylor Holmes

Manager Jenner of the Kleine Chicago office has put the Taylor Holmes' picture for Essanay, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," into eight first run houses including the Willard, Hamlin, Kenmore, Bryn Mawr, Regent, Pine Grove, Twentieth Century and Grand Oak theatres.

Holmes has just concluded a run in "Seven Chances," a Belasco production at the Cort theatre. This and his well-remembered appearance the season previously in "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," has made the comedian popular with patrons of the speaking stage in Chicago. The picture is released September 3.

Plan for Distributing All Rex Beach Pictures

"The Auction Block" and all future motion picture productions made from Rex Beach novels are to be distributed exclusively by Goldwyn.

They will be disposed of to exhibitors on contracts separate from those for the regular Goldwyn productions and will be maintained as a distinct Goldwyn unit.

Tenor Singer Added Attraction for Bluebird Picture

During the Toronto, Ont., Exposition, Shea's Hippodrome did a good business. As a special attraction, this theatre showed the Bluebird "Mother o' Mine" and the reception that this film received was a surprise to the man in the box office.

Manager McArdle helped the picture along in fine shape, by having John T. Fiddes, known as the "Canadian John McCormick" to sing the song "Mother o' Mine" at all performances. This innovation was one of the most effective stunts seen on a Toronto stage in sometime.

Territory Served by Omaha

Between 1,500 and 2,000 motion picture theatres are served with films from the exchanges of Omaha, Neb. They are in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and the Dakotas. The smallest exchange servies 500, the largest 1,200.

THE WORLD MARKET

Embargo on Export of Film a Safety Measure

On August 30 the embargo against export of films went into effect. From that date on, it is necessary for the exporter to first produce a license.

The President in his proclamation stated that public safety dictated the limiting order. "The purpose and effect of this proclamation," his statement continued, "is not export prohibition but export control. It is not the intention to interfere unnecessarily with our foreign trade, but our own domestic needs must be adequately safeguarded, and there is the added duty of meeting the necessities of all the nations at war with the German Government."

Applications for export license should be made to the Exports Administrative Board, 1435 K street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., or to the branch office at 11 Broadway, New York; or they may be filed at any of the branch offices of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, at Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco and Seattle, where ordinarily licenses will be good for sixty days and must then be renewed.

The embargo follows reports that large quantities of old film was being shipped into Germany to be converted into high explosives.

Piedmont Closes Many Deals for South America

Ivan productions, Thanhouser, Essanay and Edison features are going fast, according to Piedmont Pictures Corporation. Several South American and Far Eastern countries have been closed recently. Essanay Max Linder comedies have been signed up exclusively for several countries, while deals are going on for several others. Several contracts were closed for South American and European territories on serial pictures. Part of the Ivan features have been closed through the London office with the biggest exchanges covering the entire United Kingdom. The Scandinavian office has sold "The Gray Seal" for all of the Scandinavian countries. "The Daughter of the Gods," Fox production, sold East India. Piedmont Agents in Brazil and Argentine report that Ivan picture are finding very good application and obtain at the main theatres large box-office receipts. The chief distributing concern in Brazil and Argentina for Ivan pictures is the Süd-Amerikaner.

Monat, Prominent French Buyer, On Way Here

Man Who Introduced Many American and Italian Brands in France on Way to New York to Look Over Our Methods

PARIS, FRANCE (Special). — Monsieur Monat, manager and proprietor of "The Monat Film," Paris, France, will soon leave for New York where he contemplates thoroughly studying American film methods and, it is said, to look over the field with the view of purchasing films suitable to the French temperament.

M. Monat is one of the foremost film men in France. To him is largely due the credit for successfully introducing American films to the French market. During the past ten years he has introduced into France some of the best English, American and Italian pictures.

Some of the American productions he has brought before his public include the films of Triangle, Famous Players and Lasky. He is said to have achieved unusual success with "The Cheat," "War's Women" and "The Foundling."

M. Monat was called away from his business to "do his bit" in the trenches. On his release from the army, which took place recently, he re-established himself in his offices at 42 Rue Le Pelletier. He is now at the head of an important financial group who have decided upon the advisability of his American visit in order that he may thoroughly acquaint himself with the best American methods.

Speaking of his trip, Mr. Monat said to MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Paris correspondent:

"I am looking forward to visiting American film men with what might almost be called nervous anticipation. The universal appeal of American films has long been a source of perplexity to me, owing to the difference which must be admitted to exist between the French and American viewpoints.

"I do not expect to be able to grasp in my brief visit the remarkable processes by which the films of American producers are made to present this breadth, but I would like to be informed upon some of these processes. I say with confidence that American films can be played successfully to any people."

M. Monat's arrival in New York is uncertain. He is expected to be here some time this month.

Democratic Russia New Field for Exporter

N. S. Kaplan of Russian Art Film Corporation Sees Promise of Bright Future for Producer Here Who Studies Problem

AMERICAN motion picture producers, always on the alert for a new market for their features, will welcome the announcement of N. S. Kaplan, president of the Russian Art Film Corporation, that one very tangible result for good has already been made possible by the revolution in Russia.

Details of the democratization of the Russian stage and screen forwarded by his representative at the Moscow Art theatre convince him that a new market will be opened for American film productions, one that eventually will prove to be very profitable.

Mr. Kaplan left Moscow on the even of the revolution with more than fifty negatives which he is preparing for release to the trade in the United States. His most recent news despatches from his studios tell of the removal of the strict regulation which the government has exercised. This means, he says, that not only will the wealth of Russian artistic production be available for the entire world, but that the obstacles hitherto placed in the way of the revelation of foreign achievement will be to a certain extent eliminated.

"American films have been shown in Russia, but usually with little success," says Mr. Kaplan. "When I predict that American films will find Russia a profitable field I do not overlook the difficulties in the way of final success. Lack of appreciation of your productions may be traced to two causes. One the revolution has just eliminated. The other is up to the producer.

"The producer who is not familiar with their demands must study Russian audiences closely. As I have said so many times since I returned to the United States, several weeks ago, the Russian playgoer insists on two things; he must have a story that is based on a foundation of realism and truth, and he demands that the players be artists. If I may say so, these essentials are often lacking even in the best of American productions. Here the theatre-going public is a composite of so many different elements that a picture play generally has an appeal to one element or another.

"Russia is Russia, where the people have been forced to stifle their aspirations, to repress their human feelings and to cringe before the oppressor. This heritage of centuries has left its mark. The Russian must be educated out of his bondage, which means out of himself. When the American producer perceives this and selects carefully from such productions as he may make only those which portray real life, then Russia will acclaim him.

"It is my prediction that America will find a profitable field for its film output in Russia. The main point is the announcement that has just come to me regarding the abolition of the stage. My studio manager informs me that the artistic direction of the theatres is to be autonomous. This means that a large number of theatres will have a wider range of selection of attractions than previously. American promoters have found that even if they had a feature that found favor in Russia they soon exhausted the available theatres for presentation. This, I believe, will be changed under the new régime. The greater the opportunity given, the greater will be the possibilities of a successful exportation of the screen productions of the United States to Russia.

"A point, perhaps frivolous, is suggested by the overthrow of the monarchical form of government. Hitherto it has been well nigh impossible for many lovers of the drama to obtain seats at the theatres. The government subsidized the playhouses and in return exacted more than half the capacity in reservations for the various dignitaries of the court. The system discouraged enthusiasm for the drama among those who would have made it profitable.

"Anything that applies to the dramatic stage in Russia applies to the screen as well. There is no fine distinction there. I hope to take advantage of this situation while I am here to arrange for the exchange of the Russian Art Films and the best American photo dramas. I believe the two peoples can form an alliance of art that will be everlasting."

New Blood Infused in Universal Production

Seven New Leading Men and Five New Leading Women in the Reorganized Companies Now Hard at Work at Universal City

UNIVERSAL is bringing new talent into its companies at Universal City. In the list of leading men added are Charles West, Frank Borzage, Casson Ferguson, Hart Hoxie, Kenneth Harlan, David Morris and Hal Cooley.

West will support Zoe Rae in "The Little Pirate." Borzage is opposite Brownie Vernon in "The Twisted Soul." Ferguson is with Donna Drew in "The Ghost Girl." Hoxie will have a part in the current Edward J. Le Saint production. Morris is selected for leading comedian in Craig Hutchinson's Victor comedy company. Cooley is to be in "The Cricket" another Zoe Rae play.

Among the actresses and comediennes who have been engaged for Universal productions during the past month are Rena Rogers, Gladys Tennyson, Rosemary Theby, Beatrice Burnham and Mildred Davis.

Rena Rogers will be remembered for her characterization in Lois Weber's production, "Where Are My Children?" She will be seen shortly in the Zoe Rae vehicle, directed by Elsie Jane Wilson.

Gladys Tennyson, who will be seen in the leading feminine roles of Victor comedies during the coming months, is a Texas girl and was in Keystone and Christie comedies before joining the funmakers at Universal City.

Rosemary Theby becomes a Universalite for the second time, to be with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Beatrice Burnham, although but seventeen years of age, has had several years experience acting for the films. She will be attached to the Nestor Comedy Company.

Mildred Davis has the ingenue role in "Man of God," the production being put on by E. J. Le Saint.

Le Saint is filling a return engagement on Universal's producing staff. Harry Harvey has recently been added to the directing forces. Harvey has produced advertised serials, "Neal of the Navy," "The Red Circle," and "Who Pays."

Studio "Fire" Makes Things Lively for Jane Cowl

Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," Goldwyn Picture, takes the part of Mrs. Patricia Vanderpyl, who is rescued from a theatre fire. It is learned that the production of this scene at Fort Lee came near costing Miss Cowl serious injury.

Miss Cowl sat as calmly as she could in the swirling smoke in the interior of the theatre while Orme Caldara, her leading man, carried her rival to safety. By the time he returned for her, real flames were making her position decidedly uncomfortable.

Realizing that he must act quickly, Mr. Caldara picked up Miss Cowl and started for the door, but found his escape cut off by a sheet of flame.

A New York fireman who was there, sensing the danger, grabbed up a wet blanket he had prepared for just such an emergency, and dashing into the theatre, threw it about Miss Cowl, who, nearly strangled by smoke, was clinging to Mr. Caldara with fright, anything but make-believe.

Mr. Caldara had his coat over Miss Cowl's face and could have carried her through the fire had he not realized that her inflammable costume, which included a wide hoopskirt, could never pass through the flame without taking fire.

When Miss Cowl had been deposited in the open air she agreed with Director Trimble that the scene had been strikingly realistic.

Twenty Scenes a Second in "Tillie, Scrub-Lady"

Marie Dressler, in "Tillie, the Scrub-Lady," has succeeded in compressing 459 lightning comedy scenes into 1,800 feet of motion picture film, in producing a Goldwyn feature.

It is estimated that audiences will see twenty scenes a second.

Appoint Ontario Inspectors

The appointment of Mr. Otter Elliott as Motion Picture Theatre Inspector for the Province of Ontario, to succeed the late Inspector Robert C. Newman, has met with universal approval in film circles throughout the province. Mr. Elliott was formerly assistant to Mr. Newman and in this capacity has had a splendid training for his new position. The Government has appointed John Lennard of Toronto and a returned soldier to the position of Assistant Inspector of Theatres.

"The Narrow Trail" a "Double Debut" for "Big Bill"

William S. Hart's initial Ince-Artcraft production, "The Narrow Trail" has been finished at the Lasky studios in California, and will shortly be ready for its first public showing next month. This photoplay marks a double debut for "Big Bill," so to speak, in that it presents him for the first time as an Artcraft star and also presents his initial endeavor as an author.

The story has to do with Ice Harding, a notorious Western bandit whose beautifully marked Pinto makes him an easy mark for the members of the law who are hunting him and his gang.

"Fatty" Arbuckle as an Incautious Better

Roscoe ("Fatty") Arbuckle's latest Paramount-Arbuckle two-reel comedy, "Oh Doctor!" will be released following "His Wedding Night."

The lenslight first reveals the Doctor, in the person of the rotund Mr. Arbuckle, at the races with his wife and her brother.

The Doctor overhearing a tip given to the crook on the winner of the next race, stakes his every dollar on the horse, which comes in last. All that is saved is his wife's necklace, which she had refused to stake.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

HELEN DAHL has been engaged for a part in "The Secret of the Storm Country," in which Norma Talmadge will be seen at an early date.

Miss Dahl's experience on the legitimate includes an engagement with Rose Stahl. She also appeared in "A Pair of Sixes" and "He Came up Smiling."

On the screen she has been seen in "Mice and Men," "Molly Make-Believe," "Hidden Fires" and "Heart's Desire."

NILES WELCH will appear as leading man for Norma Talmadge in her new picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," now being filmed at the Talmadge Studio on East Forty-eighth street.

Mr. Welch has had three years experience on the legitimate stage. During his screen career he has appeared with Vitagraph, Kalem, Metro, Universal, Pathe and Famous Players.

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA having completed "The Hungry Heart," in which Pauline Frederick will appear for Paramount, has hied himself to Lake George, Atlantic City and other well known and perennially popular resorts where he will disport in the sad sea waves, rendered additionally sad by the burden they will be forced to carry when Robert drops into their briny depths.

He will be gone a month and it will be his first real rest in some time.

WILLIAM FARNUM, Virginia Pearson, George Walsh, Gladys Brockwell, Dustin Farnum and Valeska Suratt observed Labor Day by working on pictures at the various William Fox Studios in the East and the West.

June Caprice and Miriam Cooper, the other Fox stars, observed the day by not working.

JEWEL CARMEN is now at the William Fox Studios at Fort Lee, N. J. She is playing Fantine in the film version of "Les Miserables," in the making.

Immediately upon joining the Fox forces, Miss Carmen received the role opposite William Farnum in "The Conqueror," R. A. Walsh's American drama. The part of Lucy Manette in "A Tale of Two Cities" was next entrusted to her.

Other William Fox features in which Miss Carmen has appeared are "American Methods" and "When a Man Sees Red." In both of these pictures she is William Farnum's "opposite." Miss Carmen's most recent screen performance was in support of Gladys Brockwell in "To Honor and Obey?" Miss Carmen was cast as a siren.

TEN thousand sea gulls were obtained for "Queen of the Sea," Annette Kellermann's new William Fox production, because Jack Kellette, who assists John G. Adolfi in directing the picture, knew the psychology of a sea gull. Sand Beach on the Satterlee estate at Bar Harbor, Me., looked as though a snowstorm had passed over it. The grounds were white with birds.

"Oh, where did you get the pretty gulls?" Miss Kellermann asked as she saw thousands of them circling about. "And how did you ever get them here?"

"All through knowing the psychology of the sea gull," Kellette answered. "Beauties, aren't they?"

"The psychology of a sea gull?" queried the puzzled water Venus. "What is that?"

"Fish," said Kellette. He had enticed the birds from Northeast Harbor to Bar Harbor by throwing them bits of fish along the entire trip down the bay, and kept them on the estate for two days by feeding them —more fish.

MADGE KENNEDY, star in Margaret Mayo's brilliant comedy, "Baby Mine," soon to be seen throughout the world as the second of the Goldwyn productions, has found from the depths of her stage experience that men laugh more easily and more whole-heartedly than women. She says:

"Generally speaking, a man will laugh where a woman only smiles. And when a woman reaches the point of laughing a large majority of the men in an audience will be emitting side-splitting whoops."

ETHEL CLAYTON, star of World-Pictures Brady-Made, has been absent from the studio for a few days through illness. Nothing serious—just a cold—but sufficiently that her friends heard of it. She was fairly "snowed under" with flowers and messages of sympathy and regard. This made Miss Clayton feel so happy that she was almost ready to catch another cold.

Marguerite Snow

IN "Peg O' the Sea," George W. Wiley, president of Van Dyke, believes Art Dramas has a picture which will surpass Miss Sothern's previous vehicles, the most recent of which are "A Mute Appeal" and "Miss Deception."

As its title indicates, it is a story of the seacoast and affords Miss Sothern many opportunities.

She is seen as the daughter of a fisherman, whose sickness causes her to take his place. As a "fisherman" Miss Sothern can throw out a line, bring in a net and operate a boat with the best of them.

SING SING PRISON, through its Mutual Welfare League, gave Mae Marsh, Margaret Mayo and Goldwyn's big photo-spectacle, "Polly of the Circus," a tumultuous reception Sunday night.

An artist among the League membership had prepared two water-color cards of welcome—one for Miss Marsh, "the talented daughter of California," and the other for Margaret Mayo, "one of our neighbors." Miss Mayo and Edgar Selwyn (her husband) live at Harmon-on-Hudson, a few miles from the prison.

Other visitors in the party besides Mr. Selwyn included Crosby Gaige, treasurer of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Ray Cox, the comedienne, and Mr. and Mrs. Salisbury Field.

MARGUERITE CLAYTON is to be Taylor Holmes's leading woman in one of his forthcoming Essanay comedy-dramas. The title of the picture will be announced shortly.

Miss Clayton's last production was "The Night Workers," a feature in which she co-starred with Jack Gardner, the former musical comedy favorite. She won her stellar position as leading woman for "Broncho Billy" Anderson in his Western pictures, and has since starred in "The Prince of Graustark" and numerous others.

Mr. Holmes is now making his debut to filmland in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," a film version of the story of the same title by Clarence Budington Kelland which Essanay produced. He has been secured by that organization for a series of comedy-dramas.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

BOBBY CONNELLY, Vitagraph's little star, and his leading lady, tiny Aida Horton, both have automobiles. The other day in the studio yard Aida called Bobby into her car, fastened the door and ordered her father to drive on. Then she sat on Bobby. He suddenly realized that he was being kidnapped and put up one of his finest battles, the result being that he got away just as the car was starting.

The studio yard was crowded at the time and the throng gave Aida the laugh, but she vowed vengeance on Bobby and said she would steal him yet. Now Bobby is always on guard.

HARRY MOREY, Vitagraph star, asked four times for a vacation and each time was put to work on another feature. Finally, on finishing "Who Goes There?" in the recent hot spell, he was so "frazzled out" he did get two weeks, and left the city. A week later, Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, received this wire:

"Just arrived where I was going. Will take another week to get back. How about the vacation end of this trip?"

"Take two weeks vacation and disregard the traveling time," was the reply.

VIVIAN MARTIN was recently informed by Manager Charles Eyeton of the Morosco Studio that she might have a ten days' vacation and then called her up next morning to inform her that she must get ready for her next production. Result—the remaining nine days have been spent with the dressmakers.

IRVING CUMMINGS, who has long been a popular screen actor, has temporarily forsaken the silent drama in favor of the vaudeville stage, having succumbed to the blandishments of B. S. Moss. Mr. Cummings is no stranger to the speaking stage, having made his mark originally as a legitimate actor. He signed a contract with Mr. Moss recently to tour the Moss Circuit, opening at the Hamilton theatre the first three days of the week, beginning Monday, September 10. A well known writer has written a vehicle around Mr. Cummings' well known talents. The title is "Breaking Out of the Movies."

SINCE Jean Sothern contradicted the rumor of her marriage last week, letters from fans all over the country have been received by the Van Dyke-Art Dramas star. The rumor said she had married a U. S. Army officer. It gained considerable headway, and was generally believed. Miss Sothern's admirers report themselves as being greatly relieved to learn that she is still single and intends to devote her life to the screen.

LARRY PEYTON, who is opposite Marie Walcamp in "The Red Ace," Universal serial, originally was "intended" for the farm, his father being a tobacco planter in Kentucky.

With a thorough foundation in the way of elementary education, he was sent to the Colorado Agricultural College, where he started in to learn all the fine points of stable sanitation, mechanical milking and the rotation of crops.

But, notwithstanding all the lavishing of money and attention upon his agricultural education, Larry always had a hankering for the stage. So it was not strange that the embryo farmer, once beyond the influence of immediate parental association, soon found his way behind the footlights.

Before joining the Universal, Peyton appeared in productions of Kalem, Balboa, Lasky and others, and has played important roles with Marguerite Clark, Blanche Sweet and Geraldine Farrar, appearing with the last named as Gaspard in "Joan the Woman." He is fully six feet tall and of fine physique, proving the ideal hero of "The Red Ace."

Pictorial Proof to Explain Why Rubye De Remer, Former Ziegfeld Beauty, Was Chosen as the Heroine for Goldwyn's "The Auction Block"

MARY GARDEN, famous opera prima donna, has taken ship from France for home. Upon her arrival at "an Atlantic port" she will be met by officials of Goldwyn Pictures and will go at once to the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee to begin work on "Thais."

Miss Garden will not get into the swing of her work, however, until she has made a little concert tour.

In the picturization the story of the opera has been deviated from but slightly—only enough, in fact, to lift the principal character a shade above the estate of a courtesan.

NANCE O'NEILL, who is seen as the Czarina in Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs," is playing one of the leading roles in "The Wanderer," a play which opened at the Manhattan last season.

PATSY DE FORREST has a new Scripps Booth car with a very human fault—or frailty. It wants a drink every once in so often, or, not getting it, quits work. Miss De Forrest was unconscious of this weakness, in automobiles, when she invited Alice Joyce to take a "first" ride with her. The two Greater Vitagraph stars rolled out of the studio grounds in Brooklyn waving to the others in the company the parting "We don't have to ride to location in the company car." Well, they rolled about two blocks when the little car stopped. Little Miss De Forrest got out and coaxed it and then talked to it. She tried powdering its nose and putting a bit of grease paint on its chassis. Nothing doing. Then Miss Joyce alighted. She looked the car over. "Perhaps it's thirsty," she suggested. She won. There wasn't a drop of gasoline in the tank!

IRVING CUMMINGS is a worldly man. So we are led to believe by the Fox Publicity Bureau. From this emporium of clicking keys and much copy paper, the information comes that Mr. Cummings has had almost every experience in his day, except one—that is, trying to cultivate a mustache. Try it, Irving, you don't know what you're missing.

FROM the same source of information we learn that Virginia Pearson has an army of cats and dogs, each of which has been named by thousands of admiring fans. We wonder if they ever get their names mixed. We can inform Miss Pearson where she can draft a number of recruits. The ones to which we refer are trained fighters.

LESTER CUNEO, who has been seen in very villainous, villain parts on the screen, is called in the first draft. Your "heavy" experience will come in handy, Lester. Just scare 'em.

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

NEW YORK in general was thrown bodily into the outstretched arms of old George W. Pandemonium last week when Douglas Fairbanks and his troop of yelping westerners breezed in via the New York Central. He felt so glad to see the great and no less beautiful city that he embraced that stalwart member of the police force who holds sway over the traffic at Vanderbilt avenue near the station and afterwards engineered a few hand springs which eventually landed him in a waiting automobile.

MEMBERS of the Lambs Club were browsing peacefully when Doug landed in their midst; lunchers at the Plaza were leisurely satisfying the cravings of the justly celebrated inner man when the comedian started to jump up the steps and gyrate furiously in front of the camera. Everything was completely changed. Staid old Manhattan turned and looked, but before it got fully awake Doug and his troop had left again for the well known Golden State.

BENNIE ZIEDMAN was present too—naturally. Uncle Tom Geraghty had told him to seek out Jack Medeor, it seems, and Bennie did. He was not heard from for twelve consecutive hours.

THE film world is no doubt eagerly awaiting the news that George Periolat's fad is very good writing paper.

LLOYD ROBINSON informs us that everybody at the Famous Players' Studio is knitting "saucy soft short shirts for soldiers," during these highly publicized troublesome times. Robby always likes to make things more difficult.

EDDIE LINCOLN was last heard from in Maine, this being his retreat and resting place after entertaining the angry horde of newspapermen at his Berkshire home.

BERT ENNIS now has the Bennie Ziedman job of Italy and is doing publicity for "The Warrior" which stars the athletic giant, familiarly known as Maciste.

WILL some kind person inform us as to the identity of Rob Wagner of Satevepost fame?

OUR idea of wasting postage stamps is embodied in the act of the Department of Exploitation of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation which sent an invitation to witness the premier of "The Fall of the Romanoffs" to the ex-Czar of Russia and the equally ex-Czarina. Wonder whether a return ticket was enclosed.

NO week in the motion picture business would be complete without the filing and commencement of a new suit for damages, breach of contract or what not.

THE quarterly interview from Mack Sennett on the production of two reel comedies is at hand bearing all the ear marks of Paramount publicity.

NAT I. BROWN, famous for his knowlelge of what the Paralta plan really is, is cutting an enormous niche for himself in our thriving business. In some respects he is duplicating the fame of the late "Diamond" Jim Brady.

RAY BROWN, the self-confessed expert film editor of the business postcards from Washington, D. C., to the general effect that he is in the army. He will doubtless shortly be engaged in cutting the German lines with the same neatness and precision he once exercised over the films of Pathe, Universal and Metro.

PETE SCHMID proudly displays an autographed photograph of Ken McGaffey, toreador of the Lasky Studio. It is said to be the only one in existence.

WE learn straight from the Fox office that Victoria Forde of comedy fame, believes her horse to possess nine lives, or at least that he did possess that number. Reasons being that he rolled down a forty foot embankment and just escaped being hit by a train. Figuring on that percentage we once had 479, as we have many, many times just escaped being hit by automobiles and from falling into the subway.

LILLIAN WALKER is now resting up after the terrific labor of purchasing two automobiles, a farm near Saratoga Springs and a home in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn.

The lighting in the first Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus," playing at the Strand this week, is one of its outstanding features. Naturally Mae Marsh and Margaret Mayo's play come in for a deal of consideration, but the realistic effects achieved by the proper technical manipulation of the lights quite eclipse anything of a similar nature the writer has seen heretofore.

In the simplicity of the results, in their very naturalness, lies their realism. In one instance a room is shown in the evening with no lights on. Instead of the usual tint which only serves to accentuate prominent shadows, a natural dark grey tone has been produced. When the lamp is lit, only a little light is allowed to streak the room. The corners are still dark. The center of the action is in the immediate vicinity of the lamp, and as a consequence the surrounding shadows are perfect in effect. In the morning with the rise of the sun the room is flooded with light.

This is only one instance of how carefully the technical staff at work on "Polly of the Circus" must have been. Goldwyn has truly established something extraordinary in this end of production, if in no other.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

CARL LAEMMLE, president Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in Los Angeles early last week for a stay of a month at the producing city. Mr. Laemmle stated the plant was being conducted along lines that were satisfactory in every respect and that no changes would be made in the personnel of the producing organization or policy, unless it is for the betterment of the pictures. Mr. Laemmle stated the motion picture industry is in a most prosperous condition, with new theatres being built all over the country and the Canadian domain.

"We are going full tilt, day and night," said Mr. Laemmle, "and one of the objects of my visit at this time is to arrange for doubling the capacity of the laboratories at Universal City so that we will have no difficulty in meeting the ever increasing demand. We are doing an unusually large business with China, Japan, India and Australia just now, and Universal films are being transported to twenty-one different foreign lands, our agents having met with wonderful success in the countries across the seas where American films have become so popular. It is our intention to send several companies to the Orient in the near future to film on an elaborate scale a number of pictures in the atmosphere of the Far East."

Douglas Bronston is the first member of the Universal City staff to enter the officers training camp at the Presidio, at San Francisco. He left Sunday for that city. Bronston has had two years' experience in the National Guard. He has been affiliated with the motion picture industry for the past several years as scenario writer, and is the author of "Neal of the Navy," "The Grip of Evil," and others including "The Phantom Ship," now in production at U City, under the direction of Francis Ford.

More Expensive Comedies

In the future, it became known this week, that considerable expense is to be added to the making of comedies. Plans are now being made for the erection of a number of different kinds of equipment necessary for the filming of sensational stunts. These will be put to use by the comedy companies as soon as it is possible to complete them.

It is reported about Universal City that William Worthington, who for two years served as director, is to return there and direct Edith Roberts in five-reel subjects. Mr. Worthington has been in the East for several weeks, but his return to the coast is expected during the coming week.

The sixteen episode serial made under the direction of Stuart Paton, will be completed by next Tuesday, according to plans now, and the entire company will be given a vacation. During their absence finishing touches will be given to the script of the next serial to be filmed by Paton, and upon his return he will take up this work. Since January, Director Paton has caused 242,000 feet of film to be exposed and of that amount 73,000 feet of finished negative has been made.

Francis Ford, who is directing Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber in "The Phantom Ship," is at present working on the sixth episode, and "The Red Ace" company, under the direction of Jacques Jaccard, is now engaged on the eleventh episode. "The Phantom Ship" company will be delayed in production because Miss Gerber was taken ill on August 23, and an operation for appendicitis was found necessary. She is now convalescent at the Clara Barton Hospital in Los Angeles. The attack was very sudden, she being taken ill at the studio just after finishing the day's work.

William Franey and Milton Sims have passed the physical examination, and are daily expecting to be called to the army training camp. These two comedians have appeared in Universal subjects for the past two years, Franey playing practically all of that time in Joker Comedies. Plans are now being made to extend a very memorable farewell when the two men leave.

Rosemary Theby, who has been on the coast for the past several weeks, and for a time assigned to play with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in Nestor Comedies, is now to appear in Bluebird subjects to be made under the direction of Joseph DeGrasse in support of Franklyn Farnum. Her Bluebird debut will be made in "The Winged Mystery," adapted from the story by O. D. Stuart, and prepared for the screen by William Parker. A strong supporting cast is now being selected for these players.

Almost all of the mammoth north stage at Universal City was used several days this week by the western company under the direction of Jack Ford, which is filming "Bucking Broadway." The set represents ths interior of a lobster palace on the white way. Harry Carey is featured in the subject with Molly Malone playing the opposite lead, and Vester Pegg the role of the heavy. The story deals with the visit and experiences of cowboys in New York.

"The Trail of No Return," adapted from the Shelly Sutton story, is in production at Universal City under the direction of Harry Harvey, a recent addition to the producing staff. For the past two years Harvey has been affiliated with the Balboa Amusement Company as director. He will have Neal Hart and Eileen Sedgwick for leads with a supporting cast of Buck Connors, Victor Rottman and Dick La Reno.

Plays Under Production

Little Zoe Rae is the featured member of a cast appearing in "Miss Summerville's Deception," which is from an original story and scenario by Elliot J. Clawson. Gretchen Lederer, Harry Holden, E. A. Warren and Lulu Warrenton, together with others constitute the staff working under the direction of Elsie Jane Wilson.

The Nestor players, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, are to have Dona Drew as their leading woman, and her first appearance with them will be in "The Trial Engagement," which is now holding the attention of Director Roy Clements.

Director Al Santell believes he has discovered a new comedian in the person of Harry Mann, who has been playing character parts in Universal subjects, and is now producing a one-reel comedy titled "Out of the Bag," in which Mann is featured.

The Joker organization, directed by Al-

It Seems Unlikely that Margery Wilson is to Attempt Grabbing the Bullet When it Leaves the Rifle. At All Events, the Scene has Drama—From Triangle's "Mountain Dew" len Curtis, is filming "Rain and Rascality," and will next take up "A Smuggler's Revenge." Both of these subjects were written by Tom Gibson.

W. W. Beaudine, who has been with the Universal for the past two years, has resigned and accepted the direction of a Triangle Keystone Company.

Jack Wells has been assigned to the task of filming the annual Christmas story, and will begin work early in the week. The title and cast for this has not been selected.

Among the new players at Universal City this week are Harry Von Meter, who is playing in support of Mae Murray. Von Meter was formerly with the American company where he played in Mary Miles Minter and Gail Kane subjects. Jack Mower, formerly leading man for Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages," made by the Ogden Film Corporation, has been engaged by the Universal and is now working in his first story.

Fairbanks Company Travels

All members of the Douglas Fairbanks Company departed Saturday, September 1, for New York City, where they will spend three days in filming scenes necessary for the next Artcraft subject. Before their departure, all scenes necessary for "The Man from Painted Post" were finished, and this subject is now in the hands of the film editors. The company plan to be back at the Hollywood Studio in fourteen days or less.

William S. Hart is now working with the scenario department in the selection of his next Artcraft subject. "The Narrow Trail" has been in the hands of the film editors for the past week, during which time Thomas H. Ince has personally been in charge of the cutting, and at present, it is believed, the negative will be ready for shipment East within a few days. This release is set for in October, and this will give the laboratories a month on the making of prints. "The Narrow Trail," according to Mr. Hart, stars "Fritz," the Pinto pony, who appears in about half of the scenes, and is featured in fully twenty-five per cent.

And now that "Fritz" has made a name for himself in filmdom, Mr. Hart has decided he is to retire and live the life of an equine aristocrat. "The Narrow Trail," according to the owner of the spotted pony, will be his last public appearance. In the future he is to be a pal of Hart, and carry the Western bad-man to and from location, but never again is he to come before a camera.

Hold Pickford Film for Christmas

It became known at the Lasky Studio this week that the Mary Pickford film now in the making, "The Little Princess," will not be released until the week of Christmas, and will serve as the Christmas offering of Artcraft. The subject is to be finished immediately, and then work will be commenced on a new film, which will be released in October.

There have been many rumors in Los Angeles film circles this week to the effect that Miss Pickford, through her mother, had closed negotiations for her contract to become effective on the termination of her present one with the Artcraft organization. Edward Hemmer, Miss Pickford's personal manager, denied all the rumors, and stated that her present contract did not expire until June, 1918, and at this time no negotiations were pending.

The Lasky Company is this week putting down a well, which is to supply the water needs of the laboratory and producing plant, and after this system is completed, the city mains will serve only as auxiliary to the Lasky equipment, or in case of an emergency. The studio and laboratory now conduct its own power plant, and because of the supervision needed for the several departments including fire creating, police and electrical, a new office has been created to be known as service department superintendent. No one has as yet been selected for this position by Messrs. C. B. DeMille or Milton Hoffman, director general and studio manager, respectively.

With the inauguration of the new department, the plant will have a thirty-minute inspection night and day, and the fire department equipment with chemical engines will consist of five salaried firemen with fire drills practiced daily.

Three Lasky Groups at Work

But three companies are now at work at the Lasky plant, C. B. DeMille continues with the direction of Geraldine Farrar in "The Devil's Stone," and Sessue Hayakawa is working under Wm. C. DeMille.

Charles Ray, in his next picture, will appear in the part of a youth, who throughout life has been tied to his mother's apron string, and it is believed to be the best-suited character for this star. The story deals with troubles falling upon the shoulders of the youth as the result of his father's promotion work prior to his death, and concerns a Texas oil company. The youth, after many trials, finds the cause of the oil wells suddenly going dry, and recovers for the stockholders. There are many melodramatic scenes, and the leading woman character is the daughter of the boarding house keeper in the oil well district.

Triangle Editor-in-Chief

Julian Johnson is to realize his desire to return to Los Angeles, and is now en route to that city to accept the appointment of editor-in-chief of the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Johnson is a former west coast newspaperman, who for several years was dramatic critic on the most prominent papers in the West. For more than two years he served as editor of the Photoplay Magazine at Chicago, and but recently left there to enter the photoplay production field. In the new capacity Mr. Johnson will serve as critic for the Triangle and supervise scenarios and production work in connection with H. O. Davis, the general manager, and Scenario Editor Jack Cunningham. Mr. Johnson's decision on stories and the editing of films will be final.

E. Mason Hopper this week injected more realism into a scene for "The Firefly of Tough Luck" than was desired by his players. The script calls for a number of scenes of snakes, but the one that caused blood to run cold was made when Charles Gunn, leading man of the company, feigned death, and permitted a large Texas rattler to crawl across his chest, and finally curl up upon him. Hopper then completed the scene by shooting off the head of the rattler. Gunn claims he dreams of the incident by day and night. Walt Whitman and Alma Rueban are other principals in the story.

Daring "Stunt" Scene

A petrified granite side of a mountain at Hartville with a steep drop of more than 200 feet, was this week used by Roy Stewart and a giant of the cowboys' colony for fight scenes in "The Devil's Dodger." The two men are well matched for size, and in making the scene "went the limit." The struggle began on a cliff from where they fell to the petrified granite and rolled over and over down the steep incline. Stewart lived up to the script, and landed on top at the bottom. Both men received many cuts and bruises, and Director Cliff Smith pronounces it the most sensational fight he has ever witnessed for films.

A bit of the New York tenement district including buildings, streets, Casey's corner saloon, fire plugs, and Ike's Emporium, has been built at the Triangle for the Ruth Stonehouse picture, "Doing Her Bit." Several hundred will appear in many of the scenes taken on this setting. The film is spoken of as strictly a patriotic one.

Bara in Russian Role

The filming of exteriors for the second Theda Bara-Fox Picture, to be made at the Coast, was commenced this week. At the studio this film story is spoken of as "The Red Rose," the title being taken from a very prominent part the flower plays in the life of a Russian woman, enacted by Miss Bara. The story is laid in Russia at the present time, and the plot has much to do with the recent revolt and the abdication of the Czar and other royalty from office. The story was written by Richard Ordynski, a former stage director of the Metropolitan Opera House, who came to Calfornia for a vacation, and has been induced to play an important part in the photoplay, that of a Russian student. Ordynski introduced "Sumurun" in this country, and, in addition to his work at the Metropolitan, he was producing director for plays in which James K. Hackett, Percy MacKaye and other celebrities were starred.

All members of a Fox producing company, under the direction of R. A. Walsh, which includes his brother, George, were arrested at San Diego last week by United States officials, and held in custody while an examination was conducted to ascertain whether or not views of the fortifications at San Diego had been photographed. Walsh needed an incidental scene showing the whistle of the steamer going at full blast, and this scene was taken as the boat entered San Diego harbor. In the background were the fortifications, and the army officers seeing the camera pointed toward base, made an investigation of the circumstances. The incident cost the Fox Producing Company a day's time. This is another bit of misfortune that has befallen this company since it began work on the present subject. Others including injury to George Walsh when he jumped to a horse from a second-story window; another actor injured to the extent of a sprained ankle; the leading woman took sick, and George Walsh was jabbed in the eye while making a scene in a dentist's chair. The arrest is the only misfortune that has caused any loss of time to the company. Work on the play was commenced on August 13.

General Fox News

The Fox kiddie film, "The Mikado," bids fair to start a fad in Los Angeles among children who are taking part, and many who are not, for all the kiddies working under C. M. and S. A. Franklin, the directors, have come to like Japanese clothing so well, they insisted upon wearing it all the time. Little Francis Carpenter appears as Nanki-Poo, and Virginia Corbin as a Japanese maid. The company has engaged several well-educated Japanese, who aid the producers in securing proper atmosphere. Bernard McConville, in writing the script, has carefully followed the original story, and added many incidental features which will add value to it as a screen production.

The Sunshine Comedy Studio, in connection with the Fox plant, are using a number of animals from local zoos, in a story with a Western atmosphere. No name has been given to this Henry Lehrman comedy. The cast will be announced shortly.

Expensive Serial Scenes

The Signal Company are making exteriors for the eighth episode of "The Lost Express" in the vicinity of El Portal, which is the gateway to Yosemite Valley, and the producing organization went to that vicinity about 100 strong. Preparations for the scenes to be made here include the purchase of several passenger coaches, and a locomotive which will be wrecked by blowing out the side of a mountain and causing it to fall on the tracks nearby just as the train is passing. The explosion which partially wrecks the mountain, will require several hundred pounds of dynamite and black powder. The episode will receive its name from the famous mine "The Mountain King," which is near El Portal. Director J. P. McGowan having learned conditions at El Portal with respect to employing extra people, decided to take no chances in this respect, and so transported seventy-five railroad laborers from Los Angeles to the northern city, a train ride of eighteen hours.

Walthall Soon Starts Work

Henry Walthall, who was recently engaged to play leads in Paralta-made subjects, arrived in Los Angeles last Sunday and will shortly begin work under the direction of Oscar Apfel. The Walthall subjects, it is understood, are to take the place of the Kerrigan, which were to be released by Triangle, the change being made necessary by an accident which recently befell Mr. Kerrigan. It will be several months before he is able to resume work at the studio. Apfel previously has directed William and Dustin Farnum, Edmond Breeze, Edward Abeles, and produced the first pictures for the Lasky Company. The first Walthall subject will consist of seven reels, and was selected as it is specially suited for this actor. A cast of unusual character will support the star.

Wallace Worsley, formerly producer for the legitimate stage, has been engaged as director by Paralta, and will have Rhea Mitchell as his star.

Vita Serial Well Along

The Vitagraph Company, headed and directed by William Duncan, who has Carol Halloway playing opposite, is now well started on the addditional ten episodes of "The Fighting Trail" serial. The fifteenth episode which was the climax of the serial as originally made, will be remade to a more or less extent, and the company will then proceed to add sufficient thrills and situations for ten more two-reel releases, regardless of the fact that Duncan thought he had put in all the thrills that had ever been conceived when he had the original fifteen releases finished.

"The Red Prince" continues to hold the attention of the William Wolbert Company. Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman are the featured players of this subject.

Horsley Studio Notes

Since the return of David Horsley from three weeks spent in the east in the interest of Lasalida Baby Marie Osborne Pictures, Mary McDonald releases, and Selburn Comedies, he has given all his attention to productions now being completed in the film editing department.

The second Mary McDonald subject has been filmed by Director Tom Ricketts and will be ready for the market shortly. Release, however, will in all probability be withheld on all Mary McDonald subjects until the final hearing of the suit brought by the actress against the Universal for the use of the name Mary MacLaren. When this case was up for hearing several weeks ago, permanent injunction was granted against the Universal Company to prevent them from interfering with the making, selling, rental or showing of her pictures, and six weeks was granted the defendants to show further evidence of why she should not use the name of MacLaren, which was given her by the company. The final hearing of this case will be on September 12.

Giles R. Warren, director and writer of a number of years experience, who was formerly identified with Lubin, Universal, and has a number of very successful films to his credit, is to serve as manager of production at the Horsley plant. Mr. Warren has been identified with the Horsley plant for several months serving in the position of film editor, but now takes up the additional work since the resignation of Norman Manning, who left the Horsley organization to take training for the aviation corps.

Mena Executive in West

E. W. and J. G. Kuehn, president and vice-president of the Mena Film Company, have arrived in Los Angeles from Brooklyn to personally supervise the studio where the company's first subject, "By Super Strategy" is being filmed. The Mena Company has engaged Herbert Sutch, formerly assistant director at the Fine Arts Studio, to serve in the same capacity for Director Howard Gaye. The producing organization is progressing rapidly with their work on this subject which pertains to the Biblical one of Abraham and Sarah, with Frank Whitson and Amy Jerome playing the leading parts. Mabel Harvey appears in an impersonation part of the Madonna, and Fredrick Vromm takes the part of Joseph.

New Balboa Studio

The Balboa Amusement Company has let the contract for a steel and glass studio which will cost approximately $30,000. It will have a floor space, 100 x 110 square feet, and is one of the three units the company proposes to add to its plant. The others will be built at a later date. This is the first substantial enclosed studio to be built at this plant, and will make possible continuous work during the winter season on interior settings.

The filming of the sixth of a series of child pictures featuring Baby Gloria Joy, was begun this week by Sherwood Macdonald. It is titled "Little Miss Grown Up." Those made previous for this series by Macdonald are "The Locked Door," "Wanted a Brother," "Merille Mixes In," "No Children Wanted" and "Sally O'."

Joe Ryan has been engaged to play in the Horkheimer series of six pictures featuring Anita King, now being made for the Mutual under the direction of Edgar Jones. Ryan was formerly with the Vitagraph Western Company, and is reported so awkward that he is a charming kind for the role he is to play.

Stories are now being purchased for the next Jackie Saunders series of Horkheimer pictures. Four have already been secured, and the company will purchase two others. Work on this series will be commenced when Miss Saunders returns from her vacation which will be in November.

Metro. Co. Comes East

Upon the completion of "Paradise Garden" this week the Lockwood Yorke-Metro Company departed for New York by way of San Francisco. Several scenes will be taken for their next story in the Bay cities, and this will be completed in the East. It is planned the company will be absent from their Hollywood Studio three months, and before returning will make scenes for a story in New York which will be completed at the Hollywood Studio. Besides Harold Lockwood, those in the party were Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; Tonio Gaudio, cameraman; Lester Cuneo, heavy; Wiley Gibson, business manager, and Fred J. Balshofer.

During the absence of the Yorke-Metro Company, the studio will be occupied by the Romaine Super Film Company, a new producing organization financed by Salt Lake City men. Bryant Young will be director, and Tom Walsh, assistant director.

Fire Scene in Selig

Colin Campbell will cause a big fire during the coming week at the Selig Studio when the mammoth street scenes built there will be burned for night scenes in the screen adaptation of the well-known speaking stage melodrama, "The Still Alarm." Mr. Campbell has been working this week at station number one of the Los Angeles Fire Department. This is located in the oldest part of the town, and the building and equipment are of an antique character, exactly suited for use in this production. Besides Tom Santchi, Fritzi Brunette and Bessie Eyton, who play the leads, important parts are taken by Edward Peil, Frank Clark and Eugenie Besserer.

Two-reel western pictures are to be made by the Great Western Film Corporation, which was recently organized in Los Angeles, and a studio is now being built at Tucson, Arizona. R. M. Francisco is president; C. M. Stoddard treasurer, and Webster Culison, director.

Balboa Star in Vaudeville

Kathleen Clifford, since completing her work in "The Twisted Thread" serial, has been granted a six weeks' leave of absence from the Balboa Studios, and is playing an Orpheum time for that period in her new sketch, "The Smartest Chap in Town," which is a male impersonation. Harry McCoy, former Keystone director, composer of a number of musical selections, has written a patriotic song, "We'll Fight For Old Glory," which is being used in the act. McCoy acted as leader of the orchestra at the premiere of the sketch in Los Angeles.

Lois Weber Picture Ready

The first Lois Weber production, which has been given a final title of "The Time of Her Life," is reported ready for the market, and the company has completed practically all of the scenes for the second release. "The Time of Her Life," according to information given out at the studio, is more of the nature of a comedy drama than anything Miss Weber has made. The principal characters in it are two department store girls, and the play shows the influence of their respective homes upon them. Mildred Harris is the featured player, Helen Rossen the sister, and the cast includes Kenneth Harlan, Adele Farrington, Gertrude Aster, Alfred Allen, and others.

The filming of an adaptation from the Mary Roberts Rhinehart story, entitled "K," will be the second release from the Lois Weber Studio. The role of Sidney in this is played by Mildred Harris, and True Boardman, of "Stingaree", fame takes the title-role. Albert Roscoe, Hal Clements, Zella Caull, Carl Miller, George French and Jane Bernoudy are the supporting players.

Lois Weber has received a flattering offer from Sir I. Forbes Robertson, the English actor, to go to London and direct him in the film of "The Servant in the House," but, owing to present affiliations, Miss Weber is forced to decline the offer.

Fannie Ward's Contract Extended

Fannie Ward and Jack Dean departed for New York this week, where they will immediately begin work on their first subject for Pathe's "The Yellow Ticket." While in New York recently, Miss Ward made a contract with General Manager J. A. Berst for one year, and gave the Pathe management an option for a second year's service. Miss Ward was with the Lasky Company for two years, playing in a number of their most successful photodramas. Her work in "The Cheat" established for her a prominent place in screendom, as this picture was hailed by critics as one of the greatest five-reel subjects released.

Ingraham Dons Grease Paint

The David Horsley Company, headed by Mary MacLaren, making "Forbidden," under the direction of Thomas Ricketts, has now completed the interior scenes at the studio, and are now working on the exteriors. On several occasions players caused downtown people much excitement by police raids and chases and other thrilling scenes. Edward Alexander is appearing as juvenile lead opposite Mary MacLaren in this seven-reel dramatic feature.

Harish Ingraham, director of the Baby Marie Osborne picture, now being filmed, titled "The Child of M-Sieu," could not find the man he wanted to play the leading part, and so he has gone back to the make-up, in addition to operating the megaphone.

Crane Wilbur successfully performed a very hazardous act for a scene in the comedy-drama, "Devil McCare," when he leaped from an automobile seat into the window of a Pullman car when both vehicles were moving at a forty-mile clip. The story for this David Horsley release for Art Dramas concerns the romance and adventures of a Western ranch owner, who meets a manicure girl, Juanita Hansen, in a city barber shop. The girl misunderstands Devil McCare's attitude and leaves for her home in the East, and it is for Devil to reach her side in the departing train that the hazardous bit of business was injected into the film.

Fox Stars "Doubling" in Work

Working in two pictures at one time is the unique experience George Walsh enjoyed during the past week. He appeared in the finishing scenes for "The Yankee Way," filmed by Richard Stanton, with a cast which included Enid Markey as leading woman, Ray Hanford, Joseph Dowling, Ed. Sedgwick, Charles Edler, James O'Shea, Edward Cecil, Jack McDonald and others. On Monday, August 13, R. A. Walsh was ready to start a new picture in which George was to be starred, and despite the fact he was not finished with his former director, arrangements were made for him to work in two pictures at the same time by the directors arranging in advance the scenes they would make next.

Wanda Pettit, who recently came to the Coast after appearing in a number of Fox Eastern-made subjects, including "The Broadway Sport," "The Derelict," and with William Farnum in "The Doctor," has been cast to support George Walsh. This will be Miss Pettit's first appearance in Western-made Fox subjects.

A. L. Selig, publicity writer of the Fox Studio, has discovered that R. A. Walsh begins all of his productions on the 13th, at least this applies to "The Innocent Sinner" and "Betrayed," which has just been finished.

One More Theda Bara "Western"

J. Gordon Edwards, director general, has completed the Fox Theda Bara superpicture "Cleopatra," and has been granted a vacation of a week before beginning work on the next subject which will have this actress as star. Final editing of the film is now being done at the studio, and will be given Mr. Edward's attention immediately upon his return. It is stated at the studio that but one more Theda Bara picture will be made here before the actress return East, and script for this is now being given its final editing by the author and the Fox writers.

Sidney Reynolds, who recently came to Los Angeles from New York, where he was head of the Fox scenario department, to become assistant Western manager of the Hollywood Studios, has inaugurated a new policy at the studio, which provides for "a square deal" no matter who the party may be, and everyone is given a hearing by Mr. Reynolds.

C. M. and S. A. Franklin have completed the filming of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," Fox kiddie feature, and are now taking up the making of "The Mikado," in which the children will play the leading part.

The Fox Film Corporation has been given a verdict in a damage suit recently filed in Los Angeles, by parties who claimed dynamite explosions caused their cows to reduce their usual supply of milk. The case was heard in the Federal Court, and the suits aggregated $60,000.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"Polly of the Circus"

(Goldwyn—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE are many things to distinguish this first Goldwyn release from contemporaneous screen productions, Naturally Mae Marsh is the outstanding one. Its completeness of detail, its superb light effects, and its realistic settings are others. Lastly the manner in which the story holds up under eight reels is a point not to be overlooked. That it never for a moment becomes tiresome despite its precarious footage is a lasting attribute to the appeal and strength of Miss Margaret Mayo's play as adapted and arranged for the screen.

Miss Marsh again demonstrates her right to be termed the best actress of the shadow stage. A simple scene in "Polly of the Circus" is sufficient to drive that assertion home with great force. When she believes that the minister wants her to leave his home, Miss Marsh as the dismayed Polly is so expressively doleful about it that it makes the spectator almost want to cry for her. There are other episodes too, which an actress of less ability could hardly have handled with such significance as does Miss Marsh. In the lighter scenes which outnumber those of a serious nature she is equally as good. One can feel the outlet of all the pent up play of years of playless life when Polly first begins to cavort around with the village children and drag the minister into a game of blindman's-buff.

The humorous note in Miss Mayo's play is the dominant one. Polly's initiation into home life, the way in which the minister's first sermon impresses her, her pranks with the village children are episodes which can defy the gloomiest spectator to remain sour. The comedy supplied by the two old negroes is not to be forgotten either. But the thrills come in equal numbers. The accidents in the circus ring, the horse race and the final burning of the large tent and the scurrying away of the people are as dominant in their side of the dramatic scales as the humorous moments are in theirs.

The settings of the picture, designed by Everett Shinn are appropriate to the last letter. There is nothing elaborate about them yet their very plainness only serves to accentuate their realism.. The technical end of the production has also been attended to by a real artist. Such realistic light effects as the various scenes bring forth, it may safely be said, have never been paralleled on the screen before.

Worthy of considerable attention is the appearance of an entire circus in a great many of the scenes. It is a small town circus and so nothing might be lost in the way of sincerity and faithfulness of detail. The Goldywn Company hired a real one, from wagons and tents to performers. Much of the story transpires under and around the big top and the various details incident to the life of Polly and her circus companions lend unusual color to the production. It affords opportunities for both comedy and drama and neither class has been neglected.

Charles Horan was in charge of the direction and he has set a high mark for both the Goldwyn Company and himself. The supporting cast including Vernon Steele as the minister and Charles Eldridge as the faithful old clown is one of the best ever assembled.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Polly (Mae Marsh), circus rider, is injured while the show is playing in a small town and is carried to the home of the minister (Vernon Steele). It is a long time before she recovers and when at last she does she has the minister's heart in her possession. The hypocritical Deacon Strong (Charles Riegel), wants the girl removed chiefly because she has brought a little life into the town. When Polly receives word from her life-long companion of the circus, Jim (Wellington Playter), the head canvasman, that Toby (Charles Eldridge) the clown is sick, she enters her horse in the county fair and, riding him herself, wins the event by nosing out the deacon's entry. But it is too late, Toby has passed away. The beating, however, has roused the deacon's ire and, threatening to remove the minister from his position unless she leaves, he forces Polly away. It is not until the circus reaches town the subsequent year that the minister learns the whole truth of the situation and takes Polly back, despite the narrow-minded townsfolk.

George Trimble as owner of the circus, Lucile Laverne and Dick Lee as the minister's colored servants and John Carr,, Mildred Call and Stephen Carr, the principals as children, do sterling work, while Lucile Satterthwaite, J. B. Hollis, Isabel Vernon and Viola Compton complete the cast.

"Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MARY PICKFORD goes back to short dresses and juvenile ways in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," an adaptation of the book by Kate Douglas Wiggin and Charlotte Thompson. It offers her as many chances as a specially prepared vehicle might and she proceeds to display her talents in them to such winning effect that one is tempted to describe the results as her best picture. However, such an expression is bound to yearn for a hearing after each Pickford picture. It is better to say that "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" meets all expectation and belies all description, which is in the way of an apology for the remainder of the review.

A crowded Strand audience of the matinee species sat and laughed at every comedy touch and wept with equal sincerity at every pathetic moment. Miss Pickford gloriously succeeds in giving a faithful representation of an honest-to-goodness, true-to-life girl, not yet a lady but "the makings of one," as Rebecca remarks in a subtitle. The subtitles, by the way, are excellently chosen and placed. Frances Marion who made the adaptation has seen to this and her judgment has stood her in good stead in every instance. The more difficult work of forming an even and continuous scenario was done in that precise and technically faultless style that has stamped her many efforts of the past.

The various episodes comprising the greater part of the picture depicting the life of Rebecca while in the care of her straight-laced maiden aunts are filled with a humor that is irresistible Her efforts to keep off the polished floors by leaping from rug to rug, the play circus promoted by Rebecca and her companions and the selling of the soap in order to obtain a present for a poor family with the wrappers, are phases which call for rounds and rounds of laughter. And toward the end the action changes, quick as a flash, from humor to pathos when Rebecca witnesses the end of the once cranky old aunt with tears streaming down her cheeks. But to enumerate these episodes only calls to mind other less prominent but just as effective. "Rebecca" has no weary spots. It is entertaining from first to last and, like the majority of the Pickford pictures, is universal in its appeal.

Marshall Neilan, directed. Those who are acquainted with his work need not be told that every scene is artistically presented. The storm effects he has introduced are marvelous in their realism. Josephine Crowell and Mayme Kelso interpret the maiden aunts to a striking degree of perfection. Eugene O'Brien is a fitting Adam Ladd, while Marjorie Daw as Rebecca's playmate does capable work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rebecca Randall (Mary Pickford) is adopted by her aunts, Emma Jane Perkins (Mayme Kelso) and Miranda Sawyer (Josephine Crowell), to relieve her mother (Jane Wolff) who has six others to care for. Rebecca turns out to be a constant care to the old ladies and after many experiences, including one in which she meets Adam Ladd (Eugene O'Brien), they pack her off to boarding school. She returns after several years a young lady instead of a young girl. Old Miranda passes away and for a time Rebecca's happiness is clouded. But as the months roll by she learns that her mother has sold the farm at a good figure and then comes the conclusion of her romance with Adam Ladd.

Helen Eddy, Charles Ogle, Jack MacDonald, Violet Wilkey, Frank Turner, Kate Toncray and Emma Gerdes are also in the cast.

"Souls in Pawn"

(American-Mutual—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

THIS Gail Kane picture is full of interest. Any class of exhibitor can use it and profit by it. That is one of the first things that impresses one after seeing it. The story is lucid, moral-bearing, intelligently constructed and, as in so many American pictures of the past, the sets are wonderfully elaborate.

It is a war picture, but just a wee bit different than the usual war picture. The thrills and action skein center about the activities of spying. There is a lot of fictional license taken—but why not? It is a screen story and deserves the privilege as much as the printed tale would. The hero is a German spy, with Douglas MacLean admirably fitting in the role. Gail Kane is a cultured French woman of whom Fate and circumstances make a puppet. She is gotten into all sorts of life and honor endangering situations, but just as logically and cleverly is gotten out of them again.

The foundation plot of the picture is good. It has general merit. Gail Kane is required to be beautiful and intelligent as Liane Dore and she is all of that. Robert Klein, in a dual and difficult role has an excellent character bit which he handles beyond criticism. Ruth Everdale, the new little child player that American has found, comes in for a good meed of praise for her work in this production. She is talented and her work attracts immediate attention and interest.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prince Kondemarck (Douglas MacLean), chief of the German sscret service in Paris, has been ordered to secure for his assistant the most beautiful woman obtainable in aid of plans important to his Government. This is all before the advent of the Great War. Liana Dore (Gail Kane), widow of the late Sebastian Dore, killed mysteriously, agrees to serve Kondemarck upon the latter's promise to reveal to her in one year the name of the person who killed her husband. The Prince himself had killed Dore. The latter, posing as a bachelor, betrayed Kondemarck's sister in Germany. Kondemarck later killed Dore accidentally in a scuffle.

In the course of their association as spies, Liana and the Prince fall in love. Comes the war. Liana throws open her home as a hospital and herself assists as a nurse. Von Pollnitz, the cobbler and a German spy, seeking revenge on Kondemarck, who is now in Germany, denounces her as a spy. She is arrested and sentenced to ignominious death. Kondemarck returns from Germany, and using his spies rescues Liana. Then she learns that he killed her husband. She is about to betray him to the police and suffer herself when Kondemarck produces the letters showing that Dore betrayed his sister. Love joins them once again and they fly to Kondemarck's yacht and escape.

"The Little Pirate"

(Butterfly Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

LITTLE Zoe Rae is a bright and attractive figure in "The Little Pirate," a picture which is delightful so long as she is on the screen along with her fellow juvenile player, Burton Hamrick, the other member of the Captain Kid band. But the remainder of the story, the portion devoted to the grown-ups, is very commonplace and unconvincing. The old incident of the auto in which the wife and the "friend of the family" are riding breaking down in front of a roadhouse which they later find to be a notorious resort and which results in the parting of the couple is brought in and once more the danger to their little girl brings about the reunion. But the cleverness of the little star will give the picture drawing power and those portions in which she appears will compensate for the darker spots in the production. In her bare feet, with her little dress gathered about her waist, she rows, scours the "desert island" and makes herself an appealing figure. The boy is excellent. The grown-up principals do very poor work, always intensely melodramatic.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Baird (Frank Brownlee) has lost his fortune in speculation and seeks to save himself by using the securities belonging to his little daughter Margery (Zoe Rae). His wife (Gretchen Lederer) refuses to permit this. A little later he hears his wife talking over the phone to George Drake (Charles West) a friend of the family and his suspicions are aroused. She invites Drake over and when he comes the wife asks him to get Margery's securities for her. They go driving in Drake's new auto and it breaks down in front of a roadhouse into which they go for supper. They find it a notorious place and they phone the husband of their predicament. On their return to the Baird home the wife tells her husband that they went after the securities, but not of the events that happened on the way. The husband accuses her and she leaves the house. In the meantime Drake has secured the securities and leaves them on his table. A moment later they are stolen. Baird calls to ask for them and then the loss is discovered.

When little Margery finds that her mother has gone she writes her a note that all forgive her, begs her to return and then sets off to seek her mother. On the road she meets "Captain Kid" and is persuaded to join his band and search for treasure. On the island they see the butler in Drake's home burying the securities that he has stolen and recovers them. Baird has learned of his child's disappearance and finding the little one's hair ribbon at the edge of the lake goes to tell his wife of the tragedy. Then as the two pirates are starting back to the mainland their boat begins to leak and George Drake arrives just in time to save them and restore them to their parents. The securities are discovered and it is also learned that Drake is the "mysterious friend" who saved Baird from financial ruin.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Third Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE AIR PERIL," the separate title of this episode in Pathe's latest serial soars to the tremendous melodramatic heights so dear to the heart of the follower of such pictures. In the final scene Perry Mason (Leon Barry), who is developing into the most mysterious villain ever, ties Ilma (Mollie King) to a balloon and affixes a bottle of strong acid to drip and gradually eat away the rope so that she will be dashed to the ground. The heroine is truly up in the air at the end of the chapter.

The previous action has to do with further struggles for a number of the precious pearls by all parties concerned. The element of mystery is the dominating one of the serial. Ilma receives notes from two unknown personages who sign themselves Kisme and Nemesis. Creighton Hale continues as the fighting hero and Miss King continues as the equal fighting heroine.

"A Champion of the Law"

(Kalem—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"A CHAMPION OF THE LAW" is the final episode in "The Further Adventures of Stingaree." It contains a heavy fight scene containing some good thrilling action, particularly when one of the bandits rides his horse into the besieged house through a window, snatches one of the defenders and rides off with him again. Such action is seldom duplicated even in the feature Western pictures. The fight in all its details is very well done and constitutes by far the best part of the picture.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Stingaree (True Boardman) and his partner Howie (Paul C. Hurst) come to the rescue of Edna Dean (Edith Sterling) and Falkland (Edward Hearn) who are defending a house against an attack by bandits. Unknown to Stingaree, his old sweetheart Ethel (Marin Sais), has come to Australia from England, to beg for his pardon. She and the governor are also in the house. Through the efforts of Stingaree and Howie, the bandits are defeated and the bushranger is at last reunited with the girl. The governor, in recognition of his heroic service and conveniently forgetting his past offenses, pardons him.

"Flying Colors"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is action aplenty in this melodrama which is cut from material always sure-fire. William Desmond is seen first as a member of the down and out club, later as a detective and lastly as a mender of domestic ties, although as a side issue to this latter capacity he also practices the lover—and naturally he wins; scores a success in whatever he undertakes. "Flying Colors" was written by John Lynch and R. Cecil Smith and produced by Frank Borzage. Mr. Borzage has given the story an adequate production and among other things has introduced some fine night photography.

"Flying Colors" is crowded with action, as said before. Much of it is as conventional as it is sure of registering. The situation in which Brent compromises himself before his host in order to protect the honor of the latter's wife is one of strength although there will be those in every audience able to recall it as appearing in any number of past features. However, this and kindred moments which may awaken fond memories are welded together after a fine fashion and one really becomes engrossed in the progress of the action despite its worn spots.

Mr. Desmond appears to his usual heroic advantage. He makes love with a grin and fights with a grin. The supporting cast contributes appropriate work in every instance.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Brent (William Desmond), college athlete, fails in an office and finally gets a job in a private detective agency. He is commissioned to visit the house party given by Lansing (J. Barney Sherry). Valuable jewels have been missing. Lansing's wife, Ruth (Laura Sears) carries on a flirtation with Captain Drake (Jack Livingston). Drake is really the crook and is recognized and trailed by Brent as soon as he lands on the job. Brent falls in love with Ann (Golda Madien), the wife's sister, who urges him to stop Mrs. Lansing's flirtation. This Brent eventually accomplishes and later exposes Drake as the crook.

John P. Lockney, George W. Chase, Bert Offerd, Mary McIvor and Ray Jackson complete the cast.

"The Priceless Ingredient"

(First Episode "The Fighting Trail")
(Vitagraph—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

AS a first episode this is a "corker." It takes an artful director to make the initial number of a long serial anything but commonplace if it serves its real purpose and introduces the characters. "Allow me to present" and "this is so and so" are not thrilling remarks. Even the bows that go with the phrases bring no sweat to the brow.

It is therefore worth mentioning that in the first episode of "The Fighting Trail" there is a grim dash at the finish, a clash, bang and turmoil, that make the man down in front forget he is seeing but the preface to a series of short melodramas. More clever still is the handling of the suspense. The last flash on the screen leaves one gasping, thirsty for more. After all, is this not the important element, the true artistry, of the serial?

Of course the thing is illogical and in one aspect crude. What smashing melodrama is not? It is not an invitation to muse nor a reason for ponderous thought. It is meant to grab one's whole interest, grip it tight and hold it, until the end comes—and the first episode of "The Fighting Trail" does this.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, says "The Fighting Trail" is the greatest photoplay serial ever produced. Although the statement is not wholly proved in this first episode, any one who sees it will be willing to believe that Mr. Smith is telling the truth. The rest of the episodes, it is said, are outdoors. There is very little action in the open in the first one.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Gwyn (William Duncan) is to furnish the government with "The Priceless Ingredient" of powerful explosives. Hendrik Von Bleck (Walter Rodgers), agent of the Central Powers, plots to circumvent him, steals a note getting the name of Carlos Ybarra (Charles Wheelock), guardian of the ingredient. Von Bleck enlists the services of Cut Deep Rawls (George Holt) and "Shoestring" Drant (Joe Ryan), outlaws. They try to steal the plans of the mine from Ybarra, who is aided by Nan Lawton (Carol Holloway), Yaqui Joe (H. Ducrow) and Gwyn. In the gun fight that follows Ybarra is wounded and near death confesses that Nan is not his daughter, though she had up to that moment supposed she was. The outlaws get away with some of the yellow papers having to do with the mine.

"Efficiency Edgar's Courtship"

(Essanay—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A STRIKING example of how a good comedy—an extraordinarily good comedy— can be made at seemingly small cost is embodied in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," adapted from Clarence Buddington Kelland's stories which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It all seems very easy. The necessary ingredients being the good comedy and a star possessing the pleasing personality of Taylor Holmes to carry the stellar role. But here chief credit goes to Mr. Kelland whose versatility by no means neglects comedy. His Edgar is a fearless character who confronts the most embarassing situations without the proverbial batting of an eyelash and in such a matter-of-fact way that the spectator is moved time and again to burst into laughter at the sheer contemplation of such boldness. The situations—the clash of such opposite characters; in these really rest the picture's success.

Mr. Holmes interprets the role of the office efficiency expert who goes about his love affair with the same business-like manner in a most ingratiating style. He is studiously efficient enough to be funny and human enough in meeting his many obstacles to be at all times pleasantly attractive. His exceedingly expressive countenance and the varied manner in which he manipulates it stamp him as a natural comedian of the screen. And when Mr. Holmes is not busy moving in a funny situation or using his features to comical effect, there is a subtitle containing some of Mr. Kelland's original lines that answer the same laughable purpose.

It will work no harm to the picture to call attention to its plain production. All interest centers on the story and it is pleasing, rather, to note that Director L. C. Windom adhered to it, never deviating to introduce a trick of his own. Expense was even spared by casting Ernest Maupain in an insignificant role when he also handles the part of the girl's father in excellent comedy fashion. At any rate Essanay knows the value of a good story and has not attempted to paint the lily—in this case anyway. To relate its many humorous incidents in a short synopsis is impossible, but exhibitors may rest content that when the press agent and salesman grow enthusiastic over it, they are altogether justified in whatever choice of superlatives they make.

Virginia Valli is one of the most natural girls the writer has seen on the screen, while Rodney La Rock is sufficiently unobtrusive as Edgar's rival.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Edgar Bumpus (Taylor Holmes) is efficiency expert of the office. Falling in love with Mary Pierce (Virginia Valli) he goes about love making in the same way. His rival, Wimple (Rodney La Rock) has the advantage with his guitar. Edgar takes up the saxaphone and eventually out-noises Wimple. Mr. Pierce (Ernest Maupain) doesn't like Edgar, so the young man keeps sending him testimonials of himself and reminders of what may happen to his daughter providing he stop the course of true love. And Edgar finally wins out, defeats Wimple and brings around Mr. Pierce—solely by efficiency.

"War and the Woman"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AN actor impersonating President Wilson and another imagined invasion of the United States by a foreign power are the most unusual features regarding "War and the Woman," a photoplay by Phillip Lonergan starring Florence La Badie. The President is introduced merely so the secret service men may get on the track of the heroine, which is rather a menial job for the President to be dragged in for when one stops to think. And then there is always danger in representing prominent men of the day on the screen. The fact that an actor is impersonating him detracts dignity from the role and he can seldom save it from bordering on the ridiculous. The actor in question passes very well in profile but in full-face fails to create the desired impression save for the glasses.

Otherwise "War and the Woman" does very well in predicting an invasion of the United States. At times military sagacity on the part of the invaders is sadly lacking, as witness the heroine's miraculous escape with her husband under the very eyes of the enemy, but the proper mechanics to work up and retain a successful amount of suspense have been introduced and the climax is really thrilling. There are scenes in connection with the revelry of the invaders, their wining and dining with willing and unwilling women,—a flash or so of a disheveled and weeping girl emerging from a room and tottering down stairs that are not altogether pleasant, but then their realism is forceful.

Miss La Badie does most effective work in the leading part. Wayne Arey is opposite while the supporting cast accomplishes all that is asked of it. Ernest Warde directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ruth (Florence La Badie), because she is the step-daughter of Braun (Tom Brooke), a spy, has difficulty in making people believe her loyalty despite the fact that she has refused to live with him any more. Barker (Wayne Arey), an aviator, whom she met after he had fallen with his machine offers her his protection—for life. After their marriage, a foreign army invades the country.

Barker has joined the army. The invaders make the Barker residence their headquarters. Ruth after witnessing several of their atrocities succeeds in planting dynamite in the cellar. Evading the sentries she escapes to where her husband is waiting for her in his machine and shortly afterwards watches the house blown to smithereens. Afterwards the enemy is defeated.

Grace Henderson, Arthur Bower and Mr. Warde appear in other important parts.

"Polly Ann"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BESSIE LOVE is presented in a light and somewhat conventional story by J. G. Hawks and R. Cecil Smith. It has a deal of comedy in it and quite a bit of pathos at which Miss Love shines in expressing. She is introduced with the inevitable support of the kiddies with whom she has appeared so many times in the past releases, but these old standbys are dropped after the first reel and the subsequent action shows Polly Ann as slavey in a disreputable old tavern, undertaking the serious business of reforming an unwilling inebriate and restoring him to his father—with herself as wife.

The picture sets out on thoroughly interesting lines and, in fact, due to the personality of the little star and her most capable support remains so until the end. But the quite obvious character of the plot after the passing of the meridian of the footage and the exceedingly familiar makeup and actions of the principal characters deprive it of its due share of suspense. Perhaps, though, its authors realized this and substituted the wealth of pleasing situations which are apparent in the later reels. So "Polly Ann" is extremely light but withal, pleasing, specially for Miss Love's admirers. It ranks in the same class as did "The Sawdust Ring."

Roland Lee does natural and likable work as the hero, while John P. Lockney carries away all acting honors by his fine characterization of the malicious old tavern-keeper. Charles Miller directed and there seems to be no flaws evident in the finished product from the directorial point of view.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Polly Ann (Bessie Love), is taken from the poor house to serve as slavey in the tavern owned by Simpkins (J. P. Lockney). Howard Straightlane (Rowland Lee), driven from home by his father because of his nights of revelry arrives in the same country town as school teacher. A friendship springs up between the two immediately after he has rescued her from the unwelcome attentions of an actor. Later, old Straightlane discovers that Polly Ann is his long lost relative and sending for her, takes her into his home. An aspiring niece of Straightlane's forces the girl to leave saying that she is depriving Howard of his rightful heritage. So she returns but the father hastens after them and welcomes both back into his home.

William Ellingford, David Foss, Alfred Hollingsworth and Josephine Headley also appear.

"Betsy Ross"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE dramatization of the birth of the American flag is naturally quite apropos at the present time. "Betsy Ross by Henry A. Du Souchet will doubtless pull cheer after cheer, due to the recurrent introduction of the inspiring Stars and Stripes as well as to the popular pictorial ingredients which go to form the story. Aiding the flag there is the inevitable pose for "The Spirit of '76," George Washington, imposingly impersonated by a good actor; aiding the suspense of the picture there are such sure-fire touches as a duel and the last minute rescue of a supposed spy from the firing squad.

"Betsy Ross" is loaded with action from first to last, its only fault being that it is not sufficiently centralized to warrant undivided interest. A cast that is rather superfluous in numbers hinders the smooth progress of the plot to some extent. So there are certain phases that possess slightly damaging loose ends: little pieces of action that, had the scenario writer concentrated on the development of his continuity, might have been obliterated and with better results.

The production, in charge of Travers Vale and George Cowl, evidences marked attention to detail in some respects and little in others. Costumes, furnishings of rooms, etc., are in keeping with the period, but in the exteriors bits of modern roads and modern walls sometimes intrude to the detriment of the proper atmosphere. The photography is average.

Alice Brady in the title part creates an appealing character. George MacQuarrie as General Washington and John Bowers and Lillian Cook in prominent roles register to good effect. The rest of the cast with the exception of the men who appear on Washington's staff is well selected.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Betsy Ross (Alice Brady), a widow, is commissioned by General Washington (George MacQuarrie) to make the first American flag. Her old lover, Ashburn (John Bowers), believing himself guilty of murder, is living under an assumed name, while serving on the General's staff. Clarissa (Lillian Cook), Betsy's sister, is married to Vernon (Frank Mayo), an officer in the British army. When Vernon, fleeing the American sentry, begs Betsy to hide him, she does so for her sister's sake. Later however, she turns him over to Ashburn, who recognizes in him the man he thought he killed. Vernon is saved from a traitor's death by the discovery of a paper telling of his discharge from the British army.

Victor Kennard, Eugenie Woodford, Kate Lester, Justine Cuttings, Robert Forsyth, Robert Cummings, Richard Clarke and Nellie Fillmore complete the cast.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs"

(Herbert Brenon—Nine Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN visualizing the causes responsible for the decline of the Russian monarchy and subsequently its actual downfall, Herbert Brenon has attained the better results as cinema historian of the latter. It is a thrilling dramatic moment when the soldiers throw down their guns and refuse to fire on the obstinate populace, even though bidden by the Czar. The killing of Rasputin, the Czar's all-powerful advisor, is handled with marvelous skill that awakens real suspense in the pictorial telling. The final abdication of the Czar has something approaching the pathetic about it and at the first disorderly meeting of the democratic congress has all the vividness of reality. In fact, in depicting the demise of the Romanoff dynasty Mr. Brenon has produced an intense climax that stirs deeply.

Rather unfortunately, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" contains much more footage than that forming its climax. Those reels, forming what was termed the first half at the private showing, which introduce Rasputin and show him conspiring to gain his position as the Czar's confidante, which introduce the career of Iliodor, the Mad Monk, are lacking in the ordinary yet essential requisite—continuity. These first reels contain scenes and more scenes. They are extravagantly staged, with settings complete to the smallest detail, yet in coherency they are lacking. The editor, it seems, was most at fault, and yet Mr. Brenon has switched from one line of action to another, hardly allowing time for the first to penetrate even the most alert brain. It is our opinion that a skillful editor could rearrange them, eliminating here and there, and so restore a certain order of what is, at present, something closely bordering on chaos.

The much advertised Iliodor (himself) is more of a curiosity than an actor. As far as histrionic ability goes, he has not the slightest notion of expression or gesture. Perhaps he is another reason for the weakness of the first half. The action is burdened by his presence and the strength of dramatic scenes in which he appears is often reduced to what practically coincides with burlesque. The other members of the cast, headed by Edward Connelly as Rasputin, who is only guilty of the fault of overacting in a few scenes, give fitting performances. Alfred Hickman as Czar Nicholas II, Nance O'Neil as the Czarina, Conway Tearle as Prince Felix and Mlle. Ketty Galanta as Anna, Rasputin's mistress, are well cast and succeed in interpreting their characters in a manner that brings conviction to the spectator.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" is obviously an expensive production. The settings alone give evidence of that. The costumes and manners of the people tell mutely of the pains expended by Mr. Brenon and his various aides. The dignity with which Mr. Brenon has surrounded his several royal characters works to the general good of the picture. The royal characters are some of the principal characters. They move in an historical drama that hardly needs the touch of fiction and as a consequence they hold the center of the stage throughout the duration of the picture.

While, in its present state, Mr. Brenon's picture falls short of artistic perfection, there is after all the all-important box-office angle for consideration. Undoubtedly it deals with a theme of world-wide appeal and crowded houses will almost assuredly result. And pleased houses too, for the spectacular and the thrilling is present in abundance. It will, however, create even more enthusiastic audiences provided the faults which may be remedied are remedied. It is too lavish a production to be issued containing blemishes that can possibly be eliminated.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

By a career of lieing and pretending to be a prophet, Rasputin (Edward Connelly), a peasant of Russia, finally becomes the confidante of the Czar (Alfred Hickman). He predicts that the fifth child of the Czarina (Nance O'Neil) shall be a son, and his prophecy is fulfilled. Iliodor, a monk, who gains prominence by quelling an uprising by his oratorical powers, is admitted to royal circles. He is able to see through the falseness and hypocrisy of Rasputin. His licentious life disgusts him and he makes an attempt to reveal the sinner in his true colors, but Rasputin has such a hold on the Czar that Iliodor gets the worst of it. He is excommunicated and later persecuted, but escapes from the country. The Czar begins to doubt Rasputin's worth after Iliodor's attempted revelations, and to further solidify himself with the ruler the Black Monk administers a sleeping potion to the young heir and later pretends to effect his cure. Rasputin's decline commences when Anna (Ketty Galanta), his mistress and sole possessor of his secret, begins to tire of him and covet the love of Prince Felix (Conway Tearle). To appease her Rasputin agrees to attempt to betray the Prince's fiancee, the Princess Irene (Pauline Curley). He fails in his attempt and is beaten by Felix. At the outbreak of the war Rasputin allies himself with the German Kaiser (George Denueberg) and the Czarina, his cousin, who is pro-German in her sympathies. He attempts to make the Czar sign a separate peace with Germany, but for once the stronger nature of the ruler asserts itself. Prince Felix, in desperation, assassinates Rasputin, and the populace, learning that the dreaded advisor is dead, rise up, overwhelm the army and, electing leaders, cause the Czar's abdication.

Charles Craig as the Grand Duke, R. Paton Gibbs as Baron Frederick, William Shay as Theofan, Master Lawrence Johnson as the Czarevitch, W. Francis Chapin, Peter Barbierre and Mlle. Marcelle complete the cast.

"Lost in Transit"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"LOST IN TRANSIT" is probably the best George Beban picture of recent date. In it Mr. Beban assumes the role of a character comedian in practically every scene. The authors have given him no big opportunities to display his ability in handling dramatic scenes. And while his forte is pathos, "Lost in Transit" is so good in other respects there seems to be little use of crying over milk that isn't spilt and that isn't even bottled. As the Italian ragman of Kathlyn Williams' story, which Gardner Hunting prepared for the screen, the popular actor assumes a part that will doubtless place him still nearer the hearts of his admirers.

A little boy, Bob White by name, has such a prominent part that he practically deserves to be termed a co-star. In his many scenes with Mr. Beban he plays and smiles so naturally that we have a sneaking notion that the skirted sex will acclaim him as a "darling" over and over again. Helen Eddy and Frank Bennett, Vera Lewis and Henry Barrows have roles which they handle effectively.

The production is modest but realistic in every sense. The action progresses evenly, and though lacking in dramatic strength amply makes up for this omission in the way of comedy and color.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kendall (Henry Barrows), who has refused to look upon his baby boy, since two years before, thereby causing the death of his wife, finally sends for him. The servants go to the station for the child, but on the way to the house he disappears from the cab. At the same time Niccolo (George Beban) discovers a foundling in his cart. His first thought is to take him to the police station, but the little fellow proves such a cheerful companion that he decides to keep him. After a while Paolo (Frank Bennett), Niccolo's rival in love, learns that the Kendall heir is missing and informs Mrs. Flint (Vera Lewis), who is conducting the search, of Niccolo's ward. So Niccolo has to part with his charge and Mrs. Flint gets a large reward. Later, however, a beggar is run down and, dying, he confesses that the child with him is really the Kendall boy. So the other is restored to Niccolo.

"The Angel Factory"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture, a melodrama in which the principal figures are a girl of the slums and a social worker, is teeming with action and full of intense situations, so dear to the heart of every dyed-in-the-wool fan. All the conventional phrases of reviewing—"holds the interest from start to finish," "thrills upon thrills," "never a dull moment" and "builds to a smashing climax"—can be applied to "The Angel Factory," and with any added superlatives that go hand in hand with them.

Lucien Hubbard is author and Lawrence McGill directed. The picture has the usual excellent Astra finish. Particularly well is the climax handled. The light effects are excellent and a series of flashes to the various characters involved serve to plant them firmly in the spectator's mind before the shooting occurs. The subsequent unraveling of the mystery is done hastily, and so what might have been an anti-climax serves to put a good snappy ending on a picture that throughout is thoroughly strong.

Antonio Moreno and Helen Chadwick are two attractive and capable leads. Armand Cortez as the heavy is somewhat too humorous in action to be a typical villain, yet the comedy relief he provides is welcome. The rest of the cast is well selected and competent to the last degree.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Darrow (Antonio Moreno), settlement worker, provides work and a home for Florence (Helen Chadwick), who has been driven from home. By so doing he incurs the enmity of Tony (Armand Cortez), a gunman, who loves Florence. Darrow's snobbish fiancee, Betty (Margaret Greene), takes a dislike to the girl and, intending to embarrass her, invites her to come to a dance with Darrow. Her expectations, however, are not fulfilled, for Florence makes quite a hit. Tony, enraged at Florence's neglect of him, attempts to kill Darrow. From her window Florence sees him climb a pole until he is level with Darrow's office. She fires at him and he falls to the ground. But trouble arises when Darrow's revolver is found beside the dead man. Darrow is arrested. Florence's only hope in rescuing him lies in finding Sailor Bill (Francis Conlan), one of the men whom Darrow has befriended, who disappeared on the night of the murder. She discovers him just after he has been mortally wounded in a brawl. He confesses to the crime and all ends happily for the two lovers.

"An Alabaster Box"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

IN this pretty picture, abounding in striking and beautiful photographic effects, Alice Joyce has a part that must be a delight to her. She depicts a lovable character, that of Andrew Bolton's daughter. She has vivaciousness, gentleness, charm and finally intensity of emotion.

Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman's book is not exactly easy to screen, so much depends upon the detailed narrative and the descriptive. The director, Charles Withey, has avoided screen explanation, depending almost entirely on the pictures themselves to tell the story. Unfortunatly this leaves altogether too much burden, in this instance, upon the audience. It is doubtful whether those who have not read the book will ever grasp the full plot.

Marc MacDermott has a most difficult characterization in the role of Andrew Bolton, bankrupt banker, who comes forth from a long prison term shatered in mind and body, with an altogether abnormal view of the world outside. Under the strain of tremendous excitement, beset by a mob of his old townspeople, he momentarily recovers his powers and denounces the rioters, and, striving to protect his daughter, falls dead. This scene is one of the best in recent photoplays.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Andrew Bolton, the town's one big man, goes to the wall mainly because the townspeople do not back him up in a crisis. Charges of embezzlement are brought and he goes to prison. His daughter Lydia, reared by an uncle, returns with money and tries to re-create the home of her childhood, buying the old house and refitting it as far as possible with the old furnishings. Then she brings her father home. It ends in utter failure when the villagers learn his identity.

Besides the two principal characters, Lydia Orr, or Bolton, taken by Alice Joyce, and her father, Andrew Bolton (Marc MacDermott), there are the village minister, Wesley Elliott (Frank Crane); his sweetheart, Fanny Dodge (Patsy de Forrest), and her brother, Jim Dodge (Harry Ham), together with the child Lydia, acted by that adorable stage person little Aida Horton.

"A Stormy Knight"

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

"A STORMY KNIGHT" is a combination of mystery and comedy, the former predominating and the latter making a vain effort to be in the lime light. Waldemar Young did the continuity from an idea based on Jack Cunningham's story, "The Fourth Glove." Elmer Clifton directed. Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon are co-starred. It is not a typical Farnum-Vernon production because the mystery element has been attempted in such large measure as to overshadow the comedy situations which although flashed in every scene fail to impress as humorous touches. Those who enjoy mystery—never-ending mystery—on the screen will enjoy every minute that this late production of Bluebird is shown. Those who have followed the Farnum-Vernon comedy-dramas and like them for their comedy offering will not be rewarded with the same brand of comedy or the same brand of drama which this Bluebird pair are accustomed to offer. The audience will get mystery—mystery piled high on the screen, and flashes of comedy which fail to register.

The opening scenes augur well for something clear and well defined in the way of dramatic situations but as the story progresses, mystery is added to mystery until the audience is lost in its complications. There is one thing that stands out prominently and it is to the credit of th ecameraman and technical man. The photography and lighting effects registered are some of the best that have been seen in photoplay productions. The storm effects are realistically done and the night effects are wonders. In the early scenes, flashes taken above the clouds are remarkable for their picturesque views of drifting cloud-banks. In some respects this production ranks high in feature pictures. Mr. Farnum handles a difficult role with dramatic feeling but he is handicapped by complexing situations and entangled mystery. Miss Vernon is given little opportunity to act.

"Under Handicap"

(Metro—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

METRO'S late production featuring Harold Lockwood is a modern Western drama. The opening scenes are laid in the East and discloses life as it is led by the idle rich. A short reel is devoted to these scenes. From this time on the action takes place in the West, disclosing life on a ranch. Jackson Gregory made the adaptation from the novel of the same name. Fred J. Balshofer directed. Antonio Gaudio did the camera work. It was produced at Metro's West Coast studio.

This offering should meet with the approval of the exhibitor and his patrons. It is the kind of story that is enjoyed by all classes. It is told in a straightforward, convincing way and a logical climax is reached. The scenarioist, however, could have brought his action to a more sudden ending. As the production is shown, some scenes drag a bit. There is not enough material for eight reels. In six reels, "Under Handicap" would be an above-the-average feature. There are many who will enjoy every foot of the reelage as it is run because Western drama has an appealing note and the average picture lover will overlook defects in story if the Western atmosphere is present on the screen. In this offering they will get their fill. The exhibitor can show this picture and feel assured that his patrons will leave his theatre having been satisfied.

Harold Lockwood is not the right type for a typical Western part. He fails to convince when he is called upon to register strong, virile action so characteristic of the Western man. Mr. Lockwood's "make-up," if it had been made to represent the hard, deep-lined face of the man-of-the-plains rather than the matinee idol, would have helped him to a marked degree in covering up some of his failings in interpreting the Western type. As superintendent of the construction job in the West, he resembled more the matinee idol. This is due more to his "make-up" than to his action. Anna Little playing opposite Mr. Lockwood carries her part of the Western girl with true, dramatic feeling. The audience will wonder why she isn't placed more in the forefront than the background. She screens like a winner and never once overacts. She possesses a natural grace of movement that wins an audience. Lester Cuneo in a character role executes his usual good acting. William Clifford who carries a "heavy" part gives an average performance.

The photography is up-to-the-minute. Pretty much all of the action takes place in the open and the exterior scenes with some picturesque "long shots" are some of the brightest spots in the production. The scenes aboard the overland train, shown in the early reel are well done and the thrill given in this reel is introduced at the right time and with a "punch." On the whole, this Metro production is a good feature and will leave the exhibitor saying nice things about the producer, the cast and the camera man. "Under Handicap" will "go over" leaving a nice percentage behind in the box-office. Other members of a good supporting cast are W. H. Bainbridge, T. H. Bibson-Gowland and James Youngdeer.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Greek Conniston (Harold Lockwood), is the son of a Wall Street millionaire. Roger Hapgood (William Clifford) is Greek's close friend. They are both fond of the idle life in society. Greek is called to the Coast by his father. On board the overland, he is struck by the appearance of a girl as she swings herself from the saddle to the step of the train under full head. The girl gets off the train at the next station and Greek and his companion also get off. They find themselves in the heart of the West. Their money nearly gone they decide to remain and after a long ride across the plains arrive at a ranch. Greek decides to remain and asks for a job. He learns that the girl, Argyl Crawford (Anna Little), is the daughter of the rancher, Crawford (W. H. Brainbridge). Hapgood, his pal, does not want to stay but Greek persuades him and they both settle down to live the life of the Westerner.

Greek is not liked by the cowboys until he proves that he is a man by beating the ranch foreman, Brayley (Lester Cuneo) in a fist fight. Hapgood in the capacity of secretary to Anna's father, owner of the ranch (W. H. Brainbridge), conspires with a contracting firm to defeat Anna's father in his plans to get the contract to reclaim certain land in the West. Greek who has by this time shown that he is capable of doing more than riding a horse is engaged to superintend the job. At first he works under the head superintendent but later succeeds him and is given full charge. Hapgood, who is now in full sympathy with Crawford's enemies, succeeds in placing many obstacles in the way of completing the job. Greek succeeds in overcoming all these and in the end completes the contract on time and wins a bride.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

Winfield Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Company, spent four days of last week in Chicago. The Chicago Fox office was his center of gravity and he used up every minute of the four days studying present film conditions here, meeting with exhibitors and giving the Central West managers and sales-forces suggestions and instructions. He left Thursday night for Detroit.

I. Van Ronkel, manager of Bluebird Photoplays, announced last week that he will give 15 per cent. of the gross receipts taken in each week at the Playhouse theatre to the tobacco fund for the soldiers. The Playhouse is at present being conducted under Bluebird management.

Mary Mac Lane, the "filly-de-soul," whose recent writings and use of the personal pronoun in her philosophies, have brought her much fame, announced last week that she had accepted an offer of the Essanay Company to appear in a picture. It is to be a picturized version of one of her books, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me." Miss Mac Lane is at present stopping at the Blackstone Hotel.

Unity Photoplay's latest and lucky acquisition for this territory, "Babbling Tongues," has made a big hit as the result of its showing at the Ziegfeld last week. All of the local newspaper reviewers spoke well of it. Manager Mintz, of Unity, and Frank Zambreno, the president, are therefore much elated.

Lottie Pickford passed through Chicago on Thursday. She is on her way East to sign a contract with Pathe, it is said.

Omer Dowd, of the Freider Film Corporation, left Wednesday for New York, where he will spend two weeks on business.

Ralph Proctor, manager of the Standard Film Company's local offices, returned home on Wednesday last from a two weeks' vacation in the wilds of Wisconsin. He and Bryant Washburn, Essanay star, made the trip accompanied by their wives. Laying around in the shade, fishing, swimming, sleeping and eating were the principal parts of their program.

"Within the Law," held up here by Major Funkhouser, is expected to be shown in Chicago without submitting to the major's recommended and silly deletions. The local Vitagraph office has fought the case hard and on September 15 it goes before Judge Robert Crowe here, in the circuit court, for a decision on the mandamus proceedings that Vita has instituted against the restraint of the picture.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sears has been installed as publicity agent in the American Film Company's general offices here. She takes the place of Bob McKnight.

George F. Bromley, formerly connected with the local Triangle office, has been given the manager's berth in the Omaha branch office.

H. Wallick, formerly connected with the St. Louis office of Triangle, is now a member of the sales-force of the local office.

Margarita Fischer has just signed a contract with President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, and will start work in a new American picture on September 10. The name of the picture has not yet been announced.

The American theatre at Ashland Boulevard and Madison street, opened last week for the Winter season. As a new departure in its policy there will be six vaudeville acts, together with a film program.

The Wholesome Film Company finished their production, "The Penny Philanthropist," last week at the Rothacker Film Company's Studio. Manager Weisfeldt announces that 12,000 feet of film was "shot" for the picture. This will be cut down to 5,000 feet and the picture will probably be ready on September 15.

Manager Eckhardt, of the local Fox office, had several thousand folders printed last week containing the verbatim grant of injunction made by Judge Alschuler against the efforts of Major Funkhouser, censor, to stop the showing of "The Spy" here. They were distributed to exhibitors throughout the territory.

The next step toward the organizing of a new film men's club for Chicago, to take the place of the defunct Reel Fellow's Club, was made this week. A meeting was called for Monday night, September 10.

Aid Illinois Soldiers

The Citizen's Unit of Chicago, a very active recruiting organization here, presented the latest official British Government war pictures at Orchestra Hall on last Friday evening. The proceeds of the showing will go toward the purchase of extra equipment, clothing and luxuries for the boys of the First Regiment, Illinois Engineers.

"The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," is the title of the British picture shown. The United States Naval Military Band rendered a musical selection before and during the show.

Jewel Exchange to Be Established in Chicago

Leon J. Bamberger, general publicity man for the Jewel Productions, Inc., was in town last week establishing an office for the new exchange. The Jewel Company are in the field to buy and sell features.

The Chicago offices selected are on the fifteenth floor of the Consumer's building. Eli Van Ronkel, brother of Ike Van Ronkel, manager of Bluebird's office here, will be manager of the office.

Pyle Closes Many Orders for Bartolas

Charles Pyle, manager of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company's office in Chicago, returned last Wednesday from a two weeks' trip through the East, signing up contracts for Bartola organs and orchestras. Here are a few of the results of the trip:

Jake Wells, the biggest theatre man in the South, ordered a $10,000 Bartola for his Bijou theatre at Richmond, Virginia. The Royal Pastime Amusement Company of New York bought a Bartola-de-Luxe for their Regan theatre at 116th street and Lenox Avenue. The Kingsbury-Bendsley Company, operating the Rex theatre at Waltham, Mass., bought a Bartola "AA" for that house. J. H. Lake, of the Garden theatre, Iowa City, ordered a Bartola Grand for his house.

Fairbanks Drops Off in Chicago for Short While

The film press and a number of exhibitors of Chicago got an hour's glimpse of Doug Fairbanks and his company last Tuesday. A luncheon also accompanied the glimpse. On his way to New York from the coast, where he will film some scenes for his forthcoming picture, Doug and his party dropped off the train here at 11:30 o'clock on Tuesday morning. They were rushed to the Fort Dearborn Hotel, where the local management of the Paramount-Artcraft office had a luncheon spread. At 12:30 again the Fairbanks smile and its retinue said goodbye.

Besides the members of his company at the luncheon and the meeting of the film press was John Fairbanks, brother of Doug and treasurer of the Fairbanks' film interests; Mrs. Fairbanks and Douglas, Jr. Between mouthfuls of chicken salad and smiles Doug managed to express his admiration for Chicago as a film center. He also suggested that one thing that the Breezy Burg needed was a big, exclusive motion picture house. Hints from the party that he build such a house were taken seriously by him.

"Reaching for the Moon" is to be the title of Doug's next picture. Oh yes, and Bennie Zeidman was present and pulsing as usual at the stopover luncheon.

WITH greatest sorrow it becomes our painful duty to announce the death of our esteemed president, Mr. Henry J. Brock, which occurred on September 7th, 1917.

NOTICE

To Projection Machine Purchasers

WHEN BUYING A PROJECTOR BE SURE YOU GET 100 CENTS WORTH FOR EVERY DOLLAR

When you call on a theatre supply house and they tell you the MOTIOGRAPH is no good, there is a reason;

——either they are not the MOTIOGRAPH agents in their locality;

——or they are getting a larger commission on some other make of machine.

For your good money you want the best value possible; insist on a MOTIOGRAPH.

(A recent conversation between purchaser and dealer)

Purchaser—Good Morning. I want to buy a MOTIOGRAPH.

Dealer—I can sell you one, but don't you want to buy a———?

Purchaser—No, everybody is talking about the superiority of the MOTIOGRAPH and I want one.

Dealer—Well I can sell it, but I won't guarantee it.

Purchaser—Does not the factory guarantee it?

Dealer—Yes, but—Well, I will order it direct from the factory, but remember, there are so many of these machines being ordered now that the factory can't make prompt delivery, so you had better take this other make.

Purchaser—No, everybody says they give a guarantee and good service. Tell them to rush the order, for you can't sell me any other make.

It is true, our orders are heavier than ever before, but with our big force working overtime we are able to make early deliveries.

Insist upon your next projector being a MOTIOGRAPH. If your dealer suggests some other make write to the factory.

Remember the MOTIOGRAPH is fully guaranteed and is the biggest selling machine today.

12° Projection Angle

AT the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held in Chicago, a standard was adopted and recommended to the trade which is of the greatest possible value to the future of motion pictures.

This standard is the fixing of the maximum possible angle of projection, in order that the result on the screen may be as near as possible 100 per cent. This angle was decided upon and fixed with a maximum of 12 degrees. In other words, the angle formed by the projection rays to the center of the screen and a perpendicular from the screen at that point shall not exceed 12 degrees.

Theatre owners today are complaining because in many instances patronage is falling off. This is natural, but can be obviated. We have carried on a campaign through the NEWS for better physical film conditions, as one of the essential remedies for the present trouble. We now bring up another—distortion on the screen.

DR. HERMANN KELLNER of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, who took this matter up in detail at the Chicago meeting, showed diagrams actually proving that pictures thrown upon the screen at a greater angle than the 12 degrees standard set are decidedly detrimental to the business. Representatives of machine manufacturing companies who were also present submitted actual proof of this same condition.

We know that a campaign on this point will not be upheld by architects who do not care for anything but their own reputation in obtaining a beautiful interior. It makes no difference to them whether the theatre is patronized or not. If the house does not pay they blame it to poor management, yet the management may be the best in the world and the pictures the best obtainable.

We do not wish to minimize the advantages in proper architectural design and beauty, but we do wish to impress upon the minds of the theatre men the fact that they are selling a definite commodity to the public, namely, the picture on the screen, and that this is the only excuse which they have for bringing the public into their house.

Why, therefore, hesitate in making the picture on the screen as near absolutely perfect as possible?

There is no use in denying the fact that the eye strain to an audience viewing a picture with a 30 degree projection angle is far more severe than one viewing a picture with a 12 degree angle or less. This latter angle causes approximately a 2 per cent. distortion, whereas the 30 degree angle will cause distortion out of all proportion to the increase in the projection angle.

TAKING the question from the purely financial standpoint, the theatre man is throwing away money and ruining his reputation in allowing the architect to "get away" with this absolute disregard for the primary object for which the house is being built—Motion Pictures.

Some of the leading theatre men throughout the country have realized this and have sacrificed a few seats in the balcony in order to make the projection angle of such a size that the pictures which they are selling the public are as near perfect as they can be made. It is not our problem to tell the theatre man where to put his booth, for in the case of any house it is only necessary for the owner to demand of his architect that he see to it that the plans call for the proper projection angle and that it is adhered to. This is the business of the architect and is his problem. It is what he is hired for.

This is only one of the many problems which confront the industry today, but it is far from being the least important. We hope that every reader of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will consider this matter and that, should any one of them at any time have anything to do with the erection of a hall or theatre in which pictures are to be shown, that they will absolutely insist upon this standard of a 12 degree maximum projection angle, not only for the good of pictures in general but for their own personal financial advantage.

American Photo Player Issues House Organ

THE first number of "Fotoplayer Notes," a house organ to be issued monthly by the American Photo Player Company, San Francisco, is attractive in appearance and full of facts pertaining to the company's products. The make-up and the selection of matter for its pages are a tribute to the skill of Jack Levy, in charge of the publicity and advertising department.

Following a Foreword, dwelling briefly on the importance of music for a thorough enjoyment of pictures, is a detailed description of the Tivoli organ, manufactured by the firm. A double page, in two colors, is taken up with reproductions of a number of letterheads from theatres whose managers have expressed satisfaction with the instruments installed by the Photo Player Company.

Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. This notice does not apply to those who have already sent in this information, but it is for those who have neglected doing so, many of whom have merely given their name and name of city, without any street address, making it impossible for the post office employes to deliver the letters addressed to them. Now let us all get together and raise our "Army of 1,000," and show that we are sincere in our efforts to better conditions in general. I. G. S.

The North Pole Has Moved

DAWSON KLINE, Grinnell, Iowa, writes: "I wish you would enter my name on the Roll of Honor of the Anti-Misframe League. Some of the films we get show a lack of common sense on the part of the operator who ran them previous to us. Punch holes, misframes, etc., etc. I have just purchased a set of 'Hawkins' Electrical Guides' and can recommend them very highly. [So can I—Ed.] I have two Simplex projectors and a transverter in my operating room. This room itself has excellent ventilation, the air being forced through a duct in the floor and is exhausted through an 18-inch vent flue leading to the roof and open air. Say, Mister, talk about being cool, the North Pole hasn't anything on us. Six thousand people call Grinnell their home town, and we show them the best only, choosing our pictures from the Triangle, Paramount, and in the Fall Artcraft programs. The theatre is a new house, seating about 600 people, whom we try our best to please. I have some questions to pop later."

Comment: Grinnell, as I remember it, lies midway between Oskaloosa and Marshalltown, on the main line of the Iowa division of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific R. R. When I was there, twelve years ago, it was a town of slightly over 3,000 population, and it would give me great pleasure to again visit that pleasing little city. Is the Gifford Hotel still in existence? The system of ventilation seems to leave nothing to be desired; it is too bad that some of the theatres in some of our larger cities cannot be made to realize what proper ventilation means, not only to the operator, but as a preventative of panic in case of a film fire. With the equipment you have you should be able to satisfy your patrons, and when you say you are trying your best to please them you are going a long way toward building up a successful and lasting business. Your request will be taken care of, and we will await your pleasure regarding the questions you wish to propound later. In conclusion I want to say that the "North Pole" sounds good, when I think of the extremely hot weather we have been "enjoying" here in the city these past few weeks. Would be pleased to receive photographs of your theatre, equipment, etc.

Operators in Los Angeles Up in Arms

THE action of members of Local 150 of Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators' Union of Los Angeles, with respect to the collection and distribution of films which became effective Monday of this week, has caused three operators to lose their positions, approximately ten theatre managers to renew their contracts to employ only union operators for the next year, and promises, according to rumor, to disturb conditions in the Exhibitors' organization here. When officers of Local 150 learned a number of managers who were members of the Exhibitors' Association had opened a school to teach operating, this information was passed to the officers of the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes, and President Charles C. Shay is expected in Los Angeles shortly to personally recommend action of the union operators in the immediate future. By officers of Local 150, it is stated, that if the exhibitors continue to operate their school for teaching, a strike will be called which will affect all theatres whose managers are members of the Exhibitors' Association. Because of this threatened action, it is stated, that nine exhibitors will withdraw from active membership in the association at the next regular meeting.

The trouble grew out of the local serving notice on theatre managers, that on and after August 20 operators would discontinue the practice of calling at exchanges for films and taking them back to the exchange after they had been used at the theatre. Some of the exhibitors translated this to mean an initial step working toward plans for the demand in the increase in the wage scale.

An Exhibitor's Suggestion

MR. RAYMOND O. GILLETTE, who with his brother Ralph owns and operates a theatre in Greene, N. Y., writes: "I wish to become a member of the worthy league—National Anti-Misframe League. Although I am an exhibitor, I get a peek at the projection department before reading the balance of the NEWS, as I am greatly interested in the betterment of film condition and have confidence that through this league we may be the cause of reaching the goal. I have a suggestion which I would like to make to operators who double reels—that is, put two 1,000-foot reels on one. Many operators double the reels and where they join the two together they usually make punch holes so as to determine quickly after the last run where to make the necessary cut to enable them to replace tail piece and leader. I manage to watch about the time the patch goes through the machine and, upon finding same, place a small piece of paper on the bottom reel. Then when I rewind I can easily locate the patch. I enclose 'my bit' toward the fund for a gold button for Brother Pastre, and I will be so-called 'recruiting officer' in this district and will try and do my share toward making the league the success it deserves to be. I close with best wishes to the league members and yourself."

Comment: Your method, while not new, is nevertheless one that would be worthy of consideration by those operators who practice doubling up, and I am passing it along for their benefit. Thanks for your words of appreciation, also your kind offer to serve as recruiting officer for the Department of the East. The more the merrier, and the sooner will we reach the 1,000 mark.

Two Robinson Crusoes

Sam A. Lurvey, South West Harbor, Maine, writes: "I would like to become a member of the Anti-Misframe League. I am also anxious to know about the two Robinson Crusoe pictures, one is four and the other five reels. Which is the best; are they anything alike, and who has the renting of them in Maine? Who handles Hell Morgan's Girl for Maine? Can you tell me of one or two good western pictures in the state rights field? I saw one picture last week, in the Star theatre, Bar Harbor, "War Brides," and believe me, it was what I call some picture. I read the NEWS from cover to cover each week and get much information from its pages."

In Reply: Your name has been added to those who are interested in the betterment of general conditions in the film industry, and now to reply to your inquiry: I know nothing of either of the pictures you mention further than one of them is as you say a four-reeler while the other is five reels. The four-reeler, a Universal, features Margarita Fischer and Robert Leonard, and can be obtained from the New England Universal Film Company, Boston, Mass.; the other, a five-reeler, is released by the Warner Brothers and can be obtained from the Globe Feature Film Co., 20 Winchester street, Boston, Mass. "Hell Morgan's Girl" can also be obtained from the N. E. Universal Film Company, they having bought the state rights for the New England territory. It is conceivable that the two pictures would bear a similarity as far as the story be concerned, but to say which one is "best" is beyond us.

Had His Doubts—Now Enlists

ALLAN MILLHORN, Oklahoma, writes: "Am a constant reader of the NEWS, and especially the Projection Department, and have been keeping up with the League since it started. In the beginning I had my doubts about its life, but it has stood the test of time perfectly so I am now offering my humble self for enlistment in the army of progressiveness in the hope that we may abolish some of the evils practiced in the operating room. It has always been my motto to ship film out in the most perfect mechanical condition, and it will certainly give me great pleasure to always receive them in like condition. In conclusion, I wish long life to the A. M. F. L. and that we may have the support of the nation's progressive operators, which is in numbers considerably more than the goal we are trying to reach of 1,000 members."

Comment: This brother is a member of the union, and while he comes out fearlessly and says that he had his doubts, he is now willing to put his shoulder to the wheel and help push. His motto is worthy of himself and should be emulated by operators throughout the country. In his letter the brother refers to another operator whose letter appeared in the issue of August 25 under the caption of "Another Crank On Inspection." The statements made by the writer of that letter is vouched for by Brother Millhorn, who is a member of the same local. Brother Millhorn's operating room equipment consists of two Power's 6B's, with a 75-ampere Ft. Wayne generator set, with which he is obtaining excellent screen results. It is a pleasure to add to the Roll of Honor the name of this man, who is willing to lend his aid in eliminating some of the many evils operators have to contend with.

Film Cement

SAM L. MARR, Waycross, Ga., writes: "I am going to ask a special favor of you in regards to film cement. I want to know if there is a cement on the market that you can recommend as being first-class under all circumstances. I have had a lot of trouble lately in obtaining a cement that will hold. I have been using for some time the cement known as "2 in 1," but it does not seem to hold any more. I have tried different kinds lately and do not find any of them to be very satisfactory, and if there is a special make that you can recommend, or if you have a good recipe that you would not mind giving out, it would be greatly appreciated."

Answer: Complaints have become numerous regarding the poor quality of cement and it may be that owing to the war there is a scarcity of some of the ingredients that enter into the make-up of cement, which is responsible for these complaints. I am not in a position at this time to recommend any make of cement, but for your information will reprint a formula which appeared in the issue of August 26, 1916. The following is the formula for a cement which I myself used for some years and I found it gave very good results: Equal parts of amyl acetate and acetone. This will not turn white or dissolve the film as cement using ether in its composition will. It has the further advantage that it can be used either on regular or non-inflammable stock, but it MUST BE HANDLED QUICKLY. I think you will be able to purchase these ingredients from your local druggist. Remember, after applying this cement to the film you must WORK FAST, and BE SURE TO KEEP THE BOTTLE TIGHTLY CORKED WHEN NOT IN USE.

Mackler and Stewart Delegates

THE annual convention of the New York State Federation of Labor, recently held at Jamestown, New York, was honored by the presence of Governor Charles Whitman, who delivered a most stirring address to the delegates assembled. Brothers Harry Mackler and Edgar Stewart were the representatives of the progressive moving picture operators' organization of New York City—Local 306. It is reported that Mackler was very much interested in the manufacture of knit goods, which is one of the principal industries of that up-state city, and he expects to stop off on the return trip and purchase a pair of gloves, either in Fonda or Gloversville, as a souvenir.

Say we: Are the gloves to be used on some of the obstreperous East Side managers? We await the answer.

Moving Picture of Typhoon Fans

ERNST GLANTZBERG, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has had a moving picture made of the manufacture and installation of a Typhoon cooling and ventilating system. His son Fritz was filmed as an expert controller of Typhoon fans. The film is shown in theatres where the Typhoon fans are used in keeping the spectators cool regardless of the temperature outside.

The film was first run at the Exposition in Chicago, and met an instantaneous and enthusiastic reception. Whenever and wherever it is shown now, movie fans find it as interesting as the most exciting photoplay feature. When the film is started, the Typhoons in the house where the picture is being shown are shut off, and when Fritz turns the power on the completed fan in the film, the real Typhoons are turned on in the picture house and the illusion is complete.

The public has a big count against systems which in the past were advertised as making a theatre cooler inside than out. They are naturally a bit skeptical of any cooling system until they see Typhoons. In these Typhoonized theatres when real Typhoons are turned on simultaneously with the Typhoons in the picture, the applause is spontaneous and vigorous-evidence of the fact that the crowds realize that there is no "hot air" about Typhoons.

Photographic Resolving Power

WITH the increasing importance of photography as an adjunct to scientific investigation have come many researches into the chemistry and physics of photographic processes, and a most interesting subject which has been experimented upon in recent years is the resolving power of photographic emulsions.

The resolving power of lenses and optical systems was long ago worked out, and may be expressed by well known formulae, but photographic resolution is a thing of mystery to photographers of the old school, although no modern student of photography, and especially cinematography, can afford to be in ignorance of the effects of light action upon plates and films, as revealed by the study of resolving power. The present article is, therefore, an attempt to set forth in collective form the findings of various investigators on photographic resolving power.

In optics resolving power is defined as the distance which must separate two objects (lines, for instance) which are very close together, in order that they may be recognized as double in the image. Thus optical resolving power is limited by the resolving power of the eye, and it has been found that two points or lines, extremely close to one another, will not be recognized as two unless they subtend at the eye an angle of at least 1′ of arc. Another factor which limits very fine resolution, such as is the ideal of the microscopist, is the fact that light-waves, although very small, are, nevertheless, of finite dimensions.

The formulae for computing the resolving power of objectives show that optical resolving power increases with increase of angular aperture, and is also greater for light of short wave-length than for light of long wave-length.

The measurement of photographic resolving power, or, in other words, the distance by which two lines or points on a photographic plate must be separated in order that they may appear double is not an angular measurement, but a linear measurement and appears to have first been given consideration by Wadsworth.[1] He considered that two lines in close proximity would be separated on a photographic plate if the distance between their centers was equal to four times the diameter of a silver particle in the emulsion. Investigation has shown, however, that no such high resolution is afforded by photographic emulsions as was postulated by Wadsworth, so the subject was taken up experimentally by Dr. C. E. Kenneth Mees in 1907.[2]

The apparatus devised by Mees for his first work upon photographic resolving power is of interest; his arrangements were briefly as follows: A long narrow box was used, about 6½ inches square and 11 feet in length. At one end of this box was mounted a spectroscopic slit, which could be illuminated by an adjacent Nernst glower, while at the other end of the long box was mounted a rigid camera built of brass tubing. The camera was provided with a spectroscopic (telescope) objective of 6-inch focal length and aperture f5.6. Mees states that this objective worked fully up to its computed optical resolving power, and it was focused by a slow-motion screw. The plate holder of this special camera was fitted to insure exact incidence between the position of the focussing screen and the sensitive plate, and to complete the arrangements the whole apparatus was fastened to a beam and swung from the ceiling by ropes. The suspension of the testing camera was a precaution against vibration, which must be rigorously excluded during all photographic exposures which are of exacting nature as regards fineness of definition.

Some of the results secured by Dr. Mees may now be briefly described. When a thin line of light is projected by a lens upon a photographic plate the breadth of that line in the developed image will be dependent on the amount of exposure given. It would be a tedious undertaking to photograph the slit many times with different exposures, but the information yielded by sixty exposures was secured at one exposure by Mees, through the artifice of placing before the spectroscopic slit a wedge of neutral-tint black glass which varied, as regards the amount of light transmitted, from one end to the other in the proportion of one to sixty. The slit, was, therefore, not reproduced on the developed plate as a black line, but the image was much broader at the end corresponding to the most transparent end of the wedge. This would obviously be the case, as prolonged light action on a photographic plate always causes the image to spread beyond its true optical boundaries.

This spreading of the photographic image is known as "irradiation," and is inherent in rapid emulsions, as the light scatter, by reflection, is very considerable in coarse grained plates and films. It would appear, therefore, that the finer the grain of the emulsion used, the less would be the irradiation, and, consequently, the greater the resolving power. The experiments of Dr. Mees showed that while the irradiation did decrease with decrease in the size of grain, after a certain degree of fineness was passed the spreading effect set in again, so that an extremely fine grained (slow) emulsion showed irradiation to almost as great an extent as did a course grained (rapid) emulsion.

It could therefore be considered that while, as was generally known, the irradiation in course grained emulsions was due to reflection from the surface of the silver particles, the irradiation with very fine grained emulsions must be due to diffraction at the edges of the silver grains. Plates having grains midway in size between the exceedingly fine grain of a Chlorobromide emulsion, and the very course grain of an "Extra Rapid" plate of common variety, showed the least amount of irradiation, which is a fact worthy of study by cinematographers.

Leaving gradation and chromatic qualities out of consideration, cinematographic results were superior, as regards definition, some few years back, when cine negative film was of somewhat lower speed, and consequently finer in grain. This is not a point to be strongly emphasized, however, as it appears that available negative cine film is still capable of realizing the best performance of the camera objectives in use.

Experimental evidence resulted in the conclusion that light scatter due to diffraction would be small on the surface of the emulsion film, but would increase with the distance to which light penetrated the film, while reflection scatter would be almost equal in extent throughout the film. (By film is here meant the emulsion layer or coating of a plate.) This point was investigated by taking photomicrographs, through the back of the plate, of the illuminated slit image, and comparing these with the appearance of the same image as it appeared on the face of the film. With an extremely fine grained (chlorobromide) plate the light scatter was found to be much greater at the back than at the front of the emulsion layer, but with a medium grained (process) plate the scattering was the same when viewed from either the front or the back. From these determinations relative to the action of the silver grains in an emulsion upon the incident light Mees drew the following conclusions:

(1) That the resolution of a photographic plate is dependent on the amount of irradiation displayed by the emulsion.

(2) That irradiation is not directly proportional to the size of grain, but is caused by two different forms of scatter arising from (a) reflection and (b) diffraction.

(3) That the resolving power is likely to be much smaller than that indicated by the theory of Wadsworth (previously mentioned).

With the light scattering action of the various classes of emulsions thus determined, Dr. Mees next undertook the estimation of the actual resolving power of these same emulsions, or, in other words, their ability to separate or differentiate fine details in close proximity to one another.

For this purpose the spectroscopic slit at the end of his long testing box, was replaced by ruled gratings, having alternate transparent and opaque lines of equal width. A series of gratings, of varying fineness (or periodicity), were used in the tests; the procedure being to photograph the grating (greatly reduced, of course) upon the plate at the camera end of the testing apparatus. Upon microscopic examination of the small images thus produced the resolving power of the various emulsions could be computed, as the grating constants and the scale of reduction were, of course, known. Briefly, the determinations were as follows:

For an ordinary fine-grained emulsion, lines will be just resolved if they are separated by 0.018mm.

For coarser grain, as in all fast emulsions, a distance between lines of 0.030mm. is necessary for resolution.

As it is well known that the resolving power of objectives is greater for light of short wave-length than for light of long wave-length, it is interesting to note the effect of light of different colors upon the resolving power of photographic emulsions. Experimenting on this point with plates bathed in Pinacyanol, Dr. Mees found that higher resolving power was attained by exposure to red light than by exposure to blue light, which is just the converse of optical resolution, although of course, there is no connection between the two cases. The data concerning resolving power for exposures to red and blue light need not be given, for in some experiments made by Dr. Scheffer (to be subsequently detailed) the photographic resolution was found to be about equal for both red and blue light. According to a published abstract[3], Mees finally concluded that his results on photographic resolving power for light of different colors might have been influenced by the presence of chromatic aberration in the spectroscopic objective with which his test gratings were photographed.

The next to undertake experiments upon photographic resolving power was Dr. W. Scheffer[4], who investigated the problem by ingenious and readily applicable methods.

Scheffer devised a small circular camera made of metal, which had an accurately turned flange, or focal-plane, against which the sensitive plate was seated. This camera used no plate holders, the plates being loaded direct into the camera before each exposure.

To the back of this special camera was mounted a microscope of considerable power (giving a magnification of 280 diameters) with which the focussing screen was examined when focussing the objective. The objective, mounted, of course, to the front of the camera, was a "Planar" of 22mm. focal length and numerical aperture 1. The central definition of these Planars is of proverbial excellence, and Dr. Scheffer states that the one he used was about up to theoretical resolving power.

The simplicity of Scheffer's arrangements lies in the fact that his camera was attached to a vertical pillar, or support, and mounted upon an optical bench, upon which his light source (an arc) and test objects could be arranged in similar manner. Like Dr. Mees, Scheffer also proposed to photograph gratings ruled with lines, and to study the resolution in the developed plates. Inasmuch as the grating pattern could be made to photograph smaller by increasing its distance from the camera, a great number of gratings, of various periodicities, were not required by Dr. Scheffer in his experiments, which is an advantage incident to the use of an optical bench.

The pattern of the test grating used by Scheffer is of interest; the grating was divided into two sections of equal width, one half being ruled with two series of parallel lines crossing each other at right angles, while the other half contained but a single series of lines.

At the dividing line between the two halves of the screen was cemented a small disc of tinfoil of known size. The measurement of the transparent image of this tinfoil disc in the developed plates, permitted the exact computation of the scale to which the test object had been reduced in photographing. When photographing this composite screen to study its resolution by various types of plates, Scheffer found that the cross-line

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

J. W. Stern Is a Member of the Society

In our last issue dated September 15, we stated—in answer to an inquiry made by "The Alhambra Amusement Co." relating to the "American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers" that "J. W. Stern," a New York Music Publisher, is not a member of this society. On September 3, we received a notice from the "American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers" that "J. W. Stern" is now one of their members. Kindly note this as we presume it is of great importance to you if your theatre management has ordered you not to play any compositions subject to a music tax—The Editor.

Motifs for the Theatre Organist

By William Richard Waghorne

THERE is no doubt but that the organ in the theatre, as an adjunct to the orchestra and as a solo instrument, has come to stay. The fact that the music in these houses during the last ten years—I am referring particularly to the picture houses—has undergone a revolution, and that an ever increasing number of houses is offering good remuneration for the services of a capable performer, makes the theatre situation a rather interesting one to the organist.

What is demanded of the theatre organist; what especial qualifications must he have?

It is rather hard to say just what constitutes a good theatre performance, there are so many things to take into consideration. Certainly the points of view of the church organist and his theatrical brother are as far apart as the poles. I do not mean to say that the church organist would not make a good picture player; on the contrary, practically every organist has been connected with the church at some time or other, and the very newness of the theatre as a home of the king of instruments compels us to look to the church as the cradle of the organist, both sacred and secular.

But much more is demanded of the man at the console when he is part of a paid performance. People who would stand for poor, sloppy playing in a church would never tolerate the same thing in a theatre. The theatre organist, then, should be something of a soloist who is willing to leave all the heavy contrapuntal school behind him (such compositions being entirely out of place), but whose grounding in the classics should have been thorough. He should not be above practising his Bach, only he must not perpetrate it upon his theatre audience.

It is necessary that he possess an agile and fluent technique, with a strong sense for orchestral color; be facile in his registration and have the happy knack of being able to follow the emotional line of the picture closely.

That he should be able to extemporize musically is, of course, necessary; although a very little of this goes a long way, and should not be indulged in at all if he cannot write or think an interesting musical sentence.

He should also be a good sight reader and understand the mechanism of his organ, so that any slight cyphers may be adjusted as quickly as possible.

In my two incursions into theatrical playing I have often found it necessary to think up quickly some little characteristic theme, phrase, motif, or whatever you care to call it, to fill in a short gap between two of the long pieces which I had set to the picture; something wholly foreign to the general scheme of what had just passed or what we were coming to. It requires a man of very brilliant imagination to unfailingly respond on such occasions, and there are those of us who fall below the specifications, occasionally.

As a help to the picture organist in occasions such as these, the following little sketches may help to fill in an awkward gap, or even save the audience from a meaningless extemporization; but more, may help to block out little musical scenes for himself, not only at the instrument, but where it will be productive of much more good, at his desk, out of communication with any musical instrument.

The example above (No. 1) I have used in short military scenes. Something with a suggestion of pomposity and free from a superabundance of excitement. It might be used at the appearance of some particular soldier-hero. Although the solo could be played upon the trumpet in the Great, I would not advise this except in a very unusual place, as whenever the effect can be obtained by the more subdued tones of the instrument it is better that it be done so. Incidentally it may be well to remark here that many more programs are spoiled by overplaying, in the dynamical sense, than by the reverse.

Played upon the Vox Humana with a very soft 16 and 8-ft. pedal uncoupled, No. 2 makes an excellent frame for a grief-laden picture which is free from too violent emotion. It should, of course, be played very slowly.

The third example has a rather unusual registration. Swell Bourbon with sub and super couplers for R.H. The L.H. solo part to be played on the Choir Clarinet alone. No Flute or Coupler should be used with the Clarinet to thicken it, as the pure reed tone is required. This might be called "By the sad sea waves." A desolate beach scene or something along that order.

The theatre building will occupy a full quarter of a block and will be equal to four stories in height. The exterior walls will be wholly of polychrome terra cotta, white and old ivory, the base and colors artistically used to bring out the beauties of its architecture. The theatre will seat 2,500 and room for a large orchestra and a magnificent pipe organ is arranged.

Features of the new theatre will be an exhibition room forty feet long, where pictures will be reviewed and tested before shown in the theatre; a playroom for babies, with a nurse attendant in charge; a rest room and a ladies' parlor, the latter 30 by 20 feet, and other new ideas. Photographic Resolving Power section of the screen was always better resolved, by a given emulsion, than the part containing the single series of lines. No reason for this is advanced by Dr. Scheffer in his published account of the experiments, although he found that the single line screen was best resolved, at about half the exposure required for good resolution of the cross-line screen. The limit of resolution was considered to be reached when it was no longer possible to differentiate between the single-line and the cross-line sections of the screen as imaged on the photographic plate.

In his study of the effects of irradiation Scheffer introduced a new term by which the scattering properties of an emulsion film may be described. A film which scatters the light considerably (in general a rapid emulsion with large silver grains) is termed highly turbid, which is analogous to turbid or muddy water, while a more transparent film (slow-grained emulsion) is said to be of low turbidity, and may be compared to clear water. It is obvious, therefore, that an emulsion of high turbidity will show considerably more irradiation than a less turbid, or more transparent, film.

Dr. Scheffer's experiments were carried out in the following manner. The chromatic qualities of the various plates were first determined in a spectrograph, and the exposures on the various plates were made to light corresponding in color to their maximum sensitiveness, this being accomplished by screening the exposing light with color-filters of appropriate hue. The line-screens being photographed were moved along the optical bench to various distances from the testing camera and exposures made. When the exposed plates were developed, the degree of resolution could be ascertained; the test object was considered no longer resolved when the difference between the single-line and the cross-line portions of the screen could not be readily distinguished. It should be pointed out here that the images secured on the test negatives were microscopically small, and required enlarging to fifty diameters before the resolution could be examined.

Scheffer does not utilize the size of the screen elements, or lines, as the unit of resolving power, but states his results in periods. The definition of a period will be best understood by reference to Fig. 1, where the shaded areas are the lines of a screen or grating. The units, or elements, of the grating are denoted by S_1 and S_2, while the period of the grating is indicated by the line P. If, for instance, a grating has 35 periods per mm.: P=1/35. Assuming, of course, a grating with lines and spaces of equal width, the distances S_1 and S_2 are therefore 1/70 mm.

Some of Dr. Scheffer's results may now be expressed as follows:

(1) Extra Rapid Plate.
Screen of 35 periods per mm.—Resolved.

(2) Slow Plate (Fine Grain).
Screen of 75 periods per mm.—Resolved.

(3) Wratten Lantern Plate.
Screen of 106 periods per mm.—Resolved.

(4) Extra Fine Grained Plate (Almost Grainless).
Screen of 150 periods per mm.—Resolved.

Scheffer's results as regards the resolving power of emulsions for light of different colors are in contradistinction to the first results of Dr. Mees, for, whereas, the latter investigator found the resolution on a given plate (bathed in Pinacyanol) to be higher for red light than for blue; Scheffer found the resolving power, with red light, of a Pinacyanol bathed plate, was the same as an unbathed plate of like variety, exposed to blue light, and that resolution was destroyed in the case of exposures by blue light on the red-sensitized plate. These tests were made upon lantern plates, but Dr. Scheffer found that with coarser grained emulsions the best resolution was obtained with light of short wave-length. The line-screen test object was photographed upon an ortho plate strongly sensitive to orange—exposures being made with both orange and violet light. The exposures were in such ratio as to produce negatives of equal density for equal time of development. The test object was not resolved on the negative made by orange light, but the plate exposed to blue light showed good resolution. From this experiment Scheffer concludes that there is a connection between the color of the emulsion film and its resolving power. An emulsion of pronounced color, such as is possessed by some bathed plates may vary in its transparency to light of different colors, with a consequent effect upon resolution in the case of objects photographed by light of various colors.

As resolution is impaired by the spreading of light in the emulsion film, it is easy to appreciate that any great degree of overexposure decreases the resolving power of a plate, but Scheffer points out that resolution is also influenced by the length of time for which a plate is developed. With short development the highest resolution is not attained, as is also true in the case of development to a high degree of contrast. With a suitable exposure and normal development, however, the utmost in photographic resolving power is secured, not only in the case of objects of extreme contrast, such as the test gratings, but also in the case of photographic pictures possessing many slight differences in contrast, or in other words, an extended scale of gradation.

In 1910 Dr. Mees communicated the results of some further work upon photographic resolving power to the International Congress of Photography at Brussels.

With a somewhat modified testing camera, employing a microscope objective of 35 mm. focus, he repeated some of his test exposures; his later findings concurring with those of Dr. Scheffer insofar as resolution with red and blue light was concerned.

A feature of Dr. Mees' communication of 1910 was the description of a new test object which he had devised for use in the determination of the resolving power of photographic plates. The original form of this test object was used to study the resolving power of color screen-plates, but the form finally adopted for testing photographic resolution is essentially similar to Fig. 2 This consists of a fan shaped series of lines, which are considerably separated at the base but converge until they almost intersect at the vertex of the pattern. This design is photographed in the testing camera at a considerable reduction, the height of the image being only 1 mm. in the resulting negative.

The negative is now examined under a microscope fitted with a micrometer stage, which permits of the test plate being moved along under the objective of the microscope. When such a pattern, reproduced as a tiny image on a photographic plate, is examined with the microscope, it is seen that its lines are not resolved (or separated) at the apex, but as it is moved across the visual field of the microscope, a point is finally reached where the lines are seen to be resolved; and as the spacing of the lines and zones of the test object are known, and also the scale of the photographic reduction, a numerical value can be computed for the resolving power of the plate being tested. This ingenious method of Dr. Mees is useful in comparing various types of emulsion, but does not furnish as much information on the factors which govern resolving power, as some experimental methods which have since been devised. to all those who have liked the work of FRITZ

ON AUGUST 29, 1917, Fritz made his last appearance before the camera in the closing scene of "The Narrow Trail," my first Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft. Hereafter, he will live in retirement with all the comforts of horse life.

I have ridden Fritz constantly for more than two years, and he has served me so faithfully and has been so steadfast and courageous whenever called upon to perform a hazardous feat, that I feel all who have been so kind to us in our work upon the screen will know and understand my motives. I love the old fellow dearly, and cannot, after all his loyalty, subject him further to a chance of injury.

I wish to tell all who like the little Pinto that he will be right with me wherever I may go—until the Boss Ranger comes along and summons one or both of us across the Big Divide.

With deepest gratitude from Fritz and myself,

William S. Hart

Please don't worry about me. I'm going to be with the boss just the same.

Goldwyn Pictures

The National Verdict Is:

NO LONGER an organization of promises, and at last a company of definite achievement, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation takes pleasure in quoting for the benefit of the trade and all lovers of good pictures, the important motion picture and amusement journals, the critics of the great daily newspapers and powerful exhibitors in several sections of the country about the first Goldwyn production, "Polly of the Circus."

FROM AMERICA'S GREAT DAILY PAPERS:

NEW YORK TRIBUNE: There is only one criticism of "Polly of the Circus." It is going to make us all dreadfully dissatisfied with the usual photoplay. Goldwyn's first production is a picture of wonderful charm and power.

NEW YORK SUN: "Polly of the Circus" is a good augury that the name of Goldwyn shall not perish from the earth.

NEW YORK WORLD: This first Goldwyn production is a rare combination of pictorial and story-telling effectiveness.

NEW YORK EVE. TELEGRAM: The artistic merit of "Polly of the Circus" is beyond question.

NEW YORK EVE. POST: This first Goldwyn picture should appeal to all who appreciate wholesome entertainment.

PHILADELPHIA PRESS: Goldwyn's first production is a triumph of the screen. . . . A continuous series of thrills.

PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN: Goldwyn has arrived in more senses than one. "Polly of the Circus" has a strong claim on the "ideal picture" distinction.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER: Goldwyn's great first release, "Polly of the Circus," is a picture you will see twice. It is an unusual play and presents Mae Marsh in a role that fits her like a glove.

CHICAGO EVE. POST: The whole production is a work of art, not merely a vehicle for the exploitation of a star.

NEW YORK AMERICAN: "Polly of the Circus" is a triumph for Goldwyn, for Margaret Mayo and lovely Mae Marsh.

NEW YORK EVE. SUN: This first Goldwyn picture gives promise of many good things to come.

NEW YORK HERALD: Here is a production of the highest order, and the work of Mae Marsh reveals all of her appealing powers.

NEW YORK TIMES: "Polly of the Circus" is a sincere effort to improve the motion picture art.

NEW ORLEANS TIMES PICAYUNE: Brains win. "Polly of the Circus" is by far the greatest motion picture presentation that has ever been shown in the city of New Orleans. Mae Marsh is new and more appealing than ever before. Brains directed her. Brains adapted the story to the screen and brains made it so clear and effective that there has never been a screen subject that approached closer to perfection than this one.

NEW YORK GLOBE: "Polly of the Circus" is leagues ahead of the average picture. Mae Marsh possesses all of her old-time appeal.

NEW YORK EVE. MAIL: You will thrill with every tenth or twelfth turn of the camera crank.

NEW YORK EVE. WORLD: As a Goldwyn picture, "Polly of the Circus" is even greater than it was as a great stage success.

PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER: "Polly" is something of real and unusual beauty. It is a memorable production.

PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER: "Polly of the Circus" reaches the highest points strived for by previous producers.

PHILADELPHIA EVE. LEDGER: "Polly of the Circus" is a gem of cinema art. Progress is written over the whole film. It has a refinement of handling almost new to motion pictures.

CLEVELAND LEADER: The lighting and effects and thrills in "Polly of the Circus" must have given the people who achieved them supreme satisfaction as artistic work most creditably done. . . . Goldwyn sets a high standard for itself.

MINNEAPOLIS JOURNAL: Here is a magnificent production that will pack to capacity the motion picture theatres of the world.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD: Here at last is art in the movies. The outstanding features of "Polly of the Circus" are its unparalleled lighting effects, its wonderful night photography and its exquisite settings and backgrounds.

ALICE COON BROWN, OHIO STATE JOURNAL: "Polly of the Circus" is an exceptional film. If the other Goldwyn pictures are as well done as this one, all of us have a lot that is worth while to look forward to.

Goldwyn Pictures

"Goldwyn Has Made Good"

IN every section of the United States "Polly of the Circus" has received the unqualified praise of the great exhibitors who are the mediums through which this and all other pictures reach the discerning American public.

From Managers and Exhibitors:

J. A. QUINN, RIALTO THEATRE, LOS ANGELES: "Polly of the Circus" played to capacity business at opening, notwithstanding Billy Sunday and Ringling Brothers' Circus as opposition. Enthusiastic praise from patrons and press. I have seen "Baby Mine" and your Maxine Elliott pictures and predict a phenomenal success for Goldwyn. Congratulations.

JOSEPH GROSSMAN, STANDARD THEATRE, CLEVELAND: Overwhelmed by crowds that attempted to enter theatre. All house records for years broken by "Polly." Audience pleased immensely. My congratulations.

L. V. CALVERT, NEW GARRICK THEATRE, MINNEAPOLIS: Opened to capacity business. "Polly" is a wonderful production and a huge box office attraction.

Maxine Elliott Releases Are Shifted

GOLDWYN will present Maxine Elliott for her screen debut in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb instead of in "The Eternal Magdalene," as previously announced. "Fighting Odds" will be released everywhere October 7.

Despite enthusiastic indorsement of "The Eternal Magdalene" by the National Board of Review, censor boards in Pennsylvania and the city of Chicago raise certain objections to the production—objections with which, quite naturally, Goldwyn disagrees in entirety.

But, rather than cause our exhibitor customers inconvenience through late delivery of the scheduled picture, Goldwyn brings forward "Fighting Odds" and will thresh out the points at issue in the two localities.

"Fighting Odds" is a powerful emotional drama of Big Business and a wife's loyalty and devotion to her husband who is made the catspaw of unscrupulous financiers. This big play gives Miss Elliott the finest dramatic opportunity she has ever had, and millions of people will welcome her to the screen in this big role.

The same big campaign of exploitation being conducted throughout America for "The Eternal Magdalene" is now being duplicated for "Fighting Odds."

What Exhibitors Say of Mutual's New Fall Features —"Big Stars Only"

By JOHN R. FREULER

THE WEEK OF SEPTEMBER 3rd marked the start of a new chapter in film history. That week the Mutual Film Corporation began the new season of 1917-1918 by releasing two amazing box-office attractions—Edna Goodrich in "Reputation" and Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle."

Letters have come to me from prominent exhibitors everywhere praising the high quality of these new productions. Manager F. L. Newman, of the Royal Theatre—one of Kansas City's finest houses—says of "Reputation": "I think it is as fine a production as I have ever seen. The lighting effects and photography are excellent. The story could not be better. The introduction of the dancers in the cabaret scene is wonderful, also the way Miss Goodrich had the opportunity to display beautiful gowns.

Manager Leo A. Landau, of the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., writes regarding "Reputation": "In point of story, scenery, cast, settings, star, titles, in fact, in every particular, I would call it a 100 per cent production. No exhibitor can desire more than 'Reputation' gives."

These letters are conclusive proof of the box-office value of the new Mutual Pictures. Eight of these big star attractions in five or six reels are released by Mutual this month—two each week! The week of Sept. 10th: Ann Murdock in "Outcast"—first of Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures, and Gail Kane in "The Bride's Silence." The week of Sept. 17th: Juliette Day in "The Rainbow Girl," and Margarita Fischer in "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up." The week of Sept. 24th: William Russell in "Sands of Sacrifice," and Julia Sanderson in "The Runaway"—second of the Charles Frohman Successes in Motion Pictures.

Those fortunate exhibitors who have secured exclusive territory for the showing of these new Mutual Pictures—"Big Stars Only"—for the coming 52 weeks are assured big box-office returns. If you haven't talked to your Mutual manager recently or reviewed some of these new attractions, you're resisting opportunity.

NEW YORK REVIEW
Saturday, Sept. 8th
By S. W. Weller

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" IS BRENON'S FINEST ACHIEVEMENT

——The production is superb. It is probably Mr. Brenon's finest technical achievement. In forgetting "A Daughter of the Gods," "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is big in every way.

By Edward Weitzel

Among the many excellences to be found in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Herbert Brenon's eighteenth feature novel, based on the Russian revolution, one attribute stands out to bold relief—the swift onrush of events—— To Herbert Brenon belongs a large share of the credit for putting "The Fall of the Romanoffs" before the public in an able and impressive manner. ——The cast could hardly be better.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW
Sept. 22nd
By T. O. Eisenhood

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" IS BRENON'S BEST

——The outstanding feature of the whole production is the feeling of reality, the feeling that the events on the screen are a true and real depiction of the events in history co-ored in actual life and history. Brenon has made his characters on the screen live and act as they really did in actual life. Brenon has gathered his cast of players with great care, and the characters of this great historical drama, lived and acted in the picture, that can be accorded a producer for his work on the pictures. It is the best thing that he has ever done.

BRENON'S "FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" A KNOCKOUT AT RIALTO CARLTON

Herbert Brenon has scored another knockout. "The Fall of the Romanoffs," his latest big picture, was shown for the first time on Thursday evening to friends and business associates of the producer in the grand ballroom of the Rialto Carlton. It is generally brought triumph and promises to create a profound sensation when it is shown to the public.

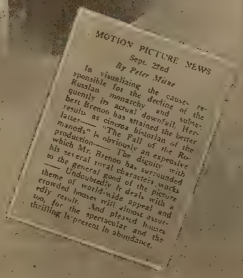
EMPEROR OF GERMANY



MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Sept. 22nd
By Peter Milne

In visualizing the causes responsible for the downfall of Russian monarchy leading up to the events which led to the overthrow of the Romanoffs, Herbert Brenon has produced the greatest picture of the year. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is a stupendous production, unequalled as a dramatic document of the times. The picture is an impressive and powerful one, and has a strength which Mr. Brenon has never before displayed in his directorial work. The picture has a general appeal as a picture of general interest and its theme undoubtedly is the greatest one which has ever been presented to the screen. And although a tragedy of world-wide death, picture is not overdone with gruesome scenes, for the pictorial beauty and the entertaining features are sufficient to overbalance the tragic elements. Plenty of thrilling is present in abundance.

CIRCULATION

¶ An audit has been made of the circulation of the various media in the interest of the advertiser.

This is a considerable and commendable step forward.

The audit is by no means conclusive—as to true circulation value.

But it does the obvious.

It distinguishes, first of all between paid circulation and free distribution—and rules out the latter.

Then it indicates where the copies are going—to the trade proper,
where they should all go;
to those in the trade who are not purchasers of advertised good,s which is waste circulation;
to the public, which is also utter waste.

The audit rules out newsstand circulation, or at least that part of it which by the very location of the newsstand can reach only the public.

Here is the audit report on MOTION PICTURE NEWS; and we point with pride to this remarkable showing, since our circulation has been scientifically and systematically built to the end of true value and the elimination of waste.

Exhibitors	82.5%
Otherwise connected with the industry (Operators, Exchange Men, Supply dealers, etc.)	10.2%
Unidentified	6.4%
Not connected with the industry	0.9%
	100.0%

Less than one per cent of our readers are not connected with this industry.

And we point also emphatically to these paid subscription figures:

Paid in advance	97.8%
Not paid in advance but obligated to pay	2.2%
	100.0%

—AND CIRCULATION VALUE

You have got to go deeper, however, than audit figures to determine circulation value—considerably deeper.

Even paid subscriptions do not indicate circulation value.

The copies—of a paid subscription—may never be taken from their wrapper.

1. The subscription may have been sold against the reader's inclination; a persuasive solicitor and the merit of a medium often have little in common.
2. The subscription may not be cancelled simply through the inertia of the subscriber.
3. The paper may have lost its reading value, or had this value exceeded by another publication.

Not circulation figures—but readers, regular, cover-to-cover, fifty-two-times-a-year readers make circulation value.

A thousand such subscriptions mean more than a hundred thousand of the paid but unread kind.

And you, Mr. Advertiser, can determine any publication's reading value. You don't need audits; you need only your own eyes and your sound judgment.

I make the general statement that I can read through any magazine, glance over its subscription getting methods and gauge its clientele and reading value.

You can do the same.

We invite your estimate of this or any issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

NOTE.—There are other ways of estimating circulation value; and since these are matters of business value, we will submit them in future articles on this subject.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

Volume 16 No. 13 September 29, 1917

High Rental Prices

THE subject uppermost in the minds of the trade at present is that of stars and high rental prices.

Everyone is talking about it; there seems little use of disguising the fact.

For a trade paper to jump into print on so fiery a subject may be a case of a fool rushing in; but we have always tackled important trade problems with the gloves off.

This we propose to do now—but, as formerly, constructively and looking to the best interests of the whole industry; not in an effort to be sensational nor to curry favor with either the reader or the advertiser.

Our columns are open for a calm, honest discussion of this big and vital subject. We believe such a discussion will do good.

The subject of stars and their box-office value we can dismiss. It is not at present a matter for argument. No one questions the obvious, present day box-office value of the star.

As for high rental prices we have long had our own opinion on the subject. A keen, and practical observer whom we sent out into the field, confirms these opinions, through the definite and interesting reports we are receiving.

* * * *

BRIEFLY the situation is this: The exhibitor everywhere is strenuously opposing the heavy increase in rental prices; but, in surprisingly large numbers, surprising in view of the rabid objections, he is paying them.

Putting aside for the moment the question of the economic right or wrong of these high rental prices we had best face the practical situation. These prices, like the stars, are with us. They are being paid. This is the problem.

What are we going to do about it?

What are the exhibitors going to do?

The business fate of the exhibitors who are paying these high rentals is a matter of grave concern to this industry—to all branches of it.

Let us take a concrete instance, as reported to us.

An exhibitor in a large city, operating a large theatre, claims that whereas last year he made an annual profit in five figures he is now facing a deficit of practically the same amount.

On the face of it this looks bad. A manufacturer policy of high rental prices is apparently killing the retailer. If so, such a policy is ruinous to this industry.

But let us see.

CLOSER investigation indicates that this exhibitor is practically a non-advertiser. He doesn't know how to put over a picture; so that what little advertising he may do spasmodically is probably misdirected. He also admits that he doesn't know what to do, in any other way, to climb out of his hole.

* * * *

This puts the matter in an entirely different light.

Here's an exhibitor who has evidently just been swimming with the tide. Pictures and the public have been making money for him. He got a location and profits followed. His own continued business enterprise has little to do with the matter. He was—fortunately—a picture exhibitor. The motion picture and its drawing power made the wheels go 'round.

The business problem here is not one of high rental prices but rather one of low business enterprise.

And there are many exhibitors in the country—whether they know it or not, and however much they may dislike being told so by a trade-paper editor—who are just about as helpless as the above exhibitor.

They are not good retailers.

The time was bound to come, when pressure—the pressure simply of an advancing industry—would force these retailers to increase their receipts.

High rentals have precipitated this period.

* * * *

WE do not agree that these high rentals are always right; that they are based correctly in every instance upon the exhibitor's possible clientele.

In many cases they may be unjust and impossible; that is to say, the exhibitor is utterly unable to bring in enough box-office receipts from his territory to pay them and make a profit.

Speaking Editorially:

Beginning at the Beginning

TO WILLIAM L. SHERRILL and his associates in the recently formed organization of independent producers there is given a great opportunity.

At the opening of a Fall season which holds the most brilliant prospects yet seen for the independent operators, there is room for congratulation to the originators of any move tending toward stabilization.

Observers tell us that the exhibitor mind has never been so receptive to the independently offered production. The "open days" which mean business to the independent are increasing in number.

But to keep them open the exhibitor must necessarily see stability. He must have assurance of a continued supply of quality productions at business-like rentals.

And stability begins at the studios. Therefore our best wishes to the independents and their association.

Looking in the Mirror

A CYNIC has said that a sense of humor is the possession most vitally necessary to happiness in the film field. Whether he be right or wrong it is certain that a sense of perspective has its points of value.

Take the question of serials. We recently glanced over some trade paper issues of a few years ago. One of the points most frequently discussed was "Will the serial's popularity continue?" "How many more months will the serial last?" And so on.

It would seem that the serial caused considerable worry.

But read the current announcements. Pathe, Paramount, Vitagraph, Mutual—all to the front with more elaborate serial offerings than ever. Read the exchanges' booking reports—and find the serial topping the heap.

Then see if you have a sense of humor.

Posters and Patrons

AN Exhibitor asks us, "Why is it that producers must always seize on the most gruesome bits of violence in their productions as subjects for posters? The various sizes of posters on many attractions would drive more patrons away from my theatres than all my local efforts can pull in."

This theatre man is not playing to a select class—his patronage could be termed average. Yet he finds it more and more necessary to plan his lobby displays without the aid of the poster's coming from the manufacturers.

"Give us scenes of happiness," he continues, "touches of romance and love. Murder and worse are fast losing favor on the screen—why keep them up on the poster?"

The Fall Is with Us

THE Fall is with us—and with it the prospect of another crop of legislation aimed at the motion picture.

For a while it seemed that the warlike times and the necessity for really essential legislation might keep the hack politicians too busy to indulge in screen baiting. But an observer who was in the forefront of last year's legislative battles and who has kept an attentive ear to the ground states that the reformers are preparing for the fray.

We had occasion, last Spring, to refer to rental prices in the South, which obviously were based on populations partly black and which were high in just such a proportion.

The impossible rental is bad. It ought to be made just, and it can be, through a clear knowledge of local conditions.

This is highly essential.

But we do wish to point a warning to the exhibitor who is just rolling with the tide—to the exhibitor who claims that high rentals are ruinous and who nevertheless pays them.

If he doesn't wake up someone else will be owning his theatre.

This business is not standing still. It can't stand still.

We will not go right on playing to the fans. There are millions of other people who will go regularly to picture theatres—some day.

We will not go on playing pictures by the day.

We will not go on glutting the public with much picture entertainment at the price easiest to get.

It is up to the exhibitor to meet these new and inevitable conditions.

* * * *

THE manufacturer who imposes high rentals undoubtedly means to put a solid foundation under so radical a plan. It is inconceivable that he should not expect to.

He will engage in a big national campaign of advertising to bring the public—especially the new public into the picture theatres.

He will spend lots of money in exhibitor service—designed to help the exhibitor bring this increased public into his theatre.

These essentials—very big and broad ones they are—are part and parcel of every campaign of higher dealer prices. The dealer has every reason to insist upon them.

But—on the exhibitor's part—it is a prime necessity that he avail himself of their full assistance.

Other dealers, in other lines, are co-operating successfully with manufacturer advertising and selling policies. It is up to the picture exhibitor—not alone in the large cities but equally in the small towns—to borrow this spirit.

* * * *

THERE are many angles to this important situation of high rentals. And we shall treat of them in future editorials.

It is a very easy matter to be convinced—alternately—of the justice of both sides in the controversy. It would be very simple to state in all sincerity editorial opinions which might be greatly modified by later evidence.

The present point is that discussion, wide, freehanded discussion, is badly needed. These columns are open to it.

Our position—we hope to be believed—is wholly neutral. We are aiming only to clear the air—principally through the discussion which we have invited.

What have you to say on the subject?

Turner and Dahnken Invade East with State Rights Plans

Prominent Pacific Coast Firm, Controlling Fourteen Theatres, and Member of First National Circuit, Will Open Office in New York December 1—Bid for Coast Territorial Rights

REPORTS current late last week in New York that the Turner and Dahnken Company, the prominent Pacific Coast film organization, planned a wide expansion of interests in the near future were confirmed on Monday by exclusive San Francisco advices to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Turner and Dahnken will on December 1st open offices in New York. The T. & D. organization will bid for all productions in the independent field. Present reports indicate that they will be interested only in the California, Nevada and Arizona territories, though film men will watch with unusual interest this radical move on the part of a firm so long identified only with the Pacific Coast.

Turner and Dahnken are active members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It is stated on excellent authority that the recently announced plans conflict in nowise with the circuit's relations with the First National. The Turner and Dahnken organization is at present waging a strenuous campaign on the initial First National release, "On Trial," and following the recent New York meeting of the latter organization is making preparations for vigorous work on the coming Chaplin subjects.

E. Bruce Johnson, secretary of the Turner and Dahnken Company, is authority for the statement regarding the organization's plans to open New York offices. Ralph Clark, well known in Pacific Coast film circles, will arrive in New York early in October to select a location and will remain in charge of the offices. Mr. Clark was formerly manager in San Francisco of the World Film office. E. F. Ascher will look after the direction of the enlarged San Francisco booking office.

The Turner and Dahnken Circuit now controls fourteen theatres on the Pacific Coast, all representative of the last word in the presentation of photoplays. The most recently opened is the T. & D. theatre, at Stockton, with a seating capacity of 2,500. J. T. Turner is president of the Turner and Dahnken organization; Fred Dahnken, vice-president, and E. Bruce Johnson, secretary. Claude L. Langley holds the posts of managing director and treasurer.

The headquarters of the theatre chain are in San Francisco. Here the company has recently completed the erection of a $100,000 office building at Golden Gate avenue, between Jones and Leavenworth streets. In addition to San Francisco, where the chain operates the Tivoli Opera House, the other cities in which is is represented are Sacramento, San Jose, Berkely, Richmond, Watsonville, Hanford and Reno, Nev. Turner and Dahnken contemplate entering other cities.

Another Theatre Property for S. A. Lynch

S. A. Lynch, majority stockholder of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, a concern controlling thirty amusement houses in the Southeastern States, last week took over the New Jefferson theatre in St. Augustine, after having spent $2,000 in completely remodeling the interior and exterior of the building.

H. D. Hern, formerly assistant manager of the Imperial theatre in Jacksonville, has been made manager of the New Jefferson.

After having been closed temporarily for the purpose of remodeling, the Imperial theatre in Jacksonville reopened last Saturday with George M. Cohan's success, "Seven Keys to Bald Pate" as a headliner.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises now own and operate the Arcade, Imperial, Rialto and Duval theatres in Jacksonville, and only this week took over a large theatre in St. Augustine.

W. J. Bowman Launches Out as Producer

Bow Man Picture Corporation, which recently filed papers with the California Secretary of State, will shortly begin production at a studio now being erected in Los Angeles.

W. J. Bowman is managing director, and will first produce an Alaskan story. He is now in Chicago in company with his leading man, W. T. Miller, where players and properties needed are being contracted for. The company has purchased a pack of fifty Alaskan dogs, which are now en route to Los Angeles and will be used in the first picture.

Margaret Mayo Special Guest at Philadelphia

Stanley V. Mastbaum, director of the Stanley Company in Philadelphia, recently entertained a large number of newspaper men at dinner in the Bellevue-Stratford. Margaret Mayo, author of the Goldwyn Picture, "Polly of the Circus," was a special guest.

Following the dinner "Polly of the Circus" was presented at the Stanley theatre. Richard Beamish, managing director of the Press, presented Miss Mayo to the audience. She responded with much eloquence.

Broadway Run for Brenon's "Fall of the Romanoffs"

Herbert Brenon's latest production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," shown to the trade in a private exhibition at the Ritz-Carlton recently, is to have a Broadway run.

It is to be shown at the Broadway theatre two weeks, beginning next Sunday afternoon, September 23.

The engagement will be a limited one owing to the fact that it is impossible at this time of the season to get a theatre.

Alice Brady in Vaudeville Through South

Alice Brady, having resigned from the World Film to organize a company of her own, relaxed by taking a flying trip, incidentally receiving an ovation of her own.

Through Atlanta, Birmingham, Memphis and New Orleans she sang and played her way in a clever act. Now, with this period of rest and quiet to sustain her, she is ready to step into the arduous duties in a studio.

Aubrey M. Kennedy Gains Goldwyn Promotion

Aubrey M. Kennedy, since the middle of last winter manager of Goldwyn's Studios in West Fort Lee, N. J., has been appointed to the newly created position of manager of productions which gives him opportunity to accelerate Goldwyn's progress in the efficient production of the company's annual output of twenty-six big pictures.

As a result of Mr. Kennedy's elevation the position of business manager has been created at the studios and into this office steps H. J. Flint, a newcomer in the Goldwyn ranks.

E. W. Hammons, Educational Films, Closes More Contracts

E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation of America, announces two additional contracts.

The Walter Baier Film Company will handle the "Living Book of Nature" animal pictures by Raymond L. Ditmars and the scenic pictures in Wisconsin and Minnesota. E. V. Richards of the Saenger Amusement Company has closed for all releases, the "Living Book of Nature," Palmer's Cartoons, scenics and educational pictures for Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi and Alabama.

Trykay Film Company to Make Negro Comedy

The Trykay Film Company is the latest organization to choose Chicago as the place for its activities. Ogden K. Hunsaker, formerly of the Keystone Company, and E. F. Hurley, a newspaper man and publicity purveyor, formerly associated with the Continental Producing Company of Los Angeles, are the heads of the new organization.

Their specialty will be colored comedies. Not of the many tinted varieties, however. Just plain black comedies, with the casts made up of negroes. They are to be of two-reel lengths. The first is to be known as "The Darktown Fire Brigade."

Good Batting for William Russell's Productions

"Sands of Sacrifice" is the first of a new series of William Russell productions under Mutual's schedule of two a week. It was directed, as were the pictures in the recent series of Russell successes, by Edward S. Sloman.

"Day of Mushroom Picture Financiers is Past"

Frenzied Money-Seeking Coterie Hurt Industry, Says Rothacker—New Companies Should Be Encouraged, but Must Prove Business Principles

By WATTERSON ROTHACKER

SPEAKING of the frenzied finance coteries who have wished themselves upon the motion picture inlustry: "How do they get away with it?" Or rather, "How they do get away with it!"

It would take a flock of Burroughs adding machines to register the toll in failures and disappointments taken by the promoters who have ridden into opulence by plagiarizing Baron Munchausen and peddling a line of lovely literature.

By this time I don't believe that there are many who have not heard, or at least read about the beguiling romance of our well pressagented celluloid kings.

Statisticians of elastic mind have figured it so that it seems to be no difficult trick to coax the coin into the thousand and one promise depots where it buys a cute certificate and a chance to ride up to the hall of fame in the same elevator with our more or less wealthy old guard, who got their's when the getting was good. And so every day sees the birth of a new bonanza, bigger or better or more promising than the El Dorado outfit which faded into profitable failure the day before.

How does this affect the real motion picture industry? Certainly failures, misrepresentations and kindred things have no power to reflect credit, and certainly these things have an effect more material and direct than mere injury to the good name of the motion picture industry. In some cases, established organizations are temporarily disrupted, for about the first thing the new fiim kings do is to wave a big salary raise in the face of the director, actor, cameraman or laboratory employee who, by holding the dollar too close to his eye loses sight of the sum and incidentally loses sight of the weekly pay envelope.

And then, of course, many of the promoters have the presence of mind to actually start and finish a picture, and, of course, this picture is thrown on the market. You would be surprised to know how many of these film children see the light of the projecting machine, and you would be surprised how much real, good money is shoveled into the making of a no-good reel. But these pictures do find their way into the theatre and where they do it means that an opportunity to show a good reel at the same time and at the same place has gone forever, and it means, also, that the exhibitor has disappointed his patrons.

The unfortunate part of the whole situation is that more than a few of the sponsors of these new companies are clean, honest men who are filled with sincere intentions to the exclusion of film knowledge, and these men apparently jump into the moving picture industry with the idea that any one who can pay the bills can make a picture. Some of them carelessly forget to remember anything about paying bills.

A new company should be encouraged upon its entrance to our field provided it comes to us with honest intentions and the feeling that perhaps men who have been in the business for years are in a position to offer some helpful advice.

Our industry can stand for a lot of new blood—new ideas should be welcomed—new comers should be invited to show us something better if they can, but the organization making its initial bow to the "reel" world should realize that the yesteryear of easy film fortunes is in the dim irretrievable past, and that to make good and make money today requires a keen knowledge of the business, proper organization and capital, careful government of production, judicious expenditure of funds, and a system based upon the understanding that legitimate profits are desired and expected.

If the stock jobbing element is eliminated, the new recruit is just as welcome to the motion picture industry as a regular man is to the United States Marine Corps; but the obligation to make good and prove worthy is there too, and the budding film magnate should bear this in mind right from the jump.

To Rebuild Burned Theatre

The Romo theatre at Kitchener, Ont., was completely gutted by fire not long ago, but the owners have decided to rebuild. It was the leading picture place in the town.

Theatrical Profession's War Loan Film Shown

The theatrical profession's picture filmed for the express purpose of aiding the Government in raising the Liberty Loan is to be given a pre-release showing at 10.30 Tuesday morning, September 18, at the Strand Theatre.

Herbert F. Rawll sent out the invitations late in the week, titling the feature temporarily, "Three Billion Dollars in Three Weeks." This title, of course, is subject to change on general release.

The invitations bear grateful acknowledgments to the Lambs Club, to many prominent members of the dramatic profession, to the Strand theatre and to officials and employes of various film producing companies who gave gratuitous services cheerfully rendered in the preparation and showing of the production.

It is announced that the picture is meant to depict "The Spirit of America in Patriotic Episodes."

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

Every Loyal Exhibitor to Participate in "Smokes Week"

Motion Picture Division of "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" Sets Aside Week of Thanksgiving for Concerted National Action to Procure "Smokes" for Lads in Trenches—Every Exhibitor Will Be Given Opportunity

WHAT THE SECRETARY OF WAR SAYS:

"The War Department approves of their enterprise (that of those who take part in raising the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund") and thanks them in behalf of many a homesick soldier and sailor who will be cheered not merely by the kindly gifts themselves, but still more by the spirit of cordial and homely sympathy which inspires them."

"Gun Smoke Everywhere—

But not a whiff of TOBACCO SMOKE to cheer a fellow up!"

This Advertisement Can Be Clipped and Reproduced for Your Program or Newspaper Copy

EVERY one of the fifteen thousand exhibitors in the United States will receive, in the course of the next few days, a letter from the Motion Picture Division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," of which MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the official organ, a letter asking him personally to take part in a gigantic campaign of money-raising during the week of November 25—Dec. 1—Thanksgiving week. The receipts of the "Smokes week" will be used in the worthy cause of buying tobacco for our soldiers in France and Belgium.

While the details of the "Smokes week" campaign can not be given out completely now, the exhibitors will be told in the letters that receptacles for collecting coins and smokes will be sent to them free, with charges prepaid, together with posters for lobby displays.

Send for That Card

Exhibitors are urged to start the ball rolling now. If you have not yet sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card to be posted in your lobby, you are urged to send for it immediately.

Many exhibitors—and they are in all cases the most progressive ones—are giving the tobacco fund campaign space in their advertisements.

The Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund is making splendid progress. The receipts to date are nearly $90,000, and the money is pouring in. Cigarettes and cigars from exhibitors will be invoiced and they will be credited with actual invoice value.

The demand for cigarettes in bulk is increasing. While thousands of cigarettes are already coming in, exhibitors are urged to back up their campaign with the greatest possible efforts. Pack the cigarettes according to the instructions in the panel on the accompanying page, and send all that you have on hand immediately.

Right Spirit Is There

Exhibitors who are taking part in the campaign will be interested to know that the inquiries for cards are increasing every day. A typical letter is published herewith. It comes from M. P. Stewart, manager of the Prince theatre, Leesburg, Fla.

Gentlemen:—Willing and glad to do our bit for "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" we request that you kindly send us a "Drop a Penny" card for our lobby, and our patrons will not be found wanting in their contributions to this simple act of appreciation and devotion. There are some sturdy young patrons of the "Prince" now on French soil, and we never project an army scene on our screen (which we do twice each week in news subject) that our thoughts do not go out to them with a blessing and a prayer.

We will send them our share in a contribution of tobacco or money to buy it. Give us the necessary information for mailing contributions of either money of tobacco. We thank you.

Yours very truly,
PRINCE THEATRE.

Paralta Capacity Forty Productions Yearly

Carl Anderson, Who Came East with S. A. Lynch, Reviews the Recent Progress on the Coast, Where Studios Are Made New

Paralta dignitaries in an outdoor conference. They are Carl Anderson, Edwin J. Naylor and Robert Brunton

CARL ANDERSON returned from the Hollywood Studios of the Paralta organization Sunday, accompanying S. A. Lynch, president of the Triangle Distributing Corporation on his journey from the West coast.

Mr. Anderson expressed himself as very much pleased over the organization of the Paralta Studios, as it has been developed since May last by Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Plays, Inc., and Robert Brunton, studio manager.

In that brief time one of the ablest technical staffs in the country has been brought together, accommodations for five producing units have been provided and four big star feature productions have been completed.

In addition to this, two big stages have been built, 50 by 200 feet, one open-air and the other enclosed; a great property building has been constructed, which has been filled with an immense quantity of properties of every description; portable electric lighting apparatus has been provided for the taking of night pictures in any locality, and woodcarving, plaster working and other departments for the making of special properties have been added to the original Clune Studio plant, which Paralta leased.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Anderson concluded the negotiations under which Reginald Barker will permanently join the Paralta forces as director for Bessie Barriscale's company. He has been directing her production of "Madam Who" during the past two months.

Mr. Anderson also concluded negotiations with Rhea Mitchell under which she will become a Paralta star at the head of her own company, making eight big feature productions annually. Miss Mitchell will begin work immediately.

There are now four companies established at the Paralta Studios at Hollywood—J. Warren Kerrigan, who has nearly recovered from his broken leg and will resume work in two weeks; Bessie Barriscale, Henry B. Walthall and Rhea Mitchell. Mr. Anderson also took up negotiations with a fifth star, which will be concluded in a few days. This star will add one more producing unit to the Paralta Studios, giving it a capacity of forty star feature productions each year.

William Fox Aims at Word Brevity in Titles

Pungent Attraction in Pithy Name-Pieces as Well as Billboard and Electric Sign Economy—Getting One Is a Problem

THE brevity of the name-pieces of the William Fox productions is due to no mere chance happenings or coincidences. The titles selected have been chosen with word-conservation as one of the paramount considerations, because of some very definite theories Mr. Fox holds concerning them. Mr. Fox says:

"I believe that one of the most important tasks confronting any producer of plays for the silent or the spoken stage, just as it confronts the author of a book, is in deciding what he shall call the picture or the drama. The problem is decidedly serious because the fate of the completed film, representing generally an investment of not less than $50,000 may rest upon a thing so seemingly slight as the title.

"The average picturegoer may not realize it, but a decision to see one or two films will depend usually upon which of them has the more appealing title. It is, therefore, necessary to consider psychology of human emotions in naming a play.

"The odds, too, are on the side of the short, pithy title, made up of one or two simple words, easy to remember. Economy, the watchword of the day, is highly essential in picking words for the title, because the producer has to think of billboards and electric light signs.

"Excepting the filming of books, in which the picture retained the original title, there have been 38 five or six reel releases by Fox Film Corporation since January 1, 1917. A total of only 108 words were used to name them—an average of 2.8 words per film. Twelve of the pictures had two word titles; sixteen, three word; eight, four word. Miss June Caprice had the only one and five word titles, "Patsy," and "A Child of the Wild."

"It is readily apparent, with these statistics in mind that we practise what I preach."

Next Screen Club Frolic Sept. 19

The date for the next Screen Club frolic has been set for Sept. 19. The announcements calls for all members to be present at 11 P. M. on that date. Max Schachtel, president of the Victor Film Service Company, has donated the use of his offices as the scene of the party.

Higher Prices in Regent Theatre, Toronto

In line with other price increases is the action of the Regent theatre, Toronto, Can., which has celebrated the completion of its first year of operation by announcing a new policy.

At the evening performances the new price will be thirty-five cents instead of twenty-five cents for the ground floor and twenty-five instead of fifteen cents for the mezzanine floor. Matinee prices, except for Saturdays and holidays, are fifteen and ten cents, and on the special days twenty-five cents and fifteen cents.

The new program includes a symphony concert every afternoon for half an hour, starting at 4.15, and a solo number at every performance by a special artist. Manager Roberts also states that he will insist on absolutely first-run pictures, simultaneously with New York release dates when possible.

C. E. Shurtleff New Sales Manager for Select

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, is rapidly strengthening the sales staff. C. E. Shurtleff assumes the position of sales manager.

Shurtleff is known in the trade for special work he has done for the Pathe organization. As special representative for Pathe, during the past year, Shurtleff organized a sales system which proves remarkably effective.

Three years ago Mr. Shurtleff joined the World Film Corporation, afterward leaving it to go with the V-L-S-E as branch manager, being in turn in charge of exchanges at Detroit, Cincinnati and Cleveland. He made a high record for sales. It was to join Pathe that he relinquished his V-L-S-E connection.

With Select Shurtleff will devote his energies especially to producing a highly efficient sales corps. To this end he intends to make a comprehensive study of the field covered by Select exchanges.

Advertising Mainspring of Industry—W. W. Irwin

Speakers at Banquet of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at Delmonico's, Hear Speeches from Vitagraph President and from Arthur James and P. A. Parsons, All Giving Full Credit to Publicity

THE wonderful success of advertising and publicity in upbuilding the motion picture industry was the theme of speakers at the banquet of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at Delmonico's. Guests of honor were Walter W. Irwin of Vitagraph and Joseph Engle and J. Robert Ruben of Metro. Arthur James, president, was in the chair.

Invitations were extended to Albert E. Smith, William Fox, William A. Brady, Carl Laemmle, Adolph Zukor, L. J. Selznick, Richard Rowland, Edgar Selwyn, J. A. Berst, Samuel Goldfish and others important in the producing and distributing ends of the business.

Irwin Says It's a Mainspring

Mr. Irwin, who was the organizer of V.L.S.E. and of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, said:

"Of publicity, I should like to say this. It is the mainspring of our age and the keystone of the film industry. Unless pictures are exploited properly they will not accomplish the purposes for which they are made—revenue and entertainment. Publicity and advertising, to my mind, are synonymous.

"Advertising and publicity men, to be successful and of value to this or any other industry, must be expert salesmen. Because all of their work is sales work. They must be better than the average salesmen because they must sell without coming in personal contact with their customer."

Some Great Accomplishments

Arthur James, in his annual address, said:

"We have cooperated with the National Board of Review in the suppression of the sex advertising in territories where perfectly decent screen plays were advertised and exploited as highly spiced and in many instances absolutely indecent. First in the State of Texas and then in the State of Washington, and later in other sections, we waged successful warfare on theatre efforts of this sort, until now the instances are few and gratifyingly far between.

"When the war came our organization mobilized in twenty-four hours and placed before the Federal authorities a detailed recruiting plan, with poster ideas, with slides, with patriotic propaganda, that was accepted by such men as General Leonard Wood, Brigadier General Walsh, Captain John F. Lucey, Alexander J. Hemphill, Rear Admiral Usher and others as the best recruiting plans and the best recruiting ideas supplied by any civilian organization in the United States."

Among the speakers were Harry Reichenbach, Randolph Bartlett, editor of the Photoplay; Fred Schaefer, Mr. Ruben, Maxwell Karger, Nat Rothstein, Mr. Engel, and P. A. Parson, chairman of the banquet committee.

Yes, Publicity Pays

Mr. Parsons delivered a pointed and purposeful address, part of which follows:

"Does publicity pay? Ask your exchange men, your salesmen. Ask the exhibitor who plays your pictures. Ask the local newspaper man, ask even the fan. You will learn that certain pictures do not go well in certain communities because 'the star is not known.'

"Four years ago when I first came into this business, the newspapers which had a motion picture column or page could be counted almost upon the fingers of one hand, and to get more than a bare inch of space in a big daily newspaper was an achievement of which to be proud. Today, outside of the City of New York, where the newspapers have persisted in looking at the motion picture from the standpoint of advertising instead of circulation, practically every newspaper of any size or standing has its photoplay editor and its photoplay page."

C. C. Pettijohn Replies to Trade Review

Says A. E. A. Is Not Running and Is Fighting, but Is Fighting Right—Advises Conference with Composers

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general manager and executive secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, in a statement for that organization, says that the recent "running, not fighting" editorial in the Exhibitors' Trade Review is "in keeping with their policy to misrepresent and mislead exhibitors." He adds:

"The American Exhibitors' Association has no official organ, but we do appreciate the support of the numerous papers who believe we are right. This association did not intend to say or do anything that might in the least discourage any man or set of men engaged in any fight for the exhibitor."

The statement goes on to say that the American Society of Composers and Publishers is operating under a provision of the copyright act, section 1 of subdivision E, which gives to a musical author the exclusive right to perform the copyrighted musical composition publicly for profit.

This right, he says, has been sustained in the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Victor Herbert against the Shanley Company. The court held that performing copyrighted music in a cafe or cabaret, whether admission is charged or not, is an infringement of copyright.

On the question whether this decision applies also to motion picture theatres, Mr. Pettijohn says two opinions have been given, both of them stating that it does so apply to movie houses. A. L. Jacobs, a well-known theatrical lawyer, so advised the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., and Edmund Wise, another well-known copyright specialist, Mr. Pettijohn says he is reliably informed, gave like advice to the Brooklyn League of Motion Picture Exhibitors. Mr. Pettijohn's statement adds:

"I believe Congress intended to accord to the creator of the composition a monopoly for twenty-eight years.

"The musical entertainment is an integral part of some motion picture attractions, and in a great many cases the musical program is a distinctive feature of the house.

"In the American Society we find such names as Victor Herbert, John Philip Sousa, Raymond Hubbell, Irving Berlin, Jerome D. Kern, Ray Goetz, Ernest Ball, Gus Edwards, Rudolf Frimi, Sylvio Hein, Edgar Leslie, Theodore Morse, Jack Norworth, A. Baldwin Sloane, Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo and hundreds of others.

"These men being artists are not difficult to approach or to negotiate with. If we do not blink at the facts and fairly recognize that these composers are daily conceiving and creating melodies which appeal to our public and which we need in our theatres for its entertainment, then why should we not meet these men in a spirit of fairness and concede to them that they have created something we want in our business? Considering the matter in that light and relying upon the expression of their representatives as to their willingness to meet us half way, would it not be best to meet in conference and adjust our differences?"

As a parting shot, Mr. Pettijohn says:

"No, Mr. Trade Review, we are NOT running and WE ARE fighting, but we are trying to fight right."

"Fighting Odds" Substituted for "The Eternal Magdalene"

After all, Maxine Elliott's debut on the screen as a Goldwyn star will be in the big emotional drama, "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb—and there's a reason.

To get to the point quickly, "The Eternal Magdalene," previously announced as the first of Goldwyn's Maxine Elliott productions, has been challenged by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors and by the Chicago censor board. So a change has been made.

This means that "The Eternal Magdalene" and the points at issue with the two censor organizations can be threshed out and adjusted without holding up any Goldwyn customers or disarranging their playing dates. The National Board of Review, it will be recalled, declared that "the world as an audience owed Goldwyn a vote of thanks for making this remarkable picture."

In "Fighting Odds," Miss Elliott obtains an introduction to picture audiences of the world under most favorable conditions. In this picture she is as charming and beautiful as in the role of the Magdalene. She figures as the heroine of a powerful emotional drama by two of America's foremost dramatic authors, Mr. Megrue and Mr. Cobb.

Hiram Abrams is to "Swing Around Circle"

President of Paramount to Tour Country, Visit All Cities of More Than 20,000 Population, This to Meet Exhibitors

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of Paramount, has started on a four months' tour of the country to get into personal touch with exhibitors. It is said to be the most extended tour and the widest survey of distributing and exhibiting conditions that has ever been undertaken by a motion picture executive. All towns of more than 20,000 population are to be visited.

The prime purpose of the trip is to establish a point of personal contact between Mr. Abrams and exhibitors in all parts of the country, looking toward a better mutual understanding, a more sympathetic and logical appreciation on the part of the distributing and exhibiting elements of the problems of each, and a greater degree of service and a higher standard of co-operation by Paramount and Artcraft toward their clients.

In announcing the extent of his trip and the inherent hope of furthering the welfare of exhibitors which inspired it, Mr. Abrams on the eve of his departure, said:

"Never before in the annals of this industry have exhibitors evidenced such a general degree of prosperity, and such a wholesome prospect for expansion and advance. All such substantial periods of progress with an industry offer unusual opportunities for constructive and permanent improvement, and it is for this reason, at this time, when there is such a glowing and growing future for the exhibitor-body of America, and when the new selective star-series system which we have just introduced has won such popular and national approval, that it is our desire to contribute what we can to the durability and security of the plans they are now building.

"As we have often said, we realize that the exhibitors of the country are actually the partners of the producers. Their combined endeavors and their harmonious co-ordination are necessary for the lasting success of both. I will therefore strive mightily to make the conferences I contemplate with exhibitors assume the nature of a meeting of partners for the discussion of the possibilities of enhancement of their common interests, and the extension of our service powers to them."

B. P. Schulberg, general manager of Paramount, will accompany Mr. Abrams on his trip, and will compile a statistical chart graphically illustrating the results and information which the conferences will disclose, to be utilized as a basis for the constructive work that will follow immediately upon the termination of the trip.

Vitagraph Easily Defeats Major Funkhouser

Court Without Comment Orders Approval of "Within the Law," Which the Chicago Censor Demanded Should Be Cut Many Times

ANOTHER producing company has defeated Major Funkhouser, the Chicago censor. This time it is Vitagraph, and the decision is important as pointing the way to get rid of the entanglements the major so frequently erects to bar out films.

Vitagraph's proceedings was a petition for mandamus to compel him to approve "Within the Law" without deletions, fifteen of which he had ordered. His cuts, where they had any reason, were apparently meant to remove from the picture all reference to the police "third degree."

The court orders that "Within the Law" be approved as it is—and is now being shown in cities all over the country. The mandamus is directed against the superintendent of police in Chicago who, in fact, is "Major Funkie's" superior.

With the refusal of the city attorneys to allow Mayor Thompson to take the witness stand the attorneys for Greater Vitagraph had little trouble in proving their case. They based the greater part of their argument on the fact of the popularity of "Within the Law" as a legitimate play in Chicago. They proved how it had been allowed to run for many weeks without interference from the police of anybody else, also that there was no reason why there should be any interference.

The judge made his decision without comment, and the attorneys representing the city filed notice of appeal.

The city attorneys also endeavored to prevent the showing of "Within the Law" until after the appeal had been decided. Judge Crowe denied this motion, again siding with Greater Vitagraph attorneys.

Immediately following the decision scores of exhibitors flocked to the Chicago branch of Greater Vitagraph clamoring to book "Within the Law," which they have been prevented from booking through the action of Major Funkhouser. So great was the demand for bookings that it was necessary for the Chicago branch manager to wire the home office for several extra prints of the big feature.

Gets Universal Office

J. S. Carp has been appointed manager of the serial department in Twenty-third street branch of the Universal Film Exchange.

Exhibitors Face Added Burden in Transportation Tax

Another tax applying both to exhibitors and exchange men alike is that upon transportation, for the Senate provides that upon every parcel or package transported from any point in the United States to another by parcel post on which the postage amounts to twenty-five cents or more, a tax of one cent for each twenty-five cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation shall be made and shall be paid by the consignor, and no parcel or package will be transported until a stamp or stamps representing the tax due shall have been fixed thereto. A tax of one cent for each twenty-five cents or fraction thereof paid to any one engaged in the business of transporting packages by express over regular roads is also to be made.

Red Cross Producing Seven-Reel Pageant

The Red Cross is to produce a motion picture and dramatic pageant on Oct. 5, in which many well known stars will take part.

The Rosemary Red Cross Pageant is to be divided into two parts, the first devoted to a series of symbolic scenes representing achievements of the allied nations; the second, a dramatic statement of the allied cause in the present war. The first half is spectacular—the second half is dramatic.

The performance begins with a classic prologue dedicating an altar to peace and enthroning a figure representing Civilization or Enlightenment. This prologue is worked out with all the possible beauty; with music, dancing and poetry.

W. A. S. Douglas Leases Kalem Studio, Glendale

Announcement will shortly be made to the trade of the organization of Diando Film Corporation, which is the latest enterprise of W. A. S. Douglas, who states he will make subjects for Pathe, starring Baby Marie Osborne.

Mr. Douglas has engaged William Bertram to direct the making of productions, and cast for the first picture will be made known early during the coming week. Alfredo Gondolfo, who has served as photographer of this child actress in a number of pictures, will be the supervising head of the photographic department.

Negotiations were closed this week for the purchase and lease of the Kalem Studio in Glendale, and the new company took possession Saturday. This studio, which was rebuilt early this year, has all modern equipment including a very complete lighting outfit. New stages were built, as well as dressing rooms and office quarters. Mr. Douglas plans a number of improvements which will be taken up at once. Norman Manning has been engaged as business manager.

Philadelphia Exhibitors Elect Officers for Year

At the annual meeting of the Philadelphia Motion Picture Exhibitors' League the following officers were elected:

President, John O'Donnell, first vice-president, Sam Blatt; second vice-president, J. Conway; secretary, Charles Goodwin; assistant secretary, Ben Shindler; treasurer, Harry Green.

The executive committee will be appointed at the October meeting. This meeting will be followed by luncheon, plans for which are in the hands of Mr. Blatt.

Meetings have been changed to the first Tuesday of each month, to suit the greater convenience of the members, now numbering sixty-five in good standing.

At the September meeting of the league the appointment of an adjustment committee, which will arbitrate all matters between exhibitors and exchange men or between competing exhibitors, was, in the opinion of leading members of the Philadelphia league, the most important step for the good of the film industry. The members appointed on this committee are: Columbus Stamper, John S. Evans, Samuel Blatt, Harry Green, W. S. Boyd, J. Conway, E. Jeffries.

The Pennsylvania delegates to Chicago voted to retain membership in the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which action received the indorsement of the Philadelphia body.

Los Angeles Asso. Invited to Affiliate with N. A. M. P. I.

The Motion Picture Producers' Association of Los Angeles has been invited to become affiliated with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry through a resolution which was adopted at the recent meeting of the Producers' Branch Committee. The Pacific Coast body was formed some time before the creation of the National Association, a year ago, and with few exceptions its membership is the same as the Producers' Branch Committee of the National Association. Prominent members of both associations have for some time been agitating the question as to the advisability of an affiliation.

Provided this action is taken, the Motion Picture Producers' Association of Los Angeles will be designated as the Pacific Coast representative of the Producers' Branch Committee of the National Association, and all matters pertaining to the Coast will hereafter be referred to it. The other four branches of the National Association which have been represented on the Pacific Coast will undoubtedly join with the producers in perfecting an Advisory Committee, which will be a complete unit in itself, with the exact scope, functions and classifications of the parent body, for the purpose of acting upon matters of national importance. An Advisory Committee on the Coast would simplify and expedite the handling of such matters as are being constanly brought before the War Co-operation Committee and the working out of this plan is now in the hands of Adolph Zukor, chairman, and Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the Producers' Division of the National Association.

To Adopt Uniform Contract of Employment

Producers' Branch Forms Service Bureau and Is to Get Offices and an Expert and to Engage Artist-Players

AT a meeting of the Producers' Branch Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held on Saturday (September 8), the report of a special committee, which was appointed at a previous meeting to investigate the possibility of establishing a service bureau, was received and adopted.

Gabriel L. Hess, secretary of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, as chairman, submitted the report on behalf of the committee, the other members which are R. H. Cochrane of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, and Joseph W. Engel of Metro Pictures Corporation.

After a very thorough survey of the situation, covering a period of three months, the committee recommended the incorporation of a small company to be known as the Service Bureau of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., which will serve as an employment agency for the engaging of artists and players whenever the service of an agency is required, and all members of the Producers' Branch Committee have agreed to use this bureau in engaging their artists and studio employees. Application has been made for a license as an employment agency, and this department will be under the supervision of the License Bureau of the City of New York as well as of the State Department of Labor.

Negotiations have been practically concluded for the services of an expert in this line to manage the bureau, and leases have been prepared for spacious quarters in a centrally located building which will be convenient for everyone desirous of enlisting the bureau's aid.

It is proposed that a uniform contract should be adopted by the service bureau in employing artists and other help required in any branch of the industry, definite forms to be prepared for long term contracts as well as daily and weekly service.

The service bureau will be amply financed by the producer members and the net profits over and above the expenses of operation are to be paid into the treasury of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Charges American Industry With Imitation

Nat. S. Kaplan, of Russian Art Films Declares He "Is Amazed" with American Methods; "Cannot Appropriate My Stars However"

BY NAT. S. KAPLAN

"I AM amazed at America. That is, I am amazed at the film industry and some of the methods which appear to be sanctioned in it, apparently without comment, let alone the condemnation they deserve.

"Let me be specific. Several weeks ago I arrived in New York, after a perilous departure from Moscow and an arduous trip across Siberia, the Pacific Ocean and the American continent. I brought with me more than fifty negatives of motion picture dramas produced by the best actors in Russia and based on stories written by Russian authors whose fame is world wide. There was no secret about my coming. My arrival in New York was generally reported, and in subsequent weeks my purpose in coming, my hopes and ambitions were duly recorded. It was announced that I came with a message from the new Russia, that I hoped to deliver this message through the medium of a repertory of photoplays 'Made in Russia.'

"It was further announced that these plays were 'actually produced in Russia by celebrated Russian stars from stories of world-renowned Russian authors.' Also it was stated that 'in Russia the stars are personalities, jealously guarded. They are known and loved for the parts they play and their artistic sphere is circumscribed within the borders of their native land.' With my approval, my representative announced that 'their appearance in America will be an event.'

"I ask you to mark the quoted portions well and compare them with the following: 'Made in Russia. The first great Russian features presenting world-famous Russian artists in motion pictures. Although Russia—under the old regime—jealously guarded her many celebrated stars, refusing to allow them to leave the country, their fame has spread to all lands and their initial appearance in America marks a new era in the history of motion pictures.'

"The name of the company which uses the phrases given in the previous paragraph resembles closely the name I have given to my company. Its address is the same. There is only one thing the other fellow has overlooked. He has not appropriated my stars. And he cannot appropriate them, because I control the motion picture production of Russia. Mozukin, Lesienko, Fetner, Colodna, Caralli, Nelska, Zovska and the rest will be seen in America only in the productions of the Russian Art Film Corporation.

"Imitation may be the 'sincerest form of flattery,' but I repeat: I am amazed at America."

Fund Raised to Finance Fight on Funkhouser

There is a movement on foot, it is said, among the Chicago exchange and branch managers of the leading film companies to oust Major Funkhouser, police censor, for his alleged antagonistic, arbitrary and unpatriotic interference with the showing of feature films in this city. The movement to have Herr Funkhouser "canned" is clothed in considerable secrecy. Little information as to the method to be pursued was to be gained.

It is said, however, that a fund is being raised to back what is to be a determined legal battle to show that Funkhouser is unfit for his job and to ask that he be removed. This fund is said to have already reached a total of $5,000. More is to be added.

Bringing Serial Profits Home

How Theaters Can Benefit the Most From the Exploitation Being Done by the Producers —Then Keep on Pounding Away

IN this week's discussion of advertising the serial we have taken Pathe's "The Seven Pearls," in which Mollie King is starred. Pathe does heavy new paper advertising on its serials, using a selected list of newspapers in the principal cities of the country and with contracts providing that the paper taking the advertising shall also carry short synopses of the week's episode each Sunday.

Pathe's plan on advertising is to use large copy well illustrated with pictures of the star. The campaign in the newspapers ranges from a solid page advertisement down to quarter pages. Pathe does not believe in using small advertising, but in large figures of the players and a minimum of reading matter. In addition to this advertising most of the newspapers themselves advertise the opening of the serial publication as a circulation booster.

As a matter of fact Pathe has been the pioneer in using striking newspaper advertising with numerous halftones as its style for advertising serials.

Certainly such a campaign is most valuable and is going to attract the attention of all the newspaper readers in your section to the picture, IF you couple the advertising that Pathe is doing up with your own theatre.

Where you have the first run of the serial in one of the cities where the picture is being advertised in the newspaper by Pathe, it is the simplest matter in the world. Take a space for your theatre under the advertisement or alongside of it and call attention to the fact that you are going to show the picture at a certain date.

Yet a very great number of first run theatres do not take advantage of this opportunity. For some reason they fail to see how they can benefit from a half page advertisement paid for by Pathe by using a small additional space adjoining the large advertisement.

Many exhibitors take the view that they are really paying for the bigger advertisement in their film rental. But they are not. If they knew the basic business principles of advertising and if they were familiar with newspaper rates, they would realize that Pathe was spending a great deal more with the newspaper in advertising than they expected to get from the first-run exhibitor.

They are counting on other bookings, benefit to theatres all through the section.

If you are running one of the smaller theatres or neighborhood houses in the same city, you conclude that you will not be able to devote great attention to the running an advertisement with the display, but we would strongly advise you to at least carry under your regular house advertisement a line saying "Coming: Mollie King in 'The Seven Pearls'." And it would be wise for you to carry a small advertisement, even if only a half inch deep, in the paper each Sunday that the synopsis of the story is run, announcing that you are going to show this serial. The costs will be very small and you will find that you are holding your patrons back to see the picture at your theatre.

If you have a theatre in a neighboring city where the paper in which the Pathe advertising is being done has a considerable circulation, you will feel that you cannot afford to advertise in the bigger city paper, but you certainly can afford to have a small display in your local paper, and you will find that the local paper circulation practically duplicates that of the bigger city paper and that you will get the benefit of the advertising.

Of course, you cannot do this if you wait until the last moment to book a serial. A great deal depends on your being early to act. There is no reason why you should wait until a picture is a month or two old before you make up your mind whether you will show it. You must remember that there is considerable in the MOMENTUM of a continued picture. Whether it is put over with billboard or newspaper advertising or no matter how, you will find that your public is going to know considerably about a picture right about the time that it is released. Get in on the ground floor and get the benefit for yourself of every bit of the publicity that the serial gains for itself.

In a later chapter of this discussion we will take up the Paramount serial, "Who Was 'Number One?'" which will be advertised in the newspapers along the lines of the Pathe campaign.

Now remember that there are other methods of advertising in addition to newspapers.

And remember this: When you are dealing with a serial you are not advertising a single picture, but one that you have on your hands for fifteen or twenty weeks and one in which you must create interest not only at the start, but keep the interest up. Don't conclude that the serial will carry itself along of its own interest. The greatest serial in the world is not going to make the most possible money for you if you start it with a hurrah and then forget it.

In the first place book the serial as early as you can. Get the date of your opening from the exchange and then immediately begin attracting attention to it.

Many houses make it a point to show a serial at least once a week. You will remember then in the general discussion of advertising a few weeks ago, we suggested that you do not kill interest in your current attraction by advertising others too far in advance. There certainly would be no sense in announcing a coming serial when you were showing only the second episode of another, but you can begin to advertise the second one on your screen and in every other way when your current story is nearing its end.

Slide advertising is probably more valuable with serials than with any class of pictures. And where this slide advertising is done intelligently a vast amount of interest can be worked up in a coming chaptered story. Here is a plan that has been followed by exhibitors with success. Suppose that you have booked Pearl White in a new serial and it is too early for you to announce it continuously. For the first week merely show a picture of Miss White with the announcement that she is coming, without naming the picture or the date. Follow this up with striking sentences from the Press Book that comes with all serials. Add as much mystery to the announcements as you can, but at the same time use the name of the picture without going to the extent of saying what the serial is. All of the producers furnish advance slides, but you can even improve on them if you will give them a local application. "Who Lost 'Seven Pearls' on Market street yesterday?" will attract a whole lot more attention than a stereotyped phrase. A whole lot of people will wonder if pearls were lost on Market street and you will create a great amount of word of mouth advertising.

But all the exhibitor aids in the world are not going to do you any good unless you are willing to think for yourselves.

If you publish a program carry the announcement of the coming serial there.

Begin to work your lobby to advantage early. As soon as you get your booking, put a picture of the star in the lobby. Better still keep changing the photograph. The manager who is making a specialty of showing serials will find it to his great advantage to collect every possible photograph of the popular serial stars that he uses. The publicity department of the various companies will send these to you at a small cost and the attention that these different pictures will attract in your lobby will bring you a lot of increased business.

Most successful exhibitors of serials find that it is very bad business to plaster the lobby with poster effects far in advance of the serial opening. If you feel that you want to attract some attention to it, because it is being shown at the first run house in your city, use a one sheet, in a neat frame in your

How Pathe Plans Advertising of Its Serials—Some of Its Exhibitor Aids

At the top of a specimen of the heavy newspaper advertising that Pathe does in a selected list of papers. The one reproduced here is taken from a half page ad. Note that the advertising refers to the paper in which the story appears and gives a list of theatres at which the picture will open. Below at the left is one of the lobby displays, there being a new one on each episode. At the right is a specimen of one of the tack cards. Pathe recommends the use of these liberally, especially for advance exploitation. At the bottom at the left is a puzzle that was supplied to exhibitors with "The Fatal Ring" as an aid in keeping up interest. Novelties along this line are supplied with each serial.

Arriving at Your Own Business First Important Problem For Every Exhibitor

KNOW your own business.

That's a very trite statement, perhaps, but do you know your own business? Do you know what you can afford to pay for productions in view of your past experience and with better prospects for the future open for you?

The average moving picture man is not a bookkeeper—too few of them have any claim to be called business men. A great many of them are wont to talk a great deal of how business is "going to the dogs," but they either have no evidence to show this or they don't know why they are losing money.

In the first place, every exhibitor should keep a record of every picture he shows. He should not be content with counting up the cash at the end of the day and figure out that he has made a certain amount and let it go at that. He should not only know what he is doing, but he should have his records to avoid future mistakes.

Published with this article is a suggestion for a daily record of theatres. Your printer can reproduce these at a very low cost after you eliminate the items that you may not think that you need and add any others that apply to your house.

You will note that this form provides for something more than a mere statement of expenses and receipts. It gives you a record which will show you what various brands of pictures are doing, the popularity of different stars, the class of pictures that are drawing well at your house, and what the opposition is doing.

Valuable Records

There is a feature on this form that we have never seen on any that has been used, and that is a percentage of the profits or loss on every picture that you show. It gives you your own box-office rating on pictures. These records will form a basis on which you may decide whether you can spend more for this class of pictures in the future. It ought to be the best estimate of the past drawing power of the various stars in your section—your best argument in meeting the solicitation of the exchange men, and, similarly, your best guide to avoiding the errors that you have made.

Note the space on the blank for "Remarks." Try to put down here the "Reason Why" for your success or failure.

You will say to yourself that you will remember these. You won't. Keep the record, and you will have something to constantly recall to you your successes and your errors. You will have something in black and white that is going to be the nursery of your ideas.

The amount of money that you can spend is dependent on the amount of money that you are making—and the amount of money that you can make. It is very apparent that a man earning $10,000 a year can afford a finer home than the man who is clearing a bare thousand. That's the day-to-day method of running a motion picture theatre—draining the profits dry every day. It is the plan that most of the exhibitors of the country are following—letting each day stand for itself.

Stand for Themselves

To a certain extent each photoplay, each star, each brand of pictures ought to stand for themselves, and the exhibitor should be influenced for the future by what these productions have done for him in the past. But the exhibitor has got to figure on the future. How much are you putting back in your business, in better service, stronger exploitation, more careful management?

The moving picture business, like any other, may be brought down to the personal plane. Let us say that you are a clerk making $25 a week. You are seeking promotion, if you have any ambition. Are you spending your income along the lines that are calculated to bring that increase? Are you using your money to buy better food to strengthen your constitution, like a moving picture show building itself up for the future? Is there a chance that you are neglecting your personal appearance in order to put a few dollars in the savings bank, and thereby decreasing your asset value to the firm for which you are working? That's the idea followed by the exhibitor who figures his success on the profits that he has in his pockets at the end of a day's business.

Income—and Outcome

You ought to know what you are making and what you can spend. You ought to be trying to put as much of this money back into your business, through better pictures, stronger advertising, a more pleasing theatre. But you ought not to be getting out beyond your depth and falling into the "splurge" class, for which there is but one fate.

It is exceedingly likely that you can increase your income by increasing your expenses, but know why you are taking this step whenever you do it. When an exchange man comes to you with a plan whereby he tells you that you can do a bigger business, listen to him, for he can probably show you that. But while you are talking, look back at your records and see what that man's pictures have done for you in the past. Note the suggestions that he makes for you to enlarge your sphere. Listen to his reasons why pictures are going to cost you more in the future.

The man who is selling you pictures ought to be interested in your prosperity. He ought to be working for your welfare, because he knows that his own is dependent on yours. He probably has good ideas of service. If we did not believe that service can increase your business we would not be conducting this department, and urging service, education, enterprise on you.

But when you do business with any one, do it on the basis of what you can afford. Do it with the intelligent understanding of the past.

Know your own business first.

Circle Theatre Issues Anniversary Booklet

Circle theatre, Indianapolis, which is under the direction of S. Barret McCormick, has issued one of the handsomest booklets ever gotten out by a theatre in marking the first anniversary of the theatre.

The anniversary issue consists of twenty-four pages including a handsomely designed cover and the inside pages which are illustrated with a wealth of halftones fully describing the theatre and giving the story of the success of the house. The entire booklet is prepared with such dignity and with an artistic conception that it is sure to draw new attention to the theatre.

While there is nothing of the boastful in the reading matter, all of it leaves the reader the impression that the Circle is in a class by itself that it has an appeal to the most appreciative. The booklet in this way has achieved the height of "quality advertising."

In these words the booklet tells of the success of the theatre's policies:

"So confident in the future of the drama on the screen, so sincere their sense of civic pride were the men whose efforts and finances made possible the Circle theatre that it was desired this should be the largest and finest institution of its kind in America; that it should represent the acme of architectural skill and be the embodiment of art. But greater than these was the wish that the Circle should stand, weighed not solely in the balances of profit, but live as a temple dedicated to a greater enjoyment of life.

"Today both ideals have been realized."

You are not going to war. The least you can do is to make things as comfortable as possible for the men who are fighting for you.

Don't be a slacker.

Are You the Lamb—or Mary?

MARY had a little lamb.

You remember how it tried to emulate Mary in her search after knowledge, and how the stern pedagogue treated the poor dumb creature.

But we hate to think what would have happened to the pedagogue if the lamb had been a RAM. The lamb was a meek little creature; he knew only enough to follow. We'd like to see any one try to lead a ram.

Mary, so far as the picture business is concerned, is the leading exhibitor of your section. Mary knows where she is going, has some definite scheme in mind. Are you one of the lambs that is following Mary?

Mary might be the producer or distributor. Maybe because Mary tells you that she knows the way to school you are following her—which means that you are letting the exhibitor or the producer show you how to run your business, and that you are simply trusting in them, trailing in their footsteps, waiting until they push the door open for you. How far do you expect to get by following?

Several of the producing companies are devoting a great deal of attention to service for the exhibitor. They can offer you a whole lot of good ideas, a great many service helps, the fruit of a lot of experience. But remember that they cannot do all the thinking for your individual case, especially if you, lamb-like, are content to follow, and never, ram-like, butt into the game for yourself and assert that you are on earth.

That doesn't mean that you need to go out and raise the very Sherman with the man who is trying to help you out.

But it does mean that you have got to think for yourself.

Are You One of Them?

WE will be greeted with gratitude for this statement:

There are not fifty theatres in this country who are selling their offerings, who are specializing for new business, who are doing anything more than appealing day after day to their own clientele. There are not fifty men in the exhibiting business today who are trying, intelligently, to sell more of their goods—to sell admission to more people.

WHY?

Today the writer had a long talk with the service head of one of the largest of the film corporations. For obvious reasons we cannot mention names. But said this man, who is one of the most intelligent in the industry:

"Do you know how many inquiries I have had in the past year bearing directly on service for a particular theatre—questions referring to how that theatre could increase business? ONE. We have had scores and scores of men who are showing our pictures regularly and without complaint, from whom we hear once in a while in laudatory comment. We know that sixty per cent of these exhibitors are not getting the most out of our service. But they won't write and ask us how to help them. What can we do? There's no use driving up a blind alley. A great many of them follow along the ideas that we shoot out to them, but there is a woefully small percentage that shows any idea of trying to think for themselves, who make any effort on their own part to sell their pictures. We'd a whole lot rather have an exhibitor now and then throw out one of our pictures that he thought was poor and put on one of a competitor, if he showed at the same time that he was really thinking about his business and trying to sell each picture to more and more men. We would know then that he was progressing. And we are willing to take our chance with the progressive salesman of the picture to the public.

THERE YOU ARE, MR. EXHIBITOR. MARY AND HER LITTLE LAMB.

Expert Helpers for You

VARIOUS producing companies are not only offering the exhibitors their general service from headquarters, but they have placed in the various exchanges experts who give special advice on individual needs, and yet they get poor results in the volume of exhibitor requests.

When the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU was launched, the NEWS knew full well what each one of the distributing and producing concerns was doing.

This bureau was not started to compete with the services of the producing companies, but to take the exhibitors' side of service, to show them the good things that the producers are dong for them and to warn them when they were being offered ideas that experience indicates do not pay. The editor of this particular department has been in touch with all classes of exhibitors for years. He ought to know how much the average showman is trying to do.

Last week we spoke of SUSPICION. It was not mentioned in the story about Mary, but it is a fact that when the lamb saw a piece of paper blow along the road, the angelic creature promptly shied around it. The lamb was very distrustful, except as to Mary. The lamb knew that Mary knew where she was going and so the lamb did not care so long as it was following Mary.

WHY ARE YOU IN THE MOTION PICTURE BUSINESS?

Don't you know that as long as you are following Mary you will never get anywhere except where she gets FIRST?

Stop being a lamb.

GROW HORNS AND START SOMETHING.

Here's the place to start it.

There are probably a lot of things that are printed here with which you do not agree. Why not SAY SO?

There are probably a lot of kicks about your service that you want to get out of your system, but you are afraid to do more than bleat.

Come over into the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU pasture. You'll find a lot of things here in the way of forage. You'll also find lots of room into which to kick up your heels. And if some one comes into the pasture and tries to lead you around where you don't know where you are going you will find lots of runway to take a jump at him.

For one day at least take this motto:

"I'LL BEAT MARY TO SCHOOL!"

Your Idea and Ours

PARK THEATRE, Boston, has capitalized on the idea of boosting a particular series of comedies, the cut printed here showing the display that is used each time that one of the Frank Daniels-Vitagraph comedies is shown. Note that the name of the comedian is given all of the prominence and the name of the current picture is carried in smaller lettering.

While the electric sign used by the Park is created from removable letters, it would also be practicable to have a special electric sign which need be put up only on the days a Frank Daniels picture was shown. Theatres not affording an electric sign could have special banners which would be preserved. This idea could be carried out just as well with a series or a serial. If you are playing a particular star's productions, or a particular series or serial, hit it with a smash every time you show one of the pictures. Make it "Frank Daniels" day, or whatever the picture may be.

EASILY one of the best of recent newspaper advertisements is that used by Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, under the management of Harold B. Franklin, in announcing Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus." This particular advertisement, which is reproduced here is two columns by five inches deep, and it seems to us that it embraces all of the ideas that should enter into successful advertising. In the first place it is distinctive. It features the name of the theatre first, as it should be featured in most ads, carries the dates prominently enough to attract attention and then brings the name of the star and the production up as the piece de resistance of the display. The only possible criticism is that it was not mentioned that this was the first of the Goldwin pictures, for this mention would have attracted the attention of patrons to future productions of this corporation after witnessing this first great success.

Note the way that the comedy and the concert orchestra are mentioned, brought out prominently, but not at the expense of the feature attraction.

One picture exhibited well means more than a hundred just THROWN on the screen.

KEITH'S THEATRE, Jersey City, cooperating with the Jersey Journal, pulled a clever advertising scheme in connection with the showing of Charles Ray in "The Clodhopper." While similar contests have been used in various sections, it is new so far as moving pictures are concerned. The contest included advertisements from thirty concerns, each one of which contained a section which, put together properly made a picture of Charles Ray. No names were mentioned in the various advertising, but the contestants were required to tell the name of the advertiser, his product, or his telephone number. There were thousands of answers in this contest.

Courtesy is not a mere promise. It must abide forever in your theatre.

MANAGER GEORGE J. FORHAM, of Griffin's theatre, Belleville, Ontario, aroused advance interest in the Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," by enlisting the services of one man and several small boys, dressing them up as gray ghosts and sending them around the streets of the city. The Saturday night before the opening the man, in costume, was stationed at the busiest corner and directed traffic, thereby attracting a great deal of attention. On the nights of showing the first episode of the serial he had the boys standing in front of his theatre, so that the people might make no mistake as to which house was showing "The Gray Ghost."

This costume stunt will attract attention in smaller cities, especially while the curiosity of the public is kept up long enough, and the announcement of the name of the picture not made until shortly before its showing.

When you sell a patron a ticket you are not selling him admission to your theatre—you are selling him your promise to amuse and interest him.

MANAGER WALTER F. DAVIS, of the Palace theatre, Des Moines, attracted so much attention by his lobby display on "The Slacker" that one of the local newspapers printed a photograph of it voluntarily. The accompanying cut shows the main feature of the display. The figure was made of wood and painted.

Before the figure had been up a full day the recruiting officers realized the value of it and placed men before the theatre with such good results that Manager Davis received a letter from the army officials thanking him for aiding enlistments.

If your patrons find that you don't know anything about your pictures before you show them, why should they trust you to be able to pick good attractions for them?

HERE is an idea worth considering in the way of exploiting serials, which you will find discussed on another page of this department. The Grand theatre, Newton, N. C., never send out a letter, whether it contains a business communication of a copy of the house programme without using the front of his envelope as an advertisement. The management has evolved a series of stickers which are attracting considerable attention. Although this one illustrated applies to "The Neglected Wife" the same idea can be used on any other serial.

Thought was the father of money.

THE New Star theatre, of Northfork, W. Va., is a small town theatre, but its manager is not with small town brains, for he realized the bulletin advertising value of the "Official British War Pictures," distributed by Pathe. But he knew that to get the crowds he must pack others than his American patrons into the theatre. The section has a large Italian and Hungarian population, and so the New Star management adopted the plan that is familiar through many "patent medicine" directions and printed his bill in all three languages. The result was the biggest business that was ever known in the theater on the opening of the series of pictures and the succeeding releases have enjoyed equal popularity.

The foreign population of your section is worth considering. Even though he may be able to read English, the alien likes to have an appeal made to him through his own language, and when you direct a special circular to him once in a while it is certain to attract his attention.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited; pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THEATRE A is located in a medium class residential section of a large city. Its appeal, its manager said, was confined to the residents in the radius of ten blocks at the most, but the house itself is located on a busy street where there are a large number of people passing, and these can only be attracted into the house by the display in front of the theatre.

The front of the house is twenty-five feet across with the ticket booth located in the center of a lobby some five feet deep, with the entrance on the right and the principal exit on the left. It occupies the lower floor of a five-story building and the manager therefore has only the display space of the lobby itself.

On the night the theatre was visited the principal picture was a vampire feature of a rather sensational sort with a notable star, a picture that has made money for many exhibitors. There was one huge lithograph of a scene from the production covering the upper part of the lobby and above that a painted strip carrying the name of the star and picture. But flanking this all around were one-sheets covering no less than twelve different pictures, two of them referring to shorter pictures on the same program, and the other ten to coming productions, one of them being as far off as a week. One got almost the whole future history of the house if one had time to stop and study. One's mind was immediately confused about the current attraction, though there was a bigger lithograph for the feature then being shown.

In this lobby were gathered some twenty children who had no apparent intention of entering the theatre, but merely standing around, speculating about scenes, or discussing matters in which they were interested. But their presence prevented the passerby from seeing the multitude of announcements even if one had time to stop and study them out. Patrons entering the theatre did stop and look at these multicolored announcements and lost time in entering the theatre and in clearing the lobby.

It was a very warm evening and the ticket taker was in his shirt sleeves, and gave further evidence of his Summer ennui by smoking a cigarette and now and then calling at some of the children in the lobby. The young lady cashier was reading a novel, giving the impression that business was not at all flourishing. She stopped her reading only long enough to sell the tickets and then returned to her book. The manager himself came up a few minutes later, asked the cashier how business was going, walked into the house and then came out and stood on the sidewalk awhile. He smiled tolerantly when one of the children came up to the writer and asked him for a nickel so that he could go into the picture show, but the manager did not warn the child not to be annoying people in front of the house, nor did he interfere with the youth.

Announcements of future pictures were being distributed as the patrons left the house. A great portion of these seemed to have been dropped in the lobby and they were still left there, apparently from the whole day's business. The manager did not stop strolling, the cashier reading or the ticket taker smoking long enough to see that they were cleaned out, and we suppose that the janitor was at home in bed.

At ten o'clock, after the larger part of the patrons had gone and the street more or less deserted the manager began to change his display for the following day, but the only change was that the vampire poster came down and another went up in its place, a new streamer was installed and the one-sheets for the next day's show tacked up. But there wasn't the slightest change in the location of any of the lithographs, no novelty in the display. Any one who saw the theatre one day would be sure to recognize it the next.

Was this your theatre?

Ince Congratulations Get Full Newspaper Page

George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, was able to get over a page of free advertising in the Herald-Republican on Sunday by having Thomas H. Ince, William S. Hart, Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray, who recently joined the Paramount forces, write letters to the paper telling how good they believed the paper's photoplay department to be. These letters were reproduced, together with pictures of the four writers, and then a story telling something about the new Ince plans and giving short, intimate sketches of the players.

Of course, Mr. Carpenter didn't try to get the name of his theatre mentioned. In the first place, that would have killed the feature with the newspaper, and in the second, that sort of publicity would have been too obvious to have any effect on the reader. Mr. Carpenter is letting everybody know in other ways that those players appear at his theatre. And of course everyone believed that all these letters were written to the newspaper simply as a matter of congratulation on the spur of the moment. And the newspaper got away with a good boost, for the general public wasn't "behind the scenes."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Statler Hotel's Rules for Courtesy Adopted by Arkansas Theatre

NEW theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., realizes the value of service to its patrons and it has just issued a little booklet adopting for its own policy that of the Statler hotels, recently become so well known through numerous magazine articles. In its introduction the booklet freely admits that it is plagiarized from the Statler policy. Here are some of the things that it says:

"New theatre is operated primarily for the benefit and convenience of its patrons.

"Without these patrons there could be no New theatre.

"These are simple facts easily understood.

"So then it behooves every man and woman employed by the New theatre to remember this always and to treat all patrons with courtesy and careful consideration.

"Any member of our force who lacks the intelligence to interpret the feeling of Good Will that the New theatre holds toward all patrons cannot stay here VERY LONG.

"New customers are just as valuable to us as old customers—remember that; for each new customer is an old customer in the making.

"See that you do your part to make him want to come back here, with his family and his friends.

"Impress upon him the fine good fellowship of the place; the 'No-trouble-to-help-you' Spirit.

"Never be perky, pungent, nor fresh—

"The patron pays your salary as well as the manager's. He is your immediate benefactor.

"Snap judgments of men oftentimes are faulty.

"A man may wear a red necktie, a green vest and tan shoes, and still be a gentleman.

"The unpretentious man with the soft voice may possess the wealth of Crœsus. The stranger in cowhide boots, broad brim and rusty black, may be president of a railroad or a Senator from over the ridge.

"You cannot afford to be superior or sullen with any patron of this theatre. The boss said so.

"Have every one feel that for his money we want to give him more sincere service than he ever before received at any theatre.

"At rare intervals some perverse member of our force may want to disagree with a patron as to the rightness of this or that. The patron may maintain that the house is too cool, when the employee may say that it is too hot. That the picture is run too fast when the employee says it is too slow. That the house is too brightly lighted. Or that he has seen the picture before. Or that the drummer plays too loudly.

"But these are PERMANENT INSTRUCTIONS: No employee of this theatre is allowed the privilege of arguing any point with a patron. He must adjust the matter at once to the patron's satisfaction, or call his superior to adjust it. Wrangling has no place in the New theatre.

"Each member of our force is valuable to us only in proportion to his ability to serve our patrons.

"A theatre has just one thing to sell. That one thing is service. The theatre that sells poor service is a poor theatre.

"The theatre that sells good service is a good theatre.

"It is the object of the New theatre to sell its patrons the VERY BEST SERVICE in the world.

"The service of a theatre is not a thing supplied by any single individual. It is not special attention to any one patron. Theatre service, Oh, that is, New theatre service—means the limit of courteous, efficient attention from each particular patron.

"This is the kind of service a patron pays for when he buys his ticket—whether it is for a ten cent show or a two dollar show.

"Every patron who enters the New theatre doors comes in because he believes that he can buy something here BETTER than he can buy at any other theatre.

"It rests with every employee of this theatre—ticket sellers, doorkeepers, ushers, operators, musicians, maids and the boss—whether he goes away disappointed or pleased.

"An usher who can say 'FILLUM' when the patron says 'FILLUM' and 'FILM' when the patron says 'FILM,' make the patron think himself right, and makes us think the usher is ALL right.

"And just here, take heed, that in all minor discussions between New theatre employees and New theatre patrons, the employee is dead wrong from the patron's standpoint—and from ours.

"BUT it is these little things that send a patron away to say, promptly,

"'I went to the New theatre.'

"Or, listlessly,

"'I went to a picture show.'"

Following this the New theatre devotes the second half of the booklet to a talk with the patrons, asking for their criticism and telling about the efforts the theatre is putting forward to serve them properly.

This little booklet is going to attract the attention of everyone who sees it, and it would be well for others to copy the New theatre in copying Statler.

Special Mystery Posters for Paramount's Serial

Paramount announces that the mystery feature is to be made prominent in all of the advertising on the first serial released by that corporation, "Who is Number One?" A contract has been made with Frederick Dorr Steele, who is established as the greatest of all mystery artists, and whose services are always in demand by magazines printing this sort of fiction, to make the twenty-four sheets and other posters advertising this picture. He drew the posters and the illustrations for the Sherlock Holmes' stories.

Mr. Steele consented to make the drawings for the serial only after he had seen the first episode and convinced himself that there was material worthy of his attention.

Pathe Issues New Cuts

Pathe announces that has issued one-column cuts of Pearl White, Mrs. Vernon Castle, Baby Marie Osborne, Gladys Hulette, Molly King, Helene Chadwick, Harold Lloyd, Antonio Moreno, Creighton Hale and Warner Oland, and invites all the exhibitors to use them in connection with their newspaper advertising, program and heralds.

New Chaplin Cut-Outs

General Film announces that a new lot of Charlie Chaplin cut-outs of large size are ready for distribution in the de luxe Chaplin editions that are being issued by Essanay.

Automobile Advertising of Miller's Theatre, Los Angeles

A. J. Laurie, manager of the Canada theatre, Montreal, has been a great believer in newspaper advertising, but he had heard others say that it did not pay and he wanted to test it for himself. The opportunity came when the two features that he had booked for a certain week were condemned by the censors. He did not have anything special to advertise so he ran this announcement in two columns by four inches, using the same style type and border that he followed in his usual display. Passes to the theatre were given as prizes and the several hundred answers that were received convinced him that advertising does pay.

Baltimore Theatre Conducts Film Essay Contest

Bridge theatre, Baltimore, aroused unusual interest in the Artcraft-Mary Pickford production of "The Little American," by conducting a contest for the best criticism of the picture. The contest closed September 15, and prizes will be given for the four best criticisms; motion picture editors of the Baltimore papers will judge.

EXCHANGE MAN POINTS OUT AID OF BUREAU TO HIS FELLOWS

N. Wayne Pierson, Detroit manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, recognizes that the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU has a big field to fill and points out its value to the exchange men of the country. He writes:

"Your letter regarding the inauguration of an EHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU was extremely interesting to me. It was even more interesting to know that you are 'going through' with the project after it is once started.

"If there is an exchange man in this country who is not interested in your proposition, he is a man who is passing up one of the most vitally important and extremely necessary departments of his business—that of PUBLICITY."

Publicity Organizer Finds Chicago Exhibitors Fail to "Sell" Pictures

W. A. Bach, special representative of Universal, who is on the first lap of his tour of the principal exchange centers of the country to establish service bureaus which will give the maximum assistance to the showmen, send the Exhibitors' Service Bureau this first article from Chicago.

Chicago is not so different from the the rest of the country, and exhibitors everywhere will find conditions described here as applicable to them. Here is a man whose duties is to bring about the co-operation of showmen and sellers of films. Look at these problems from the point of view of the box office and ask where you have failed.

By W. A. BACH

The result of close personal observation and conversations with all sorts of people intimately associated with industry in and around Chicago would certainly seem to establish the fact that the exhibitors in this section of the country are not awake to the possibilities of intensive effort to "sell" to their show to the public.

A striking illustration of this fact is the case of one large exhibitor in Chicago, who only a few months ago, boasted "Why, all I have to do to fill my house is to hang out a sign that such and such a star is playing here today or tomorrow and the work was done."

Today that exhibitor is, instead of making a nice comfortable profit, running about in despair with a huge deficit staring him in the face.

The reason? Simply that he did not sell his stock. He felt that his stuff would sell itself without help and would continue to sell itself as long as he used it. But, unfortunately, he found this theory don't hold good. He got himself tied up with a program that was too costly to allow him to make any money, and having never made any effort to get after business he was helpless.

Had this same exhibitor, instead of sitting back and letting well enough alone, made effort to sell his stock to the limit all the time and had he been awake and alert to the ever changing business conditions he would never have allowed himself to be caught in the situation he is in today. And, moreover, he would have known just exactly what to do to keep his theatre on the right side of the ledger.

Chicago theatres are as beautiful, as comfortable and as modern as any in the country, but practically nowhere can be seen any evidences that the exhibitors are trying to merchandise their shows.

Photos, a few lithographs in front of the theatre—a nondescript sort of a program distributed promiscuously throughout the neighborhood is the extent to which the average exhibitor in this territory carries his sales effort.

The various exchanges in Chicago, notably the Universal and Paramount, have exhibitors' service departments which, in charge of capable men, should be of immense value to these theatre managers, but there is still a great deal to be done.

The idea of lobby display, the knack of picking out the selling or attraction point and featuring it in the lobby, on the programs, throughout the decoration and general circularizing, is something that the average Chicago exhibitor has yet to learn. In fact many of them have yet to find out that no matter what the district may be, a clean, neat, attractive house will bring in more money than a careless, dilapidated, unclean and unkempt theatre. People, no matter what their class, enjoy cleanliness, comfort and attractiveness.

Special matinees are neglected here, the value of simple yet forceful co-operation with local merchants in the case of the neighborhood houses and the proper and effective use of the display in the case of the Loop houses is as yet in its infancy. In a center like Chicago, which challenges New York's claim to the film center of the United States, these things should not be.

Motion pictures as a national pastime and recreation will never increase in popularity if the exhibitor, in conjunction with the manufacturer, does not work to increase the market for his wares.

And to do this, he must attract more and more people to his house every season. The more people in his neighborhood interested in moving pictures the better his business will continue to be be.

In other words, the right exhibitor, just like the grocer, or shoeman, should be creating good will for himself and his house among the people of his neighborhood. To do this, active, aggressive measures are necessary. True, in some cases just to hang out a sign, and depend on the star, will get the business, but the exhibitor should not be content with this. By sitting back in this manner he is relying on the same old clientele, whereas new customers should be made all the time, so that his house will mean something to the patron as well as the pictures he is showing.

Stars' Pictures Offered for Patrons' Criticism

"Personal letters" from stars in coming attractions to possible patrons have been offered as suggestion by several producers, but it has remained for Artcraft Advance to bring out one that is bound to be a success, especially among the woman element. With "Barbary Sheep," starring Elsie Ferguson, the Advance gives the form of a letter to be written on ladies' stationery in a female hand and signed by the star. This invites opinion on the player's work and offers in return to send to each writer an autographed picture. Demand for pictures of the players is strong all over the country and it should have a special appeal in the neighborhood houses of the big cities and in the smaller communities, as well as in the first-run houses. Where an exhibitor has definitely contracted for a series of pictures in which a particular star will appear this is valuable publicity, for it will certainly build up a following for the particular player among your patrons.

William Russell in "Sands of Sacrifice," Virile Drama Released by Mutual

(American-Mutual Five-Part Production)

Francelia Billington has the leading feminine role in "Sands of Sacrifice," a five-part American picture, that of Nora Farnes, whose mother is despoiled of her fortune by an unscrupulous promoter, Enoch Foyle. The strength of a woman's power and wit, when sharpened by hatred, and put to justly revengeful purpose, is fully exemplified in this production. Miss Billington and William Russell are so well known to Mutual fans that their names, as stars of the picture, alone assure an interesting play. George Periolat, John Gough and Joe King are other artists in the cast.

Nora, seeking an accounting from Foyle, goes to his country place and runs into a group of the promoter's friends, of which "Big Bill" Darcey (William Russell) is one. Darcey protects the girl, and is alone with her in the lodge when Foyle arrives. The latter attempts to break into the room where Nora is hiding, is shot, and the man and girl flee. Forced to spend the night at Darcey's lodge, Nora consents the next day to marry him and they are about to start on a wedding trip when Darcey learns that Foyle has fleeced him of his fortune.

Going to the promoter's office he finds Nora there. His faith in her is wrecked and he leaves for the desert, with a sick friend who dies, having first, however, extracted a promise from Darcey to return to Nora and listen to her explanation. Nora in the meantime sets out to use woman's weapons to wreck Foyle. She secretes detectives in her apartment, has the promoter visit her, and wins a confession from him. Just at this moment Darcey enters. He again misunderstands the situation and starts away. A happy ending is arrived at when the detectives explain and Foyle is led to prison.

Shirley Mason and "Live Wire" Company in "Awakening of Ruth"

(Edison-Kleine Five Reel Production)

This is a strong love story, full of charm in picture detail. The opening scenes are in the Florida Keys, and there is excellent action in New York. Shirley Mason, the delightful little heroine takes the part of Ruth Hoagland, reared on an isolated island and held there virtually a prisoner by a demented father. Hoagland's Island is supposed to be the hiding place of pirates' treasure.

Robert Winthrop, a role taken by Donald MacClennan, is a young yachtsman. He catches a glimpse of Ruth, and by repeated visits to the strange island manages to strike up an acquaintance. They fall in love, but he is forced to leave for New York. Finally Ruth finds two chests, and, going to call her father, discovers him dead by accident—a fall into a ravine. She confides in Dr. Strong (Donald Hall) and Rev. Arbuthnot (William Hayes).

Strong and Rev. Arbuthnot decide that Ruth must not know that the chests are worthless, and arrange to send her to New York to realize her life's ambition to become a singer, telling her that the money they have given her to pursue her studies, is what they received for the contents of the chests.

In New York Ruth's and Bob's path cross as she goes to him, as manager of a show (not knowing it is Bob), for an appointment—while at his office she encounters Fay, of the Follies, who has Bob very much under her control and who influences him not to give Ruth an appointment. Broken hearted, Ruth returns to Mrs. Greer, the woman Strong had sent to chaperon her.

Ulrich, New York's greatest theatrical manager, who sent Ruth to Bob, is angered at his refusal to engage Ruth, and he gets her another appointment, and gives her several weeks to rest prior to her long engagement, during which time she returns to the island.

Meanwhile Bob learns of Ruth's whereabouts and hurries to atone for his action, but Ruth's faith in him is shattered, and she bids him leave her. Bob, remorseful, returns to the city.

It is later discovered by Ruth that the chests she found were worthless, and she then realizes Strong's supreme sacrifice and his great love for her. It takes but little time for her own love to awaken for Strong, who enjoys the just reward for his self-denying devotion. While he holds her in his arms, Arbuthnot is regaling himself in the telling of the unusual love affair, to Mrs. Greer.

Shirley Mason and Donald MacClennan take the love parts in a striking romance of the Florida Keys, "The Awakening of Ruth," to be seen at ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Secret Service Operatives Versus Criminal Gang in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller"

(Bluebird Five-Part Production)

Introduction of the Chief of the Secret Service to a beautiful girl operative by means of an explosion; a slick gang of criminals led by "The Face"; a necklace of diamonds of fabulous value the theft of which leads to the breaking up and arrest of the gang—such are the trend of incidents making up the last action story, "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," a Bluebird Feature which will be displayed at the ——— theatre, on ——— of ——— week.

Ruth Clifford as Clara Hawthorne, whose histrionic ability is favorably commented on by Bluebird patrons, is seen in the opening rushing down the steps of a house just as an explosion startles Prentice Tiller. He escorts her from the scene, and later she explains that only the day before she arrived from England to meet her fiance, was met by strangers who led her to the man she loved, and then she learned that he had joined a revolutionary society and was a dynamiter. In escaping she had upset chemicals which caused the explosion.

Miss Hawthorne gives Tiller a letter to be delivered to a "Miss Smith." At the address given, a man says he is the party, then, reading the letter, rushes from the house. Tiller follows and is astonished to see the man enter the Hawthorne residence, where a brilliant entertainment has been announced.

For some time a criminal, known as "The Face," has mystified the police. He is leader of a gang sheltered at the house where Clara was first taken, and only lately smuggled necklaces of great value into the country.

At the Hawthorne entertainment Tiller is present. So also is the girl of his adventure, Clara. The other honor guest, Mrs. Mont-Ferry wears a necklace of great brilliancy. Clara wears a counterpart. Mrs. Mont-Ferry's jewels are stolen and Tiller accused of the theft, but a search discloses a necklace the victim cannot identify. Later Clara slips Tiller the necklace she takes from her own throat.

The girl goes to Police Headquarters, establishes herself as a Secret Service agent, and tells that she has almost captured Mordant, the famous criminal, who is really "The Face." On information she gives Tiller is enabled to arrest "The Face," and then discloses his own identity as Chief of the Secret Service.

The action throughout this play is fast and thrilling. Rupert Julian will be seen opposite Ruth Clifford.

Margery Wilson As a Mountain Girl in Triangle's Refreshing Picture, "Mountain Dew"

(Triangle Five-Part Production)

After all the fresh tang of the outdoors, the call of the mountains and the mountain folk, is always a source of enjoyment to the theatre and picture goer. It is such an environment to which the patron will be carried in "Mountain Dew." Two noted scenarioists, Monte M. Katterjohn and Julien Josephsen, collaborated in writing this piece.

J. Hamilton Vance, a magazine writer from the North, while gypsying through the Kentucky Cumberlands, enters Trigger Creek, a hill settlement in bloody Breathitt County. Milt Sears, feudist, ex-convict and school teacher, recognizes in Vance a possible competitor for the "teacher job" and orders him to leave. To protect his manuscript Vance agrees, while Sears shreds his hat with bullets to demonstrate his marksmanship.

While leaving the valley Vance meets a beautiful girl astride a bullock returning from the grist mill. He is immediately attracted and determines to stay. A notice announcing "a new boss for the teacher is desired" results in his going to the store of Squire Bradley to appiy. There he finds the Squire has been defeated at checkers. Vance challenges and bests the champion, to the Squire's delight. The Squire invites him to the house, and there Vance learns the beautiful girl on the bullock is the Squire's daughter, Roxie.

Lafe Grider, the Squire's farm manager and suitor for Roxie's hand, suspects Vance of being a federal agent seeking moonshiners. He attempts to incite the neighborhood against Vance. Further complications come when Vance learns Roxie doesn't know how to read or write. She agrees to attend school. Milt Sears attempts to assassinate Vance in the schoolroom and Roxie is injured. When taken home her attendance at school is exposed. Her father is angered and denounces Vance. The latter determines he shall instruct the girl, and has his negro servant hold the Squire a captive with a gun at his head while he instructs Roxie in reading.

The Squire again turns the champion of Vance, to change again when Lily Bud Kaines, a poor relation, reads a paragraph in one of Vance's fiction stories mentioning moonshining in the hills. That is taken as a confession he is a federal agent. The mountaineers prepare to bushwack him, but Roxie goes to warn him. He avoids the posse, marries the girl and then salutes the posse as a moonshiner himself, for he is one of the family.

Margery Wilson and Charles Gunn will be seen in this Triangle feature at the ——— theatre, on ——— of ——— week.

Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels in a Lively Drama of the War

"Under False Colors"

(Thanhouser-Pathe Five-Reel Production)

This is another spy drama and a "dandy." Frederick Warde and Jeanne Eagels are co-starred, and Robert Vaughn, Anne Gregory and Carey Hastings are in the cast. Emile Chautard directed—which in itself is enough—and the story is by Lloyd Lonergan. It is fast—in fact it has a clash and bang that wakes 'em all up and keeps 'em standing.

Traced by Russian spies, Countess Olga seeks refuge in the home of David Colton, a wealthy American, whose father had sent him to Russia to finance a large loan. As he is questioned by the police, the Count enters. Knowing how bad the Count and his people need money, Colton becomes indignant, and requests that he have the police leave without searching his home, The Count consents, and thus Olga is saved, To make certain that she will escape, Colton has the Count to sign him a passport for Olga, under an assumed name, whereby she can leave for America.

On her way over, Olga makes the acquaintance of Vera. Her father, who is an old time friend of Colton's father, is sending his daughter with him to care for her until the revolution is over. Unfortunately it happened that the ship was torpedoed, and Olga and the girl were placed in a lifeboat. Due to a terrible bad weather, Vera dies, leaving Olga a letter to Colton. As she is unknown and without friends in America, she decides to pose as Vera.

In America, Olga calls upon Colton and is received with great joy. Her pleasing way struck Colton at first sight, and he became deeply interested in her. Everything ran smoothly until a secret band of revolutionists learned of her whereabouts. Immediately she was called to their den and requested to give her assistance. Incited with the thought that she was to help the poor in Russia, Olga consents. Another mishap occurred, Vera's father arrives in America and calls upon Colton. Colton sees that Olga does not recognize the man, but for reasons of his own he remains silent.

The order decides to rid themselves of Colton, as they contend that his money is causing the oppression to be continued. That night they send a mysterious note to his home. Olga is prepared. As the man points his revolver at Colton, she rushes between and snatches the gun. This proves to Colton that his confidence in Olga has been rightly judged, so he decides to prove to her that the band is working on the bad side instead of the right. Though the mysterious man who attempted to kill him, Colton has him to bring him to the den disguised. At the meeting, at which Olga is present, Colton and the man hold the crowd up. Colton proves to the crowd that their leader is not working for the cause, but to attain riches for himself alone. This enrages the crowd to attempt to take his life.

After the dark clouds clear away, Colton's son returns. He falls deeply in love with Olga. Going to his father, he asks his consent to marry her. He replies: "Make her a true American, as she is a most worthy asset to our cause."

Russian Drama, "Rasputin," the Black Monk," with Many World Stars in Cast

(World-Brady Seven-Part Production)

The life of the mysterious monk, Rasputin, whose hand was said to be behind every action of the Russian Czar for years, and who was reputed to have hypnotic influence over the Czarina, is depicted in this feature produced by Peerless for World. Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Arthur Ashley, Irving Cummings and Julia Dean are a few of the prominent stars in the production.

Gregory Novych (afterward Rasputin) is seen in his early peasant surroundings. Ambitious, magnetic, devoid of conscience, and possessed of a peculiar power over women, he is hated by all save Inez Rodin, wife of a revolutionary leader. On the eve of his departure for bigger fields, Gregory all but accomplishes his lustful purposes, but the return of Inez's husband sends him away disguised as a monk.

Gregory betrays a band of revolutionists, of which Rodin is chief, to a Russian secret service operative. At Petrograd he becomes known as Rasputin, inaugurates a new cult the basis of which is that he who yields most completely to his cravings is the holiest.

Madame Vasta, lady in waiting to the Czarina, is fascinated by Rasputin and advances his cause at court. The Monk, called in to save the life of the young Czarevitch, declares he has power to do it, but must always be near the boy. Ten years later, in his power, he looks upon himself as Czar.

The world war breaks out. Rasputin, seeing a chance to advance his power, takes steps to effect a separate peace with Germany, and effectually disorganizes the army. At this point Rasputin makes a fatal mistake. He lusts for the beautiful Princess Sonia, but is repulsed.

Ilda Rodin, a baby at the time of Gregory's attack on her mother, is brought by Vasta to Rasputin's apartment. As he embraces her a message purporting to come from the Princess Sonia bids him go to her. The plotters who sent the false message seize him, and Rodin, escaped from Siberia, wreaks his vengeance, killing the "Mad Monk."

The Czar, helpless on Rasputin's death, abdicates. Kerensky rises as man of the hour, and the Czar is exiled.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"The Duplicity of Hargraves," in Which Laughter Chases Tears—Typically O. Henry

(General Film Four-Part Production)

O. Henry in book form is known and loved by millions. O. Henry in film form should be a revelation to added millions. Those of his works so far placed on the screen have retained the humorous flavor of the author. Characteristic is the latest four-part comedy drama released by General Film, "The Duplicity of Hargraves."

Typical of the old South, dignified Major Pendleton Talbot and his daughter, Lydia, come to Washington and settle in an old fashioned boarding house. Though needy, the Talbots keep up appearances by scrimping and saving, and the Major retains his courtly, impressive appearance despite a certain shininess of coat and trousers.

The Major and his pretty daughter are cultivated by another boarder, Henry Hopkins Hargraves, a quiet chap for all that he is a vaudevillian. The actor seems never to tire of the old man's stories and peculiar characteristics. One night in a fit of princely extravagance the Major bought tickets to the opening of a new play. He and his daughter found on the stage Hargraves performing in the character of a typical Southern grandee—making a tremendous hit. The Major recognized it, however, as a caricature, and next morning when Hargraves came exuberantly to boast of his success, bitterly upbraided him. Hargraves would excuse himself for using the Major as "copy," and would even reimburse him handsomely, but the aid is refused though the old man is practically starving. Abashed, Hargraves disappears, causing a pang in the heart of Lydia.

Some time later the Major is in dire straits, when he is approached by an old colored man, also a relic of the South, who has prospered and who presses a goodly sum on the Major in repayment of a debt owed the family. The Major accepts it, though he remembers nothing about its origin. It is the beginning of his rise, and soon with new courage he is up in the world again. He never learns the secret of his windfall. But Lydia does—in a letter from Hargraves. He, masquerading, was the old colored man.

Charles Kent will be seen in the leading role in "The Duplicity of Hargraves," which will be shown at the ——— theatre, on ——— of ——— week.

Drama of Restored Faith and Love Is Triangle's "The Bond of Fear"

(Triangle Five-Part Production)

"The Bond of Fear" is not only of the entertaining nature to be expected but has a deeper heart appeal. This double recommendation of merit is carried across the screen by Roy Stewart, Belle Bennett, Melbourne McDowell, George Webb and John Lince. Come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week to see what will really be an exceptional feature.

Camden McClure, Judge of the Circuit Court, was a fanatical advocate of the theory that law should be enforced to the last letter without regard to the circumstance or sentiment. This attitude he maintained in regard to the affair of his brother, for whom he was legal guardian. The brother needed more money than the court allowed. Judge rejected his plea for undue funds.

A fight followed. The brother drew a revolver. The judge wrenched it from the boy, and while holding it the trigger was pulled. His brother fell wounded, apparently dead. The judge became a fugitive. He went West and secured Cal Nelson as guide through the bad lands. While crossing the desert they came upon a woman. She had fled from a shanty where a man laid dead.

Judge McClure became delirious from the heat, and told his secret to the woman, Mary. When sanity returned he suspected that he had told his secret. Mary admitted he had. Then she said she too was a killer, a woman who had killed her husband.

The two decided to get married. They went to a settlement for a minister. The guide was in love with Mary, but renounced his love so they could be happy.

At the hotel he read in the paper his brother was alive. Instantly he became the strong enforcer of the law. Believing himself safe he denounced Mary and notified the authorities. When the sheriff came for her Cal Nelson carried her into the desert on his horse, outwitting the posse. Mary told Cal she only pretended she was a killer so the judge would not feel alone in his guilt. It was her father who died a fugitive.

The judge learned the newspaper was over a year old. Again he becomes the fugitive, and started across the desert after Cal and Mary. He was followed by two men. He rode into a sandstorm, and there was caught in a landslide, resulting in his death. The men following wired that their search was fruitless.

Mary and Cal survived the storm and Cal begged her to wed him, but she said her faith in men was forever broken. They journeyed together to a distant stage terminus. As she was was about to board the stage her faith in him returned and she rested in Cal's arms.

No Blackton-Paramount Until November Program

J. Stuart Blackton has determined to postpone his advent upon the screen as a producer for Paramount. Accordingly, there will be no Blackton production among the Paramount October releases contrary to a former announcement, and the first Blackton photoplay will not appear until November. Mr. Blackton says:

"The idea of completing a picture and immediately rushing it to the laboratory, is abhorent to me and I believe that much better results can be obtained by devoting the extra time which I have gained to studying, assembling and welding the entire production into a harmonious whole.

"I found it would be impossible to carry out my intention to release my first picture in October. I therefore, immediately got in touch with Hiram Abrams, President of Paramount Pictures Corporation and advised him of the situation. Being just as interested as I am in furthering the artistic merit of my production, Mr. Abrams at once consented to the change.

New Accessions to Universal Company

Verna Mersereau and Jack Mower, two young players holding forth unusual promise, were added to the acting forces at Universal City last week.

Clever Crook Play for Ruth Stonehouse

Ruth Stonehouse in the Butterfly picture "The Edge of the Law" takes the part of Nancy, who, dressed in boy's clothes most of her youth, gains notoriety as a clever "dip."

Two of her associates decide she could be more useful in girl's garb as a "come on" for a swindling game. This leads to rapidly moving events and the "punch" of the story.

Arranged for the screen by Harvey Gates from "A Gentle Ill Wind," a novel by Maude Pettus which appeared recently in the All-Story Magazine, the production was directed by Louis Chaudet.

Jesse L. Lasky Thrilled by Busy Era in Production

Something Going on Every Moment of the Day and No Lost Motion—He Announces "Mrs. Dane's Defense," "The Antics of Ann," "Rose of the World," "The Devil's Stone," and "Mary Gusta," All Paramount Releases

JESSE L. LASKY, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky orporation, after spending six weeks in New York, has departed for California, where a number of important Paramount and Artcraft productions are under way at the studios in Hollywood, Cal. Mr. Lasky said:

"I find that there is even greater uniformity in work, greater co-operation and as a consequence more rapid, efficient and satisfactory output than in the past. Here in the East at the Famous Players and Fort Lee Studios there is something going on every moment of the day and there is no lost motion.

"Marguerite Clark has completed two 'Bab' pictures, having finished the second during my present stay, and is now at work on the third, which will be called 'Bab's Matinee Idol.' J. Searle Dawley has been directing these pictures and from all indications they will prove some of the most interesting features in which this star has appeared. I personally believe the public will be more than delighted with 'Bab's Diary' which is to be released September 24.

East Studio Productions

"Having completed 'The Hungry Heart'—one of her best pictures—Pauline Frederick is now at work on 'Mrs. Dane's Defense' from the play by Henry Arthur Jones. In fact she has just about completed it and will soon start on a new picture. Hugh Ford is directing 'Mrs. Dane's Defense' and Robert Vignola had charge of 'The Hungry Heart.'

An Alluring Close-Up of Kathleen Clifford, Starring in Paramount's First Serial, "Who Is Number One?"

"I have been very well pleased with the prospects for Ann Pennington's next picture under Edward Dillon's direction—'The Antics of Ann' which is getting on toward completion.

"Probably the most notable of recent acquisitions to Paramount is Mme. Lina Cavalieri who has begun work at Fort Lee under Emily Chautard in 'The Eternal Temptress' an original story by Mme. Fred de Gressac. For this production some of the most elaborate sets that have ever been used are being prepared. Billie Burke has finished 'Arms and the Girl' for Paramount.

"The last scenes for 'The Rise of Jennie

"Our Mary" Pickford ("Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm")

Cushing' are being completed under direction of Maurice Tourneur for Artcraft. Elsie Ferguson's 'Barbary Sheep,' I am told, is having a run that is highly satisfying. Miss Ferguson will begin work shortly on Agnes and Egerton Castle's 'Rose of the World.'

California Studios Busy

"In California Geraldine Farrar is working upon a new Artcraft picture, 'The Devil's Stone.' George Beban, who has contracted to appear in two more of his characteristic pictures will start work soon on the first of these, the title of which has not yet been chosen. 'Lost in Transit' proved one of the most satisfying of his many Paramount plays.

"The millions who have read and reveled in Mark Twain's immortal boy hero, 'Tom Sawyer,' will be waiting for the production of that story for Paramount. Jack Pickford is to play title role. The picture is already well under way. For Vivian Martin 'Mary Gusta' has been chosen as a forthcoming vehicle. Sessue Hayakawa has finished 'The Call of the East' and is at work on 'The Secret Game,' which will be a Paramount release in the early Winter. Mary Pickford is at work on Frances Hodgson Burnett's 'The Little Princess' for Artcraft, while Douglas Fairbanks, and William S. Hart are both at work.

"I must not neglect to mention Julian Eltinge, whose 'Countess Charming' is released by Paramount on September 24, and whose next picture, 'The Clever Mrs. Garfax' is under way, likewise Wallace Reid, who will appear in 'Nan of Music Mountain' for Paramount, supported by Ann Little."

Among them are Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell, Richard Barthelmess and Hedda Hopper.

Mr. Thomas, after a number of years in stock, was seen in several noteworthy Broadway attractions and last season was leading man in "The House of Glass." Mark Smith, who played the part of "Tom" in the original stage production of "Nearly Married," has the same role in support of Miss Kennedy.

"THE MASTER SPY," an episode in the career of Yorke Norroy, secret service agent, written by George Bronson Howard and directed by Jack Wells, heads Universal's regular schedule of release for the week of September 24. Kingsley Benedict and Mignon Anderson are the featured players.

It is a stirring "Gold Seal" drama in the war atmosphere, the scene being the border of Russia and Saxonia. Benedict as Yorke Norroy undertakes to deliver plans to Saxonia fortresses and thrilling adventures follow.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, in "Take Their Medicine," the Nestor comedy to be released Tuesday, September 25, are on a typical cattle ranch. Fred Palmer prepared the scenario, while Roy Clements is credited with the production.

A number of prominent players appear in support of the heroine, including Claire McDowell, Charles Hill Mailes, Fred Montague and Nigel DeBruiller. "Marble Heads" is the Joker comedy, with Gale Henry and William Franey, on the same day. It pictures the efforts of an impecunious sculptor to fill the order of a rich patroness who desires two statues for her garden party.

On Friday, September 28, an especially good Victor comedy entitled, "Your Boy and Mine," in which Lincoln Stedman and Elwood Bredel have the featured roles, is released. The thirty-eighth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine has the same date.

Helen Gibson is the star of "The Dynamite Special," the Bison railroad drama which will be released Saturday, September 29. The story was written by T. Shelley Sutton and George Hively and produced by J. G. Davis. William Franey will be seen on the same date in a Joker comedy known as "The Fountain of Trouble," written by Arthur F. Statter and directed by W. W. Beaudine. The twentieth issue of Universal Current Events will complete the week's list of releases.

Dorothy Dalton's First Paramount Has Egyptian Scenes

Dorothy Dalton in her Paramount debut in "The Price Mark" will have a supporting cast much to her liking, it is said. In the company will be William Conklin, Thurston Hall, Adele Farrington, Edwin Wallock, Dorcas Matthews and Clio Ayres. Roy Neill, one of Thomas H. Ince's most experienced directors, will be in charge.

Miss Dalton comes to her work in "The Price Mark" fresh from a vacation and full of enthusiasm for her new picture.

"The Price Mark" is described as a story located in New York and Egypt and involving the ever fascinating life of the American Quartier Latin—the studios of the artists.

No More Mercury Light for Marie Dressler

Marie Dressler and her staff quit the Goldwyn Studios at Fort Lee this week for California and sunlight. Accompanied by her director, her secretary and her cameramen, the famous comedienne is Hollywood-bound in a private car.

Miss Dressler feels that quick-action comedies, such as she has contracted to make for Goldwyn distribution, cannot be made to the best advantage by mercury light.

Miss Dressler has approved the scenario for her second comedy and work on it will begin with her arrival at Los Angeles. She will make eight pictures a year for exclusive distribution by Goldwyn.

"Fatty" in Vampire's Toils—In Photoplay

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has been caught in the toils of a beautiful but unscrupulous vampire, accomplice of a crook. But luckily, this only occurs in "Oh, Doctor!" a Paramount-Arbuckle comedy which will be released following "His Wedding Night."

Paramount says the character gives "Fatty" one of the greatest laugh-getting parts he has been called upon play in some time.

Harry LaPearl Is the Clown in Goldwyn Play

By a serious error Harry LaPearl, who takes the clown part in Goldwyn's "Polly of the Circus," has lost much of the credit that is properly his due. In sending out the cast in advance Goldwyn used the name of the actor who then had the role, and who afterwards was displaced. This name was used nearly everywhere.

LaPearl did so well as clown that almost all reviewers in the eighty cities where the feature has been shown have mentioned him immediately after Mae Marsh who has the leading role—but unfortunately mentioned him by the wrong name.

New "Black Diamond" Comedy Is "Susie's Scheme"

The Paramount-Black Diamond comedy, produced by United States Motion Picture Corporation, for release September 17th, is entitled "Susie's Scheme."

Surplus Camels Given by Fox to Los Angeles

The city of Los Angeles is now richer by four camels, because William Fox's picturization of "Cleopatra, the Siren of the Nile," was made in the Fox Studios at Hollywood, Cal., just outside Los Angeles.

The animals, with many others, were used in the production of the Theda Bara Picture, and when the scenes were over in which they were required, Mr. Fox telegraphed to his representative on the Coast that they be donated to the Griffith Park Zoological Gardens.

Mae Murray's First Bluebird, Directed by Leonard, Ready

DIRECTOR ROBERT LEONARD, who came with Mae Murray from the Lasky forces to direct Bluebird productions, has completed his first work—"The Princess Virtue," screen version of Louise Winter's novel of the same title. Fred Myton prepared the scenario and for six weeks, Mr. Leonard, Miss Murray and their company have been working on various locations along the Pacific Coast, completing the various scenes in proper settings and atmosphere.

"The Princess Virtue" will introduce Miss Murray as a Bluebird star on November 5. That her debut among Bluebirds might have every advantage of skillful production and adequate dramatic presentation, Director Leonard was given a free hand in the matter of expense. The supporting cast it is announced was chosen with particular care, players being selected for their individual fitness to best interpret the roles assigned.

Wheeler Oakman will be Miss Murray's leading man. Paul Nicholson, Jean Hersholt, Jack Vosberg, Harry Von Meter, Gretchen Lederer and Clarissa Selwyn will be other principals in the support. It is interesting to note that Fred Myton, who prepared "The Princess Virtue" scenario also provided the working script for Miss Murray's first screen appearance—"To Have and to Hold." Mr. Leonard left Bluebird a few months ago to direct Miss Murray with another producing firm, bringing her back with him on his return to Bluebird.

Every essential scene in the first Mae Murray-Bluebird was photographed in fitting locations, it is claimed, or acted in front of especially built sets of massive design and super-elegance. The facilities of Bluebird's studios were released entirely to Director Leonard's uses. Every interior was especially constructed, the players were costumed in accord with Miss Murray's ideas and the star herself, prepared an exclusive wardrobe to fit the elegance and exclusiveness the story and its proper surroundings demanded.

No Tears for Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn"

Jane Cowl has dried the tears she shed for Mary Turner and Ellen Neal in "Within The Law" and "Common Clay."

In "The Spreading Dawn" for Goldwyn Miss Cowl is seen as a society belle of New York in the early 60s when hoop skirts were the fashion and romance and war were the chief activities. As the daughter of one of New York's first families she marries an officer in the army and the trials that follow come near crushing her faith in love and romance. But in the end they prevail.

Two Sennett Comedies Ready, So Says Telegram

Mack Sennett in California wires Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, that the first Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy, "A Bedroom Blunder" is finished and that he has completed the assembling of the picture.

"I am very happy to state," night-letters Sennett, "that it is a real knockout—a screaming comedy from start to finish, and you can quote me as saying this."

"Roping Her Romeo," the next release, is also virtually finished and will be followed at regular intervals by others of the same type.

Earle Fox in Triangle's "From Two to Six"

Earle Fox has been engaged for the leading role opposite Winifred Allen in a Triangle production, "From Two to Six," now being made under the direction of Allan Dwan at the Yonkers studio.

A novel feature of this play, the work of a magazine writer, Arthur Stringer, is that it all takes place in a single afternoon.

Albert Capellani has Edna Goodrich under his direction and "American Maid" is now well on its way to completion.

Schwartz Gets Pictures for New York

A large assortment of single, two and three-reelers have been obtained from several companies by Eddie Schwartz, of the Federal Feature Film for exploitation in New York state.

The pictures consist of one-reel comedies, scenics and educationals, two-reel comedies and dramas, and a number of three-reel dramas. Several of the two and three-reelers are featured in themselves.

With this new addition of short material to his list, Mr. Schwartz plans to inaugurate a new service, which he will call the Federal's Short Picture Service. This new service department which Mr. Schwartz plans to put into effect in about a week or two, will cater only to the wants of exhibitors who are desirous of short pictures of merit. Mr. Schwartz will manage this department personally in conjunction with his regular duties, and will see to it that every exhibitor gets what he wants at a price within the reach of his pocketbook.

Mr. Schwartz has been in the business for a long time, and he knows nearly every exhibitor in New York state. He makes it his duty to see that the exhibitor is satisfied with his picture.

"Wolfville" is to be a Vitagraph Village

Producing Company Is Bringing to Life All of Alfred Henry Lewis' Famous Characters—Two Plays Are Complete

"WOLFVILLE," the frontier town created by the late Alfred Henry Lewis and made known to millions of readers in the series of Western stories which this gifted writer produced some years ago, has been immortalized by Vitagraph company, of which Albert E. Smith is president.

Several months ago the Vitagraph company obtained the motion picture rights to all of the "Wolfville Tales" and the first two features from the series already have been completed at the company's Western studio in Hollywood, with William Duncan and Carol Holloway. The initial picture in the list of Lewis masterpieces will be "Dead Shot Baker" and the second "The Tenderfoot."

The first picture was shown to the executive staff of the Vitagraph distributing organization last week and the statement is made that "Dead Shot Baker" is the finest picture that has been shown in the projection room at 1600 Broadway in many months.

The lightings are said to be as beautiful as have been given any Western picture this year and the riding scenes are good. Such riders as Joe Ryan, Al Jennings, George Holt and Fred Burns, all of whom appear in "The Fighting Trail," are in the cast. Their work, with that of the other cowboys who are used in the picture, is declared to be great.

In connection with the inauguration of the "Wolfville" series, Albert E. Smith calls attention to the fact that at the time he contracted for the Lewis stories, he also contracted for the works of Frederick Upham Adams, a close friend of Mr. Lewis for many years, and one of these, "The Bottom of the Well," will be released on the October program of the company.

Mr. Smith says that in procuring the works of these two writers he is carrying on the policy announced some time ago of getting for Vitagraph pictures the very best stories available, which means that the company's product will be of high type from a literary standpoint.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" for Broadway

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," Willie Fox "Kiddie Feature" from the Arabian Nights tale, will be given a Broadway run soon at the Globe theatre.

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, who were in "Jack and the Beanstalk," appear in the leading roles of the new cinema—Francis as the son of Mustapha, the tailor, and Virginia as the captivating princess. C. M. and S. A. Franklin, who filmed "Jack and the Beanstalk," staged "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

The memorable part of the story in which Aladdin rubs the magic lamp and commands the genii who appears to build him a magnificent palace is faithfully reproduced in the photoplay version. A miracle of the screen results in the gradual appearance of a gorgeous structure on the burning sands and one may plainly depict the performances of Aladdin of old.

Fast Action Comedies a Kalem Production

The Kalem Company calls attention to the strong company of fun-makers assembled to support Ham and Bud in the new "Ham" comedies about to be released.

In "The Boot and the Loot" Edythe Sterling, leading woman in the "Stingaree" series, displays her versatility as the commedienne in support of the well known team and the cast also includes John Steppling and Henry Murdock.

Marin Sais, star of "The American Girl," "The Girl from Frisco" and other Kalem series, is leading woman in "A Whirlwind of Whiskers," recalling to her many admirers the days when she made laughs in comedies.

R. E. Bradbury and Edward Clisbee, who have created many splendid character roles in various series also appear in the cast.

The new comedies are burlesque melodrama. Director Al Santell recruited the dramatic players from Kalem's other companies to work out some new ideas in comedy production. A wild street car raises havoc in "The Boot and the Loot" and "A Whirlwind of Whiskers" presents a sensational chase over the tops of skyscrapers, Ham and Bud precipitating their pursuers through a skylight.

Real Battle Scenes Paralleled in "Warrior"

Although "The Warrior" was made months before the Italians began their furious drive on the Austrian lines, the war scenes in the picture portray with startling fidelity many incidents with which the public have been made familiar through accounts in the newspapers of the encounters between the contending forces.

They parallel almost exactly the scaling of the well nigh impregnable mountain walls, the hand-to-hand fighting on the heights of the Alps, and the final triumphant capture of the Austrian strongholds.

Gigantic Set Constructed for Latest Bluebird Play

ONE of the costliest settings ever erected for a five-reel motion picture was built recently at the Bluebird Pacific Coast Studios for Director Elmer Clifton's latest production, "It's Up to You."

Most of the action of the story is laid in an imaginary European principality and many exterior sets of a special type of architecture were constructed. The largest of these is the palace of the princess, which stands behind a massive stone wall forty feet high. A deep moat skirts the wall and is spanned by a drawbridge sturdy enough to sustain the weight of a cavalcade or horses and carriages.

In the construction of this set alone fifty-five thousand feet of lumber was used for the frame work, and twenty tons of plaster and five thousand feet of metal lath were required to dress the surfaces. Fifteen barrels of paint gave the walls the proper appearance of antiquity. A corps of fifty skilled scene builders worked industriously for two weeks before it was ready for the cameras.

Chapin Devises New Lights to Accent Beard

Benjamin Chapin has evolved a novel combination which gives perfect lighting in taking a close-up set or group.

Calling his technical director and chief electrician to his office he outlined his invention and instructed them to make a new bank at once out of various parts of late model Cooper-Hewitt banks.

"As you doubtless know," Mr. Chapin explained, "the character of Abraham Lincoln which I portray in the Lincoln Cycle, is a very difficult subject to photograph for various reasons. In the first place, Lincoln wore a black suit, and this with the dark beard, does not offer much contrast photographically.

"I found it particularly difficult to arrange the lights, as we are using both the ordinary side banks and the combination side and overhead lights. In numerous tests we noticed that the black beard was hard to distinguish from the black coat I wear. I figured that if I could get sufficient light from underneath, it would act as a back light and throw the dark outlines into relief.

"When the combination bank was made and tested, it proved to be just what I had anticipated and gave wonderful results, which can be especially noticed in our recent close-ups. The effect is a soft natural tone which we could not get in the glare of the carbon lamps generally used in these close-up scenes."

Lillian Langdon Again a Triangle "Mother"

Lillian Langdon, one of the best known "mother" actresses of the screen, and Monte Blue, who appeared in juvenile roles in Triangle-Fine Arts productions, have been engaged to support Olive Thomas in a forthcoming Triangle production.

Mrs. Langdon has played important roles with several companies, and was at one time a member of a famous stock company at the Triangle-Fine Arts plant.

Brady Still Insists Stage Plays are Best

Says It Is an Open and Shut Proposition, with One Side Only an Outside Chance at Best and the Other a Cinch

SINCE stage controversies are going on William A. Brady backs up his contentions with a list of World Film subjects as a basis of comparison. He says:

"Without the faintest intention of precipitating a controversy, I remain unshaken in my belief that the most successful and enduring motion pictures are those which reach the screen by way of the speaking theatre. I observe that a previous declaration along these lines has brought out an expression of opinion very much to the contrary, supported by the names of a number of motion pictures which owe nothing to the oral stage.

"To begin with, some of the plays quoted in the list to which I refer were never conspicuously successful, and not one of them ever had the vogue of, let us say, 'The Birth of a Nation,' which came to the screen from the theatre, and to the theatre from a printed novel.

"Then let us glance for a moment at the record of World Pictures derived from the stage and very successful without exception. These include 'After Dark,' 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' 'As in a Looking Glass,' 'As Ye Sow,' 'The Ballet Girl,' 'The Boss,' 'The Builder of Bridges,' 'A Butterfly on the Wheel,' 'The City,' 'Col. Carter of Cartersville,' 'The Cotton King,' 'The Cub,' 'The Dollar Mark,' 'The Face in the Moonlight,' 'The Family Cupboard,' 'A Gentleman From Mississippi,' 'The Man of the Hour,' 'The Man Who Found Himself,' 'Mother,' 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' 'Old Dutch,' 'Over Night,' 'The Pit,' 'The Rack,' 'The Social Highwayman,' 'Blue Grass,' 'The Master of the House,' 'La Vie De Boheme,' 'Husband and Wife,' 'Forget-Me-Not,' 'Bought and Paid For,' and a few others.

"Without singling out any one or more or these plays, but bunching the whole lot, I can securely defy anyone to name a similar number of dramas written exclusively for the screen and produced by any one management, registering anything like the drawing power of this collection.

"It seems to me to be a perfectly plain, obvious proposition that if you go before the public with a picture version of a play that has already been seen and liked by a great number of people, you have got your patronage started before the doors are opened. If this is not the fact, then there is absolutely nothing in publicity or advertising, no use in building up the confidence of the people in the article you are about to offer.

"I will go further and say that when your photoplay is made from a successful stage drama, which in due course was dramatized from an immensely circulated novel, the value is increased immeasurably. This is the situation with our forthcoming picture 'The Burglar,' starring Carlyle Blackwell and featuring Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley.

"As previously stated, our photodrama was produced from the stage play of the same name by Augustus Thomas, which in its time was seen and applauded by pretty much all the theatre patrons of the entire country. Mr. Thomas wrote his drama closely following Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, 'Editha's Burglar,' which was read all over the world, having been translated into no less than six languages.

"Will anyone seriously contend that any number of original scenarios prepared for the screen direct, have a chance to make as great and enduring a success as is practically sure to be registered by 'The Burglar?' It is absolutely open-and-shut that on the one side of this proposition we find an outside chance, and on the other a cinch."

"The Yankee Way" from Chicago to Balkans

George Walsh is the hero of William Fox's mid-September release, "The Yankee Way," a bright comedy of international romance, which has its beginning in a Chicago cabaret and concludes with a wedding ring in the ever-boiling Balkans.

In the supporting cast are Enid Markey, Joe Dowling, Charles Elder, James O'Shea, Ed. Sedgwick, Count Hardenberg, Edward Cecil and Tom Wilson. Richard Stanton directs.

Elsie Ferguson in Role of Street Waif Next

To Act for Screen "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," by Mary S. Watts—As in "Barbary Sheep," Maurice Tourneur Directs

THE new film vehicle for Elsie Ferguson is an adaptation from a popular book, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," by Mary S. Watts, author of "Nathan Burke," "Van Cleve" and many other well known works.

In speaking of the new Ferguson-Artcraft offering, Walter S. Greene said: "The combination of Elsie Ferguson in a photoplay staged by Maurice Tourneur and adapted from a popular book by a prominent author, as evidenced in 'Barbary Sheep,' has prompted us to again present the combined efforts on the screen of such a coalition. The success of 'Barbary Sheep' has exceeded even our own expectations which fact is proved by telegrams, letters and messages we have received from exhibitors all over the country who have shown this photoplay.

"In looking about for another Elsie Ferguson subject we came upon a story which not only offers a vehicle for this star but which also presents the work of a well known author. Those who are most familiar with Miss Ferguson's accomplishments agree that in addition to disclosing her talents, 'The Rise of Jennie Cushing' will accent her versatility in that it offers a direct contrast to 'Barbary Sheep.' In that picture Miss Ferguson appears in the part of the English noblewoman but as 'Jennie Cushing' she portrays the role of a street waif.

"Work on this production is now well under way at the Famous Players-Lasky Studios in Fort Lee under the personal direction of Mr. Tourneur. An exceptional cast has been selected including Elliott Dexter, Fania Marinoff, Frank Goldsmith, Callie Delatorre, Mae Bates, Edith McAlpin, Isabel Vernon, Blanche Craig, James Cogan and Marie Burk."

Troops in Bronx Trenches a Week for Rita Jolivet Play

THE United States Government through several departments has given substantial evidence of the deep interest taken in the making of "Lest We Forget!" the Selznick picture starring Rita Jolivet, which is being made under the direction of the star and her husband, Count Cippico.

Because the Jolivet picture shows incidents in the world war which bear directly upon the entry of the United States into the conflict, cordial co-operation has been extended to Miss Jolivet and her directors by both military and civil departments.

General Lester, who is in command of the National Camp at Yonkers, furnished a detachment of three hundred troops for services in constructing the trenches employed in the battle scenes which, under the direction of Leonce Perret, are now being filmed about the French village which has been erected on the Watson Farm near Westchester Avenue in the Bronx.

The trenches are being occupied by battle forces employed in the picture, and the filming has been steadily in progress for a week. Scenes in and around the village in great number are being filmed, and the destruction of the village will follow upon their completion. This destruction will be a realistic bombardment from German guns and will raze to the ground the village which has taken more than a month to prepare.

The French High Commissioner in Washington, M. Tardieu, also came to the picture's aid by making available the transatlantic steamship, Espagne, for the photographing of shipboard scenes.

Pathe's Star Cast in "Under False Colors"

"Under False Colors," the Pathe feature for September 23rd, is described as "A thrilling, up-to-the minute story of the Russian Revolution, American millions and the fall of the Czar."

Pathe says the starring combination for this picture is one of the best ever seen on the screen—Frederick Warde, the best known Shakespearian actor, and Jeanne Eagels, a charming leading woman.

Frederick Warde is known wherever the works of Shakespeare are known and is called the greatest authority on this subject in the world today.

Humphrey Ready for Work on New "Semi-Spectacle"

William Humphrey has, in association with others, for the past few months been working in the preparation of a "semi-spectacular," modern play. The final touches to the scenario are now being applied and Oscar I. Lamberger, who is one of the moving spirits in this enterprise, reports that findings of locations, selections of special scenic settings and effects are practically completed. One of the important parts will be the juvenile lead, who will appear in the double role of a youth of eighteen and of a man of twenty-eight. This part is taken by Stanley King, who in the rehearsals has shown fitness for the part. Mr. King's screen experience and his painstaking study of the drama has shown remarkable results. Born in this country, he was not satisfied with the tuition received in the land of his birth, but visited the Imperial Dramatic School of Vienna, where he received an additional year of tuition. His studies there were cut short by the outbreak of the war.

Pathe Has a Rasputin Filmed in June

Rasputin the mad monk of Russia is playing an important role in "The Hidden Hand," the latest Pathe serial now in course of production.

According to Pathe, the production of the scenes involving Rasputin were completed early last June.

"The Hidden Hand" serial has four stars—Doris Kenyon, Arlene Pretty, Sheldon Lewis, and Mahlon Hamilton. It is being directed by James Vincent, under the supervision of George A. Smith, formerly manager of Pathe's serial publicity department.

"So far as we know," states an official of the company, "we were the first to conceive the idea. It was original with Arthur Reeve and Charles Logue, authors of 'The Hidden Hand' serial."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Let Silent Drama Be Silent, Says Earle Williams

Earle Williams, Vitagraph star, who is not only an actor but a student, addresses an appeal for reform to exhibitors.

"One night recently," he said, "I was in a theatre where a very fine picture was being shown and directly behind me sat a man and woman who put in most of their time discussing their family affairs.

"I believe the whole thing could be very easily reformed if the exhibitors would put a polite little note on their programs requesting the patrons to remain silent during the performance. At any rate, I would offer this as a suggestion, and should be pleased to know what others think about it."

Star in "Womanhood" Feels Sting of Scandal

Alice Joyce, star of "Womanhood," "Within the Law" and many other Greater Vitagraph features, received a shock one day last week when she went to the studio and found among her letters one from Hawthorne, N. Y., which asked her if she did not feel ashamed to have her younger brother driving an ice wagon.

It seems that a young man giving the name of Harry Joyce had been working in Hawthorne as an ice wagon driver and had falsely claimed relationship with Vitagraph's star.

Louise Glaum Gets Glimpse of Broadway

Louise Glaum, Triangle's siren star, arrived in New York this week from Los Angeles for a vacation of ten days before commencing work on a series of spectacular productions at the Triangle Culver City studio.

This is Miss Glaum's first trip to New York since she commenced her picture work four years ago in Los Angeles. She has been with Triangle since its inception, appearing in no less than twenty features.

History Told True to Fact Only by Camera

Herbert Brenon Makes This Statement and Backs It Up by Citing "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Which Mirrors Russia

HERBERT BRENON believes that the motion picture camera stands alone as a historian—and he points to his latest production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," as an effort to prove his ideas. He says:

"I built my story around the Siberian Moujik, Rasputin, the evil genius of the royal family. I started my photographic panorama by disclosing Rasputin as an illiterate, drunken peasant sled driver in a tiny village on the edge of the Siberian marshes. Swiftly—by trickery, luck and unscrupulous craftiness—Rasputin rises to court adviser and actual power behind the throne. Undermining the court with his philosophy of sin, Rasputin, finally proved the spark to set the revolutionary masses aflame.

"Through the panorama moves Iliodor, the Siberian monk who brought about Rasputin's downfall; the emperor, a superstitious weakling; his wife, the Czarina, with German leanings; indeed, the whole court. The Kaiser himself appears briefly. I bring the story up to the murder of Rasputin and the revolutionists' arrest of the Czar in a railway carriage on March 15, 1917.

"I was fortunate in securing Iliodor, who plays himself in the production. Iliodor provided the wealth of facts upon which we based the story, from historical data to details of secret religious ceremonies. More than that, he proved himself a remarkable good screen actor.

"In the unfolding of such a crystallization of history, an observer is likely to feel the film motives and impulses as obvious and petty. When we see Czar Nicholas talking over matters of state with Mr. Nicholas Romanoff we are apt to smile. But I am confident that this is far more real than the commonly accepted tableau of the emperor in full dress uniform sitting at a cabinet table with his official advisers."

Exhibitors in Pool to Advertise "The Fighting Trail"

MOTION picture exhibitors throughout the country have started one of the largest newspaper advertising campaigns of the industry in promoting "The Fighting Trail," the latest photoplay serial produced under the personal supervision of President Albert E. Smith of Vitagraph.

The daily newspaper campaign takes in two hundred and twenty-one cities, or practically every city in the United States with a population of more than twenty thousand population.

In theory the campaign started by the exhibitors is an old one but in practice it is new. All of the theatre owners in each of the cities of more than twenty thousand, with few exceptions, have contributed to a pool with which to purchase space three times a week in one of their daily newspapers. In each city one of the theatre managers who has booked "The Fighting Trail" has been designated as the advertising manager for all of the managers who have booked the serial. The manager has been empowered to sign advertising contracts with the local newspapers for forty-five insertions of the copy advertising "The Fighting Trail," with instructions that the copy is to be run on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays.

The copy for this community advertising was furnished by the advertising department of Vitagraph.

Rhea Mitchell a Paralta-Triangle Producer

She Signs a Contract with Carl Anderson for Eight Films a Year—Reginald Barker to Permanently Direct Barriscale

CARL ANDERSON, for Paralta, announces that a contract with Rhea Mitchell has been signed and that she will shortly make her debut as an independent star at the head of her own company in a modern morality play by Hayden Talbot. Miss Mitchell's productions will be released by Paralta through the Triangle Distributing Corporation.

Miss Mitchell and her company will be accorded the same accommodations at the Paralta Studios in Hollywood that are enjoyed by Bessie Barriscale, J. Warren Kerrigan and the Henry B. Walthall organizations. Miss Mitchell and company will have the benefit of the same general staff headed by Robert Brunton, production manager; R. Holmes Paul, art director, and Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta, as general supervising manager.

Rhea Mitchell made her first appearance on the stage playing the ingenue roll in "The Blue House." She showed that she possessed all of the attributes of a leading woman by her clever performances in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," "Tale of Two Cities," and "The Woman."

On the screen her first part was in a two-reel production called "A New England Idyll," which was directed by Reginald Barker. Her greatest successes were scored in "On the Night Stage," "The Beckoning Flame," "D'Artagnan," "The Brink" and "The Devil," for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and in "The Guilded Youth," "His Brother's Keeper," "The Overcoat" and "The Sable Blessing," for the American Film Company. Miss Mitchell will be seen in eight Paralta star feature films each year.

Reginald Barker has become permanently connected with the Paralta Plays organization and will be sole director of Bessie Barriscale's photo dramas. During the past two months he has been directing her production of Harold McGrath's secret service romance, "Madam Who," on which he is now putting the finishing touches.

Mr. Barker's first film success was the spectacle, "The Wrath of the Gods." This was followed by "The Typhoon," "The Bargain," "On the Night Stage," and "The Sign of the Rose," with George Beban. Among his notable Triangle productions were, "The Bugle Call,' "Shell 43," "Sweetheart of the Doomed" and "Happiness."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy now. Don't be a slacker!

Mary McAlister, Six Year Old Essanay Star Who Has Just Signed a New Contract

"Rasputin" Broadway Run Is Limited

"Rasputin, the Black Monk," can remain at the Park theatre, New York, only until Sept. 23, owing to the fact that the house had already been leased following this date. The World-Picture Brady-Made may then be transferred to another Broadway playhouse.

Mabel Normand in Better Comedy for Goldwyn

Custard pie is to be left out of Mabel Normand comedies produced for Goldwyn. The comedienne announces she will appear only in the type of intelligent fun-making associated with the Goldwyn name in "Baby Mine." Madge Kennedy play.

In Miss Normand's cast will be Robert Elliott, William Fredericks, Joseph Smiley, John Webb Dillon and others.

Paramount's Serial Star in Vaudeville

Kathleen Clifford, star of "Who is 'Number One'?" Paramount's first serial, has returned to the vaudeville stage for several weeks in order to fulfill contracts she made some months ago. After her brief dip into the two-a-day Miss Clifford will report again at the studio where she has been engaged in making "Who is 'Number One'?" since January 15.

She expects to finish the last scenes of "Who is 'Number One'?" within a few weeks, after which she will begin a tour of the United States in her new vaudeville act.

Mary McAlister in Modern "Mother Hubbard"

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's juvenile star, will be seen on the screen very sortly in a travesty on the high cost of living, entitled "Young Mother Hubbard." It is a five-part comedy-drama in which the poor dog again must go boneless because the modern Mother Hubbard needs all her money to buy fine feathers. No dog can eat feathers.

Russian Art Film to Show "A Painted Doll" to Trade

Arrangements are nearly completed for the first showing to the trade of "The Painted Doll," the first of the independent productions by the Russian Art Films under the supervision of the Moscow Art Theatre Company. N. S. Kaplan is directing the exploitation of these subjects in the United States. Trade showings of other productions will follow.

Ivan Mozukin, a leading actor of Russia, who has spent practically all of his career on the stage in Moscow, is a product of the Russian system of art development on the stage. Mr. Mozukin, who has the principal role in "The Painted Doll" and will be featured in other productions of the company, is said to be an actor of ability. He will be seen in "The Painted Doll" as a famous engineer with a record for achievement in big adventures. His wife frowns on his success in the profession he has chosen because it almost eliminates him from her social aspirations, for which he has no interest. They are separated for long periods of time and during one of these times he becomes fascinated with the beautiful wife of one of his subordinates. To have her for himself alone he is forced to murder the husband. Then his wife gives birth to a son and in the torture that follows his efforts to forget the other woman and his crime he imagines that his son has been taken from him and as the climax he becomes hopelessly insane. Natalia Lesienko and Tanya Fetner have important parts in this production.

Cabanne to Film Seven-Reel Feature for Red Cross

The American Red Cross Pageant at Rosemary Farm, Lloyd's Neck, L. I., to be a national affair, is to be filmed under the direction of William Christy Cabanne. A seven-reel feature will be the result.

This picture will be shown in every city and town throughout the country wherever there is a moving picture theatre, and in this way the Rosemary Pageant will be brought direct to all the people and will also be a source of revenue to the Red Cross, as the distribution and exhibition of the film will be made for the sole benefit of the American Red Cross.

Working headquarters for the scores of prominent men and women who are giving their time and energy to the Rosemary Pageant have been established at 71 West Twenty-third street, in offices that have been donated to the Red Cross.

Walthall on West Coast for First Production

Henry B. Walthall is now in Los Angeles, Cal., arranging for the filming of his first production, under the new arrangement. It will be a visualization of E. S. and J. F. Dorrance's romantic story "His Robe of Honor," a strong, virile portraiture of love and politics in a great city.

Walthall has severed his former connections and in the future will appear at the head of his own independent producing company in screen dramas of magnitude.

David Powell, Empire All Star

Julia Sanderson Wins by Hard Work

Julia Sanderson, who has recently completed her first motion picture, "The Runaway"—produced by the Empire All-Star Corporation and released through Mutual Exchanges—has won her way to her present place of fame and popularity partly through hard work, but mainly by being able to give to the public the same impression of winsome charm that all those that meet her feel.

Julia Sanderson is the hardest person in the world to write "publicity" for—that is the kind of publicity that the general public is not flattered by being supposed to hungrily devour.

George Beban to Put More Heart Interest Into Pictures

At least two more George Beban productions will be released following "Lost in Transit" which went to exhibitors September 3.

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, has just announced the completion of arrangements whereby the famous impersonator of Latin types will remain as one of the stars engaged in making pictures for Paramount.

"Lost in Transit" is described as probably the best of all Beban's Paramount pictures. In it appears the child actor, Bob White, and a strong supporting cast, so that the star is afforded every opportunity. The love that springs up in the breast of a junkman for a little waif forms the theme of the story of "Lost in Transit" which was written by another Paramount star, Kathlyn Williams, in the form of a story from which the scenario was made by Gardner Hunting. Donald Crisp directed the production.

Commenting upon the arrangements he has just completed for continuing in Paramount pictures, George Beban says:

"I am going to introduce a little more heart interest into my forthcoming Paramount pictures than I have been doing," said Mr. Beban. "The wonderfully complimentary criticisms which have been made concerning 'Lost in Transit' all point to the fact that it was the heart interest in this picture that won especial approbation for it."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"The Warrior" is Speeded Up by Editing

New Titles and Deletion of One Reel Makes Italian War-Comedy a Masterly Work—Picture Should Be a Sure-Fire Hit Anywhere

BY GEORGE F. WORTS

"THE WARRIOR," an Italian picture, featuring "Marvelous Maciste," the Roman giant, has been in the factory for the past several weeks, undergoing alterations, not of an extensive nature, but sufficient to give the piece all of the earmarks of an "S.R.O." attraction. "The Warrior" was good before; what room for improvement remained has been filled by good titles and intelligent and painstaking editing.

Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., Controlling "The Warrior"

The picture was projected last Wednesday before men from the trade papers, most of whom had seen it in the earlier stages, either at the Criterion theatre, where it had a successful run, or else in the projection room before the final slicing process took place. It was in eight reels before, now there are seven. Effective titles have been substituted for those that lacked "punch" in the first place. The opinion of the trade paper men seemed to be unanimously favorable.

"The Warrior" has one feature which will be difficult to duplicate in any other dramatic picture that the war produces—good comedy. Maciste is a giant, all of seven feet in height, and when he grabs husky soldiers by the heels and tosses them laughingly over precipices — sure enough precipices—the tragedy of high explosives is considerably diluted. Maciste pushes full grown horses and trees over as if they were so much papier mache. He is the "original and only genuine" strong man of the movies. In addition to that sterling quality he has good screening characteristics—a pleasant, good-looking countenance, and no end of poise.

After the showing, the reviewers and the General Enterprise's officials attended a luncheon at Rector's. "The Warrior" is to be exploited as an independent market production. Arthur B. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin are the owners. Bert Ennis is the publicity man.

The Right Way to Pronounce "Maciste"

The General Enterprises, Inc., has received numerous inquiries concerning the proper pronunciation of "Maciste," the name of the giant of "Cabiria," who is being starred in "The Warrior."

The company declares that the letter c should be sounded like ch, as in chirp, and the final letter e should be given the sound of a.

Jewel Productions to Be Sold in Districts

All Jewel productions, as was stated last week, will be sold under a district plan. That means that the city will be divided into districts. A district for this purpose is any group of motion picture theatres located in the same neighborhood and doing a competitive business. If there is only one theatre in a locality, that theatre comprises a separate district. Each district, or group of theatres, will be numbered in consecutive numbers, according to its importance in the field and the number of its seating capacity.

Co-operation is to be the corner stone to the building of a firm foundation for the Jewel Productions, Inc. They guarantee co-operation to all exhibitors with whom they do business. In the first place, they protect the exhibitor from taking any risks by handling only such pictures that have survived the New York critics after a week's run in the metropolis.

"Come Through," a detective story by George Bronson Howard, the company's first production, will be released Sept. 15. It played a return engagement in Los Angeles after an initial two weeks.

No Replica of Coin for Ogden Pictures

John B. Sturgill, of the Secret Service, has notified the Ogden Pictures Corporation not to use a proposed novelty advertising Lillian Walker in "The Lust of the Ages." On one side it was replica of a twenty-dollar gold piece.

The dies and cuts were destroyed and the entire lot of cards already made were consigned to the furnace. The making of this novelty incurred an expense of over $2000, but the imperative orders from the Secret Service agent left no other course to be pursued.

This is the first instance where the United States Government has intervened in connection with the distribution of a form of advertising distributed with a moving picture production.

Ince Under Good Luck Sign of Old Biograph Studio

The old Biograph Studio in Los Angeles, a cinema pioneer of Southern California, after a long period of disuse has been taken over temporarily by Thomas H. Ince, and is now being used for the filming of photo-dramas which he will release through Artcraft and Paramount.

The Biograph Studio, erected nearly nine year ago, was then the last word in motion picture completeness. It was to this studio that D. W. Griffith brought his company from the East.

Elsie Ferguson's "Barbary Sheep" at Rialto

New York Newspapers Laudatory of Play, Actress, Scenic Settings and All—Manager Rothapfel Has Algerian Music

ELSIE FERGUSON'S first play for Artcraft "Barbary Sheep" was presented at the Rialto theatre, New York, during the week. It is an Algerian story by Robert Hichens. According to Paramount, the audiences were as large as they were enthusiastic.

Manager S. L. Rothapfel provided all the essentials in the way of scenic investiture and appropriate Algerian music, so that the atmosphere of the Sahara desert indubitably was present, lending charm to the production. The critics as well were unanimous in their approval of the photoplay. Some of the notices say:

American—Miss Ferguson gave a charming performance, and in this representation of "Barbary Sheep" the highest Broadway standards were upheld.

Morning Telegraph—Not only does Miss Ferguson bring to the screen her elusive beauty, but she sets new standards of character creation.

Times—On the screen Miss Ferguson's sensitive beauty becomes almost Gibsonesque. The Hichens' novel is presented with a wealth of atmosphere, and the many fine pictures go far to justify the production.

Tribune—"Barbary Sheep" was presented at the Rialto yesterday and has for its central figure Elsie Ferguson. Maurice Tourneur directed the production, which is equivalent to saying that it was beautifully done. The scenes are magnificent and the cast was excellent.

Herald—Miss Elsie Ferguson in "Barbary Sheep" establishes herself as one of the most captivating figures in photographic drama.

Commercial.—"Barbary Sheep" is capital material for the screen, and in the film all the opulence of Hichens' description of the Algerian desert has been preserved.

During the afternoon and evening, lines of men and women, two abreast, extended along Seventh avenue toward Fifty-third street, and it was found necessary at intervals to stop the sale of tickets and close the doors to the eager and persistent crowds that besieged them.

Bushman Play Finds Scenic Location in New York

The location of some of the most exciting parts of "God's Outlaw" was Enfield Falls, N. Y. Francis X. Bushman and Director Brabin consider the gorges, lakes, mountains and valleys of this neighborhood unexcelled for the purpose of picture-making.

Mr. Brabin, who is an Englishman, has directed pictures all over Europe, and he considers the scenery of the Empire state second to none in the world in beauty and picturesque qualities.

Bernstein Says Loss Is Due to Unprepared Directors

ISADORE Bernstein of the Bernstein Pictures Corporation, which has produced "Loyalty" and "Humility," says the sex drama has seen its day and that audiences are demanding clean, wholesome pictures. Mr. Bernstein also believes much of the waste in production can be eliminated and forty per cent saved on the fifty or sixty thousand dollar productions. He says:

"The most stupendous production can be made economically by making adequate preparations in advance, for the loss is due to wasteful directors who take the field without the least planning of the action.

"'Loyalty' furnishes an excellent example of these ideas put into effect. The huge cafe and stage scenes, equal in magnificence to any put on the screen, were put up for a very reasonable price. It was simply a matter of taking the proper care beforehand to know exactly what was needed and when, purely a matter of efficiency. The cost of every detail is ascertained before anything is done, and we know exactly how much each dollar spent is going to bring us in return. There is nothing about it that is difficult to understand; it is simply putting the production on the footing of a modern commercial business.

"'Loyalty' is faultless in photoplay, in direction, and in cast, and while teaching a moral lesson, leaves a lasting impression.

"It was particularly pleasing to me, although I had felt all along that the picture justified my claims for it, when the National Board of Censors pronounced it the best and prettiest release of the year, and the three women members of the board publicly thanked me for giving them an absolutely true characterization of the real woman. Also I may add that both pictures passed the board without a 'cut.'"

Critics Give High Praise to Goldwyn's First Picture

Metropolitan Papers in New York and Philadelphia Unite in Commending "Polly of the Circus"—Its Vivid Portrayal of Life "Under the Big Top" Fills Strand Theatre, New York, to the Very Doors

GOLDWYN says: "Polly of the Circus" broke all recent Strand attendance records and kept the theatre packed inside and with a lobby filled to overflowing throughout its first day at the greatest of the metropolitan picture theatres.

The New York newspapers, carrying a liberal advertising appropriation for the production, placed through the Strand, had not stopped with the formal amusement reading notices, but hailed the advent of Goldwyn into actual releasing as a significant event in motion picture history. They explained to the public of New York the personal factors who constitute the ownership of Goldwyn, and told of their previous successes in motion pictures and theatricals. Naturally such editorial attention further whetted the appetite of the public for Goldwyn's big photo-spectacle.

Comments from the metropolitan newspapers follow:

Newspapers Sound Paean in Unison

AMERICAN: As a film play, "Polly of the Circus" is an emphatic hit. It is a triumph for Miss Mayo, Miss Marsh and its producers.

HERALD: The production was of the highest order, and the work of the star, who holds a place in the hearts of all who have seen her on the screen, was most appealing.

SUN: Film version of "Polly of the Circus" scores at the Strand theatre. The picture is a good augury that the name of Goldwyn shall not perish from the earth.

TIMES: Sincere attempt to improve the motion picture all along the line. A careful and painstaking piece of work.

TELEGRAPH: An artistic trimph. All who see "Polly" will agree that the company has not only fulfilled all its promises, but sets a new standard for artistry on the screen.

TRIBUNE: In producing "Polly of the Circus" nothing has been overlooked in story, direction or casting which could contribute to the success of the picture. There is but one criticism. It is going to make us all dreadfully dissatisfied with the usual photoplay.

Stage Appeal Is Held on Screen

WORLD: A rare combination of pictorial and story-telling effectiveness has the same pathetic appeal on the screen it exerted on the stage.

GLOBE: The production was of the highest and the acting of Mae Marsh, who played the leading role, was most appealing. Leagues ahead of the average picture.

EVENING MAIL: You are going to thrill with every tenth or twelfth turn of the camera crank. Miss Marsh and her admirers should be congratulated that she has returned to the screen under such auspicious circumstances.

EVENING SUN: The first Goldwyn picture, with Mae Marsh as star, gives promise of many good things to come. The most graphic racing scene which it has been the fortune of this reviewer to witness.

EVENING TELEGRAM: The artistic merit of this picture drama is beyond question. Miss Marsh finds a happy medium and is supported by an excellent cast.

Ringmaster in Costume

Manager Edel of the Strand had ordered a distinctive drop which showed a circus lot and the big tent with the main entrance. Out of this entrance stepped the ringmaster of "Polly of the Circus," George S. Trimble, who was soon identified by the audience as one of the actors in the picture. He wore his ringmaster costume and high hat and, removing his hat, he announced the beginning of the production in the florid language of the circus ring, ending by expressing the Strand management's appreciation of the Goldwyn Pictures.

Philadelphia newspapers were unanimous in their praise of the first Goldwyn production. The reviews said in part:

PUBLIC LEDGER: Something of real and unusual beauty. A pictorial delight and a memorable visual pleasure.

PRESS: A triumph of the screen. One of the most interesting and impressing of pictures. A continuous series of thrills.

INQUIRER: Reaches the highest points strived for by previous producers. Mae Marsh is more than could be hoped for.

NORTH AMERICAN: Goldwyn has arrived, in more senses than one. "Polly of the Circus" has a strong claim on the "ideal picture" distinction. Has a grip that no thriller can touch.

Eighty Cities Show First Goldwyn

Goldwyn says "Polly of the Circus" scored a tremendous success in every section of the United States. The photo-spectacle has been shown in eighty cities of the country, beginning either on Sunday, September 9, or Monday, September 10.

At The Standard theatre, Cleveland, Manager Joseph Grossman was so enthusiastic over his opening that he called Goldwyn at midnight on Sunday to congratulate Samuel Goldfish.

It is interesting to note that Goldwyn began business with a larger number of first run customers, calling for a larger number of prints of a single production for simultaneous showing than any other company operating on a fixed schedule of releases has ever had at the opening of business. And this, of course, means that Goldwyn began business under most auspicious circumstances.

Short French War Pictures Will Awake America

Pathe Official Declares "In the Wake of the Huns," Put Out with Government Approval, a Revelation—In Three Carefully Edited Reels

"'IN THE WAKE OF THE HUNS,' the French Official War Picture, which will be released on September 23, is the biggest box-office attraction in three reels ever made," stated one of the Pathe officials last week.

"There have been some patched-up pictures put out as Official French War Pictures," he continued, "but 'In the Wake of the Huns' has the sanction of the French Government, and, of course, we have official credentials to prove this. I mention this fact because the French Government selected us to release these pictures owing to our success with our other war films, and we want it to be very generally understood that this picture is absolutely genuine and exclusive.

"'In the Wake of the Huns' is, to our mind, the most impressive historical document that has been produced in film form. When you see it, it is as if you were sitting down and reading the best history of the war written by a genius after it was all over. You can actually see the moves of the French army and why they were made. You see the heroism of the French in the face of the most awful destruction the world has ever known, and this picture presents to you many of the most overwhelming reasons why America is in the war.

"'In the Wake of the Huns' was taken by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army. These pictures drive home the following great facts:

"With the ravages on the Somme, the Oise, the Aisne before them, Americans cannot remain blind to the fact that the Germans are pitiless, and that our soldiers must fight in France to keep the enemy from our shores.

"The continual reinforcement of the powerful French artillery has been the most potential factor in driving back the invaders and has compelled the German leaders to shorten their firing line.

"With the British pictures breaking all records, what can't a wideawake showman do with one that shows France and America shoulder to shoulder as history tells us they have been from the time when the land of Jeanne d'Arc actually made our dream of independence come true. Frenchmen gave their lives for America then, and this picture shows why we are trying to pay the incalculable debt.

"It has the 'punch' of a great historical document. There is no cheap sensationalism in it. It is a big, dignified, carefully edited picture, which, with America's natural interest in everything French, should be seen by every American and booked by every American exhibitor."

Perfection Pictures to Institute $300,000 Ad Campaign

Further Plans of New Organization Announced; New Process of Photography to Mark Excellence in Production—Biggest Literary Men to Contribute Stories for Filming

FURTHER announcement of the plans of Perfection Pictures include the statement that $300,000 is to be set aside for advertising Perfection Pictures during the coming year. MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week told of the new arrangement by which the master efforts of three producers—George K. Spoor of Essanay, Edison, Inc., and Kleine, are to be released under this name.

Full pages are to be used each month in the Saturday Evening Post, the first full-page announcement appearing in the issue of Saturday, September 22nd. In addition, large space will be used in other national magazines and in newspapers throughout the country.

Two attributes will instantly mark Perfection Pictures in the eyes of the public—quality of stories and quality of photography. The stories will be furnished by many of America's greatest authors, while all Perfection Pictures will be made by the Perfection process—a new and wonderful invention for the development of films which promises an evolution in the film industry. By reason of this process, which has taken four years to perfect, Perfection Pictures will excel any other pictures in the matter of clearness, brilliancy and ease of viewing.

Secret Process in Making

The exact details of the Perfection process are, of course, a trade secret. An indication of the care which has been taken in developing it, however, is seen in the fact that a huge machine, weighing fifteen tons and costing $100,000 has been perfected by the world's foremost laboratory experts and is being used exclusively in the manufacture of Perfection Pictures.

Exhibitors may expect to find an entirely new type of entertainment under the brand of Perfection pictures. In the main, the productions will consist of light, pleasing comedy-dramas and dramas written by the foremost authors and playwrights. The works of such leading literary celebrities as Peter B. Kyne, Clarence Budington Kelland, Kennett Harris, George Ade, Henry Irving Dodge, Robert Rudd Whiting, George Barr McCutcheon, Samuel Merwin, James W. Adams, Lucien Hubbard, and other contributors to the Saturday Evening Post, and the Ladies' Home Journal.

Every Perfection picture will present a story of genuine literary merit—the best works of contemporary literature. Perfection Pictures have chosen for their slogan: "The highest standard in motion pictures." It is announced that it is the intention of the producers to live up to this slogan in every respect.

Millions in Production

Appropriations have already been voted calling for the expenditure of several million dollars in productions alone during the coming year. Perfection Pictures are to be released one each week, for the first year, through the George Kleine system of exchanges, on either the open booking plan—any picture, any time—or on a contract for fifty-two pictures for each year.

George Kleine said eight productions are ready. He added:

"Starting September 22, full page advertisements in leading magazines will be used every month. Theatre patrons will be told of Perfection Pictures through big advertisements which will appear in newspapers throughout the country.

"Perfection Pictures will be sold for the exhibitor to his patrons. This campaign of national advertising will, of course, mean added value for the box-office. It will mean that when an exhibitor announces that Perfection Pictures are being presented at his theatre, he immediately 'cashes in' on the confidence established in Perfection Pictures through this tremendous national advertising campaign."

To Make Bright Subjects

George K. Spoor said the people in war times want brighter, lighter pictures. He explained:

"Light comedy-dramas, pictures which cheer rather than those which depress, stories that present normal life with all the little touches of humor that creep into our daily lives, will be found in Perfection Pictures, made at the Essanay studios. We have carefully combed the literary markets of the entire world for stories of the type referred to and we have been successful."

Speaking as the representative of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., L. C. MacChesney said of the Perfection Pictures to be contributed by the Edison laboratories:

"Authors whose names are found on the contents pages of America's foremost magazines are providing the manuscripts for the Perfection Pictures being made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc. 'The Awakening of Ruth,' our first production, was written by Lucien Hubbard. Peter B. Kyne, a regular contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and periodicals of that grade, provided the manuscript for another Edison-made Perfection picture, 'The Apple-Tree Girl'."

D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" for Booking

Limited Arrangements Offered for Representative Theatres Over Entire Country—Experts to Provide for Presentation

BY cable arrangements completed within the past two days D. W. Griffith will present his "Intolerance" this season in picture theatres of America.

It is nearly four years since Mr. Griffith has been a direct contributor to the screens. In the interim he has built up a greater following for his newer form of art than had been thought possible in photoplays before "The Birth of a Nation" was launched upon its career.

Presentation of the production will be handled by experts in every branch and given on the same scale that has marked the Griffith productions from the time the director-producer made his first venture outside the popular priced houses.

Limited engagements will be booked in the representative motion picture theatres of the principal cities of the country. This opens up a new and larger field for Mr. Griffith, and is made possible by the many splendid picture theatres that have been built since he began to make his better productions.

Experts who have grown up in the Griffith organization will lay out a complete campaign.

Distributing offices for "Intolerance" have been opened at 508 Longacre Building. The scheme of presenting this spectacle under the new conditions will be entirely separated from any other venture which Mr. Griffith is identified with.

Metro Plan Is Two Directors for One Star

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Are Working Under the New System with Charles Brabin and Edwin Carewe

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, Metro star, will begin immediately on a double director system, whereby he will not lose a moment's time between productions. First under one director and then under another, he and his co-star, Beverly Bayne, will keep constantly busy.

Under this plan, Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are at present completing work, under the direction of Charles Brabin on the production of "God's Outlaw," a screen version of Max Brand's story to appear simultaneously with its release, in the All-Story Weekly. Immediately thereafter the two stars will begin work, under the direction of Edwin Carewe, on a new feature production to be called "The Voice of Conscience."

Mr. Bushman, Miss Bayne and Mr. Karger are all delighted with the double director system now being placed in operation. "I hate being idle," said Mr. Bushman in discussing the project, "and under this plan I shall not have an unoccupied moment. The time taken heretofore in waiting for the cutting and assembling of one picture before another could be begun has made me restive."

"Time and labor are saved under the double director system," said Mr. Karger. "That's one item. And another is that we will be able to turn out even more artistic products than we have heretofore been able to do. Each director will be able to do full justice to the work in hand. We have been making good pictures, but we expect to make even better ones. The plan is satisfactory all around."

Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan Reissues

Triangle's Success with Revived Hart and Fairbanks Plays Brings Forth a New Series for Release Beginning in October

PROMPTED by the success of the Hart-Fairbanks re-issues, the Triangle Distributing corporation has arranged two star series of Triangle plays in which Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan are featured. These will be re-issued on the same plan as the Hart-Fairbanks subjects and may be booked independently of one another.

The Keenan plays will be released at intervals of four weeks commencing with "The Sin Ye Do" on October 7. The pictures starring Norma Talmadge also will appear every four weeks commencing October 21 with "The Devil's Needle."

These pictures are said to be among the most popular from the box-office angle ever put out by Triangle, and a desire for their re-issue was ascertained in territories anywhere Triangle exchanges are located.

"The Sin Ye Do," the first Keenan re-issue, is the story of a lawyer who is forced to condemn himself in open court to save his own daughter from a prison term on the charge of murder. Margery Wilson, now one of the leading Triangle stars, serves as leading woman for Keenan in this production, thus adding another element of drawing power to the attraction.

A number of noted players surround Norma Talmadge in "The Double" scheduled for October 21. The leading male role is taken by Tully Marshall, and another prominent part is taken by Margaret Marsh. Miss Talmadge has the part of an artist's model who exerts a strange and effective influence over the man she loves.

Mme. Olga Petrova Easily Busiest of Women

Since She Is Her Own Producer She Has Assumed Many Other Activities, Not the Least Being Preparing Her Own Scripts

ORGANIZING a million dollar corporation in two weeks' time would seem to be a gigantic task for the average woman but Madame Olga Petrova, in addition to forming the Petrova Picture Company for the production of her own pictures, has engaged her own cast, has kept appointments every fifteen or twenty minutes in the day with business men, lawyers and modistes, has talked over costumes and sets, has originated the story of her first picture, has read dozens of scenarios for later productions, has been posing for photographs and sitting for three different portraits, all within fourteen days' time.

It is not generally known that Madame Petrova, in addition to having many original scenarios, to her credit, is also the author of a number of short stories. Years ago, when she was earning her living in London, she became a newspaper reporter and while still a very young girl was assigned to the dramatic section, and frequently reviewed plays. This keen interest in the dramatic field led to her giving up journalism for the stage, later on, but just to keep her hand in, every once in a while Madame dashes off some little work of fiction and there is already a publisher eagerly awaiting the time when she will have completed enough stories to make a book.

Reently the Aeolian Company made arrangements with Madame Petrova to make a number of records for them. This is just one more of her varied occupations in the hours she can steal away from the camera.

And still another little item we are almost leaving out—the energetic and versatile Petrova finds time to manage a city studio and a country home, personally supervising the domestice routine of her house on Long Island and herself dictating dozens of letters each day at her studio-office in New York.

Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Picture Company, is of course highly pleased to be co-operating with such an active star, since it insures that he will have no trouble in keeping his promises to exhibitors of a release of the first spectacular Petrova picture by the latter part of October.

Swirling Sandstorm Is Reproduced in Triangle Western

DRAMAS of early western life will be featured on the Triangle program for September 23 and will present Belle Bennett and Roy Stewart as stars.

"Bond of Fear," the first release of the week, is the story of two fugitives from the law, a man and a woman, who meet on the desert a furious sandstorm which engulfs the party in their flight across the alkali patched land. Roy Stewart has the role of Cal Nelson, the ever-devoted friend of Mary, played by Belle Bennett. Melbourne MacDowell is said to be admirably cast as the grim letter-of-the-law judge. George Webb who acted as leading man for Louise Glaum in "Idolaters" is also a member of the cast. Jack Conway directed the play, which was written by Edith Kennedy.

Roy Stewart makes his advent to the screen as a gunfighter of new methods in "The Devil Dodger" by J. W. Hawkes. Jack Gilbert, a Triangle player whose work has been noteworthy in previous productions, appears as the minister who calls himself "The Devil Dodger." In his attempts to inculcate moral understanding in Fluffy, a dance hall protege of "Silent" Scott, he is compelled to assume militant tactics.

The Triangle comedies of the week are "His Unconscious Conscience" and "His Fickle Fortune." Lilian Biron, one of the blonde favorites of the Keystone squad, has the leading feminine role in "Her Fickle Fortune," and Phyllis Haver is the featured lady in "His Unconscious Conscience."

Artcraft Reports Biggest Summer Business

Despite the hot weather and other adverse conditions with their accompanying decline in attendance at the theatres, the Artcraft Pictures Corporation reports greater business during the month of July and August than ever before experienced in the history of the organization.

This is in part attributed to the quality of the releases, three of them being Mary Pickford in "The Little American," Douglas Fairbanks in "Down to Earth" and George M. Cohan in "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

Mystery and Romance Themes of Four Art Drama Releases

MYSTERY, romance, adventure and sentiment—the four elements which form the key-note of the trade-mark of Art Dramas, Incorporated—are found in all forthcoming pictures on the Art Dramas program.

"Unto the End," a Horsley production, starring Crane Wilbur, is a story of a great and enduring love. It is full of romance, adventure and sentiment. The story tells how Jim O'Neill, played by Mr. Wilbur, falls in love with and marries Goldie Gray, a chorus girl, and later, after they have been separated, journeys to Hawaii, where he meets her again.

"Behind the Mask," produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation, with Catherine Calvert as its star, combines all the qualities except mystery. This story, written by Charles T. Dazey and picturized by Frederick Rath, concern Margaret Stanton, who, for purposes of revenge, marries a man she does not love.

"Peg o' the Sea," starring Jean Sothern, and produced by the Van Dyke Company, contains every element. Jean Sothern is seen as Peg, the daughter of a fisherman.

"Blood of His Fathers," a Crane Wilbur-Horsley feature, abounds in adventure. The star portrays three distinct characters and is said to do the best work of his successful career.

A clean, absorbing tale is told in "The Little Samaritan," written by the Rev. Clarence J. Harris for Marian Swayne, and produced by the Erbograph Company. Romance and sentiment are admirably blended, and the director, Joseph Levering, it is said, has made a production of strong appeal.

Pickford-Huff Combination in "The Ghost House"

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, will appear in a Paramount picture as co-stars of "The Ghost House" by Beulah Marie Dix, an October release directed by William C. DeMille.

In "The Ghost House" Jack Pickford is a college boy, while Louise Huff is the younger of two grand-nieces of an old gardener who inhabits a so-called haunted house, which is left to them when he dies.

In the cast are Olga Grey, James Neill, Eugene Pallette, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Horace B. Carpenter, Edythe Chapman, Lillian Leighton and Billy Elmer.

ADVANCE OFFERINGS OF THE PROGRAMS

"Fools for Luck" and "Fibbers" Essanay Releases

Taylor Holmes and Bryant Washburn are featured in Essanay's program of releases for October. "Fools for Luck" is the title of Mr. Holmes's offering. It is a comedy-drama scheduled for release October 8. Mr. Washburn will follow in another comedy-drama, entitled "The Fibbers," on October 15. Both these five-part productions will be distributed through the George Kleine System.

The two productions are the second and third releases by Essanay on the Perfection Pictures program.

In addition to these subjects, Essanay will continue its weekly release of George Ade's Fables in Slang, two-part comedy fillers. The General Film Company, Inc., is handling these films.

Releases of Kalem One-Reelers on General Film List

General Film will have for release in October five new subjects in its series of Ham Comedies from the Kalem Company. These ever popular comedies feature Bud Duncan and Lloyd V. Hamilton. The new one-reelers which will be added to General's list of former Ham Comedies comprise these titles: October 3, "Politics in Pumpkin Center"; October 10, "The Boot and the Loot"; October 17, "A Whirlwind of Whiskers"; October 24, "The Onion Magnate's Revenge"; and October 31, "The Bathtub Bandit."

Jake Wells and Others in South Commend "Baby Mine"

Approval for the type and quality of Goldwyn productions is voiced by leading exhibitors in the South, who last week attended a trade showing of "Baby Mine," Margaret Mayo's comedy starring Madge Kennedy at the Goldwyn offices in Atlanta. This showing was held under the direction of Arthur Lucas, Goldwyn's Southern manager.

Jake Wells, head of the Wells syndicate of theatres, was brief but enthusiastic.

"'Baby Mine' is a huge success," he said.

Others who praised the play were W. H. C. Dudley, Americus, Ga.; R. W. Carsuall, Columbus, Ga., and John Evins, Atlanta.

Current Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon," a Western

Albert E. Smith, presents as the Vitagraph "blue ribbon" feature for September 24, "Sunlight's Last Raid," a picturesque romance, brimful of action and daring horsemanship, set amidst the arid wastes of "cactus land."

Mistaken identity is the core around which a novel plot is developed. Mary Anderson has the leading role with Alfred Whitman, Fred Burns, V. Howard and A. Garcia.

Vola Vale Stars in General Film Program

Featured with Philo McCullough in "The Secret of Black Mountain"—Other Releases Include O. Henry and "Shorts"

VOLA VALE in strongly featured with Philo McCullough in "The Secret of Black Mountain," current and sixth Falcon feature from General Film. The story is by Jackson Gregory. The picture has Western scenes and concerns the thrilling encounters of a young girl who undertakes to recover the fortune lost by her grandfather in the gold fields of California when he fell among bandits.

The production is supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer and carries a large and capable cast. Mignon LeBrun, Charles Dudley, George Austin, Henry Crawford, Jack McLaughlin, T. H. Gibson Gowland, H. C. Russell, James Warner and Lewis King are in the support.

O. Henry wrote in "The Last of the Troubadours," one of his greatest stories. This is the current week's two-reel O. Henry production released through General Film Company as a Broadway star feature.

The most picturesque character is the troubadour, Sam Galloway. A young, dandified, irresponsible, warmhearted idler of the ranches, armed with a guitar as well as a six shooter, who leads a butterfly existence, singing and sponging off the hospitality of the remote settlers—all of whom are delighted to have him do so.

Nolan Leary has been cast as the troubadour. Jake Abraham plays Ellison, and S. E. Jennings has the "heavy" role as King James. Dan Duffy is also cast. The production was under the supervision of Dave Smith, who employed actual Western atmosphere throughout to make it correct and effective.

Variety marks General Film's current releases from the Selig Polyscope Company. The list is headed with a two-reel military spectacular offering which may be described as a picturized war college, and which bears the title, "Training Our Khaki-Clad Heroes."

The dramatic releases have Bessie Eyton as lead in several of the subjects, notably "The Law North of '65" and "The Angel of Poverty Row." Kathlyn Williams comes back in "The Voice That Led Him." Myrtle Stedman, Tom Mix and Lester Cuneo are again favorites of old in "The Rustler's Vindication." All of these are fine short-length releases.

October Program of L-Ko Comedies

The only fitting caption for the photograph to the left is "Envy"—on the part of the gentle reader who is now gazing at it! Both scenes depict Olive Tell in a new Triangle production, "Broadway, Arizona"

Pathe Serials Keep Their "Power to Pull"

Leading Exhibitors, David E. Russell, St. Louis, and B. S. Moss, New York, Praise "The Fatal Ring" and "Seven Pearls"

PATHE serials do not show any decline in business or in drawing power, so the various exchanges report to the home office.

David E. Russell, manager of the Vaudeville Theatre Company of St. Louis, writes as follows:

"In my opinion, your latest serial 'The Fatal Ring' is undoubtedly the greatest serial I have had the pleasure of witnessing. As you know, we booked 'The Fatal Ring' for a week's run at Keith's only after a very thorough investigation covering all serials on the market today. After screening 'The Fatal Ring' we did not hesitate to book it, because it is infinitely superior to all other serials, and we knew we would do a big business with it. The acting of Pearl White is wonderful; Warner Oland is the best heavy on the screen, and his work is perfect. And, by the way, he is immensely popular in our houses, because of his excellent work in 'Patria' after his other successes."

"The Seven Pearls," latest of the Pathe serials which features Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, was released in New York City on September 9. Its general release date for the rest of the country is September 16. In addition to being shown in many other theatres, it was featured on the bill at the B. S. Moss vaudeville houses.

"I booked 'The Seven Pearls' for my theatres because it has a good interesting story, a production that is found in the best features, and stars that are popular, screen well and act well," said B. S. Moss, who is showing "The Seven Pearls" in conjunction with the usual vaudeville and motion picture program at his theatres.

"The new serial has plenty of action to it, good, logical thrills, and I feel certain that it will interest my audiences and that they will want to see all of the fifteen episodes."

Bluebird Determines Order of Releases to November 15

BLUEBIRD has reached decision on its program features and has fixed its list of stars for the coming season. While there may be some changes in titles or a few switches in release dates, exhibitors will be interested in the following tentative schedule until the middle of November:

Oct. 1, Ella Hall, in "The Spotted Lily"; Oct. 8, Franklyn Farnum, in "The Maverick," a title that will be changed; Oct. 17, Dorothy Phillips, in "Bondage"; Oct. 22, Ruth Clifford, in "The Desire of the Moth"; Oct. 29, Violet Mersereau, in "The Girl by the Roadside"; Nov. 5, Mae Murray, in "The Princess of Virtue"; Nov. 11, Carmel Myers, in "The Dynast."

Miss Murray and Miss Myers are new stars in the Bluebird flock. Robert Leonard, who left Bluebird to direct Miss Murray under another producing management, returns with her to his former surroundings to prepare a series of super-features that will be given special publicity in the national advertising campaign Bluebird soon inaugurates.

Carmel Myers will be directed by Harry Solter. The Rupert Julian productions, in which Ruth Clifford will star, will also be especially featured in Bluebird's general publicity plans. Joseph De Grasse, who has all along directed Dorothy Phillips, has taken the screen management of Franklyn Farnum, turning over to his wife, Ida May Park, the directorship of Miss Phillips.

Theodore Marston has just completed "The Girl by the Roadside" as the first of a series of Bluebirds he will create with Violet Mersereau the star. With these essentials arranged, Bluebird has formed the groundwork for a season of increased efficiency, embodying greater benefits to the exhibitor of these dependable program features, all of which will be appreciated by the live exhibitor.

Vitagraph, Too, Has a Beauty Squad

In "Plans and Pajamas," Vitagraph's fifteen-minute laugh for the week of September 24, the newly organized Big V beauty squad makes its debut.

The Big V beauty squad, hereafter an institution, is composed of ten of the prettiest girls obtainable. Larry Semon, director, invaded the musical comedy and vaudeville stage. The Big V beauty squad is the result.

Larry Semon is the principal laughmaker as well as the producer. Graham Baker is responsible for the story. Earle Montgomery, Joe Simberg, Joe Basil, Pietro Aremondo and Templar Saxe take a hand at slapstick.

George Washington's Letter to a Spy

In William Fox's "The Spy," there is an exposure of spy methods at present. It is of interest that George Washington took great interest in this subject during the Revolutionary War. He wrote to Major Tallmadge on one occasion:

"You should avoid using the stain (invisible ink) on a blank sheet of paper. A much better way would be to write a letter in the Tory style with a mixture of family matters and between the lines in the remaining part of the sheet communicate with the stain the intended intelligence."

"The Yankee Way" Leads Three Fox Releases

William Fox announces the order of three forthcoming releases. "The Yankee Way" will be published September 15, "North of Fifty-three" will be next, and then "A Rich Man's Plaything," screened at the Fort Lee Fox Studios.

"Conscience" Is Title of New Brockwell Picture

Gladys Brockwell's forthcoming William Fox production, which has an unusual theme, has been titled "Conscience." The picture has a good cast, and is being filmed under the direction of Bertram Bracken.

Amy Dennis as "A Contented Woman," Sept. 17

"A Contented Woman," is the title of the Selig comedy released Monday, September 17, in K. E. S. E. service. The comedy was written by Charles Hoyt, American playwright. J. A. Richmond, responsible for the other Selig comedies, directed the play.

The cast includes William Fables as "Uncle Todie"; James Harris as "Benton Holmes"; and Amy Dennis as "Helena Wrangle."

First Russell Play in New Two-a-Week Plan

"Sands of Sacrifice" gives William Russell a new and interesting hero role. He has plenty of opportunities to fight and there are several fistic encounters in the course of the five reels which show the athletic picture star to the best of advantage. The scenes are laid in the mountains of the east and in the great American desert.

The picture is to be released as first of a new series of plays under Mutual's schedule of two a week.

Fourth Series of Six One-Reel "Sparkles"

The "Sparkle" comedies from the Jaxon Film Corporation released by General Film presently enter their fourth series. This one will be devoted entirely to Kate Price and Billy Rugh subjects. Six one-reel plays will comprise the series, Jaxon making a practice of marketing its product in compact, tangible groups of six releases, and doing so with success.

Unusual attention, however, is expected to be gained by the forthcoming group on account of the strong following possessed by Kate Price,

"A Rich Man's Plaything" for Sept. 30

"A Rich Man's Plaything," a picture of strong dramatic action, will be the William Fox Special Feature release for the week of September 30.

Mary Minter and Edna Goodrich in Oct. Mutuals

Second Month of Two-Weekly Feature Policy Inaugurated with "Queen X" and "Her Country's Call"—Many Subjects Being Prepared

THE Mutual Film Corporation opens its second month under its policy of two feature productions a week on October 1, when it will release "Queen X," starring Edna Goodrich, and "Her Country's Call," the second of the new series of Mary Miles Minter pictures.

The schedules under which Mutual markets eight five-reel features a month began September 3, and the productions from the various studios which contribute to Mutual's release list have stood up to the standards outlined by President John R. Freuler when he announced his policy of "big stars only."

With five stars at work at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara, four busy at the Eastern studios, and Miss Anita King engaged by Horkheimer for a series of Mutual features, production is going ahead rapidly. Miss King makes her debut on the Mutual schedule October 8 in "The Girl Angle."

Frohman stage successes in motion pictures are being made at the Empire All Star studios, at Glendale, L. I., with Miss Julian Sanderson, Miss Ann Murdock and Miss Olive Tell in the leading roles. Miss Sanderson's first picture, "The Runaway," an adaptation of the stage success, is released September 24. Miss Murdock's second picture will be "The Beautiful Adventure," an adaptation, too, of the dramatic production, and Miss Tell's first picture will be "The Unforeseen," now in the course of production.

Miss Edna Goodrich has completed "Queen X," the release for October 1, and has nearly finished "A Daughter of Maryland," under the direction of Albert Capellani. "American Maid" will follow, with Miss Goodrich in the leading role.

Gail Kane is scheduled for October 8 in "Southern Pride," directed by Henry King. Miss Kane is now working on "Wit," a five-reel drama. Juliette Day's second picture under the contract for which she deserted the footlights of Broadway is "Betty and the Buccaneers," a five-reel comedy-drama scheduled for release October 15. Miss Day's third picture will be "The Calendar Girl."

William Russell's next picture will be "The Sea Master," on the schedule for October 22. "The Sea Master" follows "Sands of Sacrifice." "Lucky Jim" will be Mr. Russell's next. Miss Marguerite Fischer began work early in September at the American studios on the first of her American-Mutual productions. The title of the picture has not yet been selected. Miss Fischer's last picture was "The Girl Who Couldn't Grow Up," released September 17.

Miss Minter has completed "Her Country's Call" and is at work on "Peggy Leads the Way."

"The Runaway," Julia Sanderson, for Sept. 24

Julia Sanderson, the Broadway star, makes her screen debut September 24, when Mutual releases "The Runaway," a five-reel drama produced by the Empire All Star Corporation. On the same date Mutual will release "Sands of Sacrifice," a five-reel drama, starring William Russell.

"The Runaway" is part of the series of Charles Frohman's stage successes in motion pictures in which Miss Sanderson, Ann Murdock and Olive Tell will appear.

"Sad Sea Waves" Released Sept. 30

"By the Sad Sea Waves" is the title of the Harold Lloyd comedy which Pathe will release on September 30. It is described as a "girl show," with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels as the Beachhound, Snub, and the Doll, respectively.

William Fox Stars Five in October Releases

Gladys Brockwell, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, George Walsh and Dustin Farnum Offer a Widely Varied Program

WHAT is probably the most varied and widely different list of releases William Fox has ever made, is announced for October. The pictures star Gladys Brockwell, Virginia Pearson, June Caprice, George Walsh and Dustin Farnum. Technically, Miss Brockwell's play is a September issue, as it will be released on the last day of the month, but inasmuch as it has been substituted for another production through a change in schedule, it comes practically unheralded. This will be the order of the photoplays:

Sept. 30, Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience"; Oct. 7, Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal"; Octo. 14, June Caprice in "Miss U. S. A."; Oct. 21, George Walsh in "This is the Life"; Oct. 28, Farnum in "The Scarlet Pimpernel."

"Conscience," Miss Brockwell's new starring vehicle, is an unusually vivid drama with an allegorical motif. The central theme has been deftly treated by Bertram Bracken, the director. The chief roles were taken by Majorie Daw, Eve Southern, Genevieve Blinn, Bertram Grassby, Eugenie Forde, Edward Cecil, Douglas Gerrard, Harry Lonsdale and Colin Chase.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal," also required an extraordinarily large supporting cast, prominent in which are Claire Whitney, Eric Mayne, Dan Mason, Mathilde Brundage, John Goldsworthy, Robert Elliott, Martin Faust, Lem Kennedy, Denny Sullivan and Victor DeLinksy. William Nigh, veteran film-maker, was in charge of the direction.

"Miss U. S. A.," as the title indicates, gives June Caprice a story infused with patriotic spirit. Harry Millarde supervised this film.

On October 21st, the public will first have the oportunity of seeing a photoplay made by one brother and starring another. R. A. Walsh is in charge of screening "This Is the Life," and George is doing valiant work in showing just what that life is. Wanda Petit, James A. Marcus and Ralph Lewis have been assigned important roles.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel," the final release of the month, is rich in adventure. The pimpernel is a tiny wayside flower which has been adopted as the emblem of a band of Englishmen engaged in rescuing condemned aristocrats during the French Revolution. In the cast are Winifred Kingston, William Burress, Bert Hadley and Howard Gaye. Richard Stanton, who made "The Spy," staged the production.

Script and Directing Force for Aubrey Comedies

Arthur N. Smallwood, who will release the Aubrey Series of two-reel comedies featuring James Aubrey, announces that his producing organization has been fully recruited.

Aubrey was formerly featured as Heine in the Heine and Louis Series issued by Pathe, and was also starred in "Big V." comedies by Vitagraph.

C. Jay Williams and William A. Seiter will be co-directors. Williams was twenty-five years on the stage and directed comedy screen productions for four years with Edison. Seiter has been five years player and director with Reliance, Universal, Majestic, Crown City and National. Arthur McMackin will write script for slapstick and have under him four "idea men." O. S. Lee will be technical director.

"Who Is No. One?" Titles First Paramount Serial

Paramount has selected the title for its first serial. The fifteen-episode mystery drama, starring Kathleen Clifford, is to be called "Who is Number One?" and the story by Anna Katharine Green, greatest of all writers of mystery fiction, will bear the same title when it is published in book form after the serial has completed its run.

A corps of motion picture expert writers, art directors, photographers, producers, editors and artists—are concentrating their efforts toward making "Who is Number One?," a serial of undisputed quality.

Pathe Says "The Fatal Ring" Is Record-Breaker

"The Fatal Ring" serial released in July, featuring Pearl White, has not only broken all records in booking, Pathe says, but also has caught the popular fancy. A song, which is becoming popular, has been written and is called "The Fatal Ring." It is dedicated to Pearl White by the authors.

Pearl White fans, as was to be expected, developed a fad for a ring like the one which puts Pearl in jeopardy in the serial. To satisfy this need a novelty firm has produced a duplicate of the ring used in "The Fatal Ring" and calls it the fatal ring. The real Pearl White fan is not quite up to the minute unless she goes to see the picture wearing the fatal ring.

Getting "Who Is Number One?" Ready for Release

So rapidly is Paramount progressing in its work of polishing "Who is 'Number One'?" its first serial, written by Anna Katharine Green, and starring Kathleen Clifford, that the entire fifteen episodes will be complete and in the exchanges several weeks before the release date of the first episode.

George Ovey's "Jerry's Big Deal" for Sept. 27

The cub comedy released September 27 is "Jerry's Big Deal," one reel in which George Ovey impersonates the new minister in a small village.

Jerry makes love to the spinster sisters of the congregation and plays poker with the deacons, much to their financial and moral embarrassment. He is finally routed by the real parson, whose outfit Jerry has had thrust upon him.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Helene Chadwick as Florence Lamont; Suzanne Willa as Marie Lacy the "tough girl"; Armand Cortez as Tony Podessa; Margaret Greene and Francix X. Conlan.

Popularity of West Comedies Established

The rights for the entire world have been disposed of for the King-Bee Billy West comedies, and the latest releases, "The Star Boarder," and "The Fly Cop," are reported doing unusual business.

"We have been in existence only four months," says an officer of the company, "and with all this territory sold, we feel that it is the answer to any questions regarding the quality of the comedies. Their popularity is evidently firmly established."

Many New Stories Ready for Bluebird Stars

Rights to a Number of Novels and Stories, Including Richard Harding Davis' "Scarlet Car," Purchased—National Ad Campaign

WHILE Bluebird directors are working on previously announced additions to the program the scenario department has made several purchases of book-rights and scenarios which will, in due course, be turned into program releases in that popular series. Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers, Ruth Clifford and Franklyn Farnum are stars who will be concerned in the new presentations.

"The Scarlet Car," work of the late Richard Harding Davis, has been given to Director Joseph De Grasse for the use of Franklyn Farnum to follow his October 8 release, previously called "The Maverick," but now definitely titled "Anything Once." Claire Du Brey will be Mr. Farnum's leading lady in both productions.

"Heart's Blood," a drama written by Elaine Sterne, has been secured as a vehicle for the splendid dramatic talents of Dorothy Phillips and has been given to Ida May Park for production. This feature will mark Miss Phillips' next Bluebird appearance, following presentations of "Bondage," Oct. 17.

"One Clear Call," a story by Larry Evans, published in a popular magazine of recent issue, will serve Director Harry Solter as the medium for presenting Carmel Myers in her second Bluebird. Miss Myers will become a Bluebird star on Nov. 12, when she will appear in Director Solter's production of "The Dynast," a story especially written for her by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton of Bluebird's scenario staff.

"The Old Fashioned Gentleman" and "Anthony the Absolute" have become Bluebird property through arrangement with the authors of these stories—F. Hopkinson and Sam Merwin, respectively. They are being prepared for the screen and will become Rupert Julian Bluebirds with Ruth Clifford the star and Monroe Salisbury leading man. "Donna Perfecta," a Spanish romance, is another story scheduled for production as a Rupert Julian Bluebird with Miss Clifford starring.

Meanwhile the schedule calls for Miss Clifford to appear Oct. 22 in "The Desire of the Moth," a Julian picture in which Monroe Salisbury becomes a Bluebirder to start a special series of photographic creations in which Rupert Julian will be featured as the producer.

Violet Mersereau, appearing in "The Girl by the Roadside" will provide the Bluebird for Oct. 29 and Mae Murray will become a star in the series Nov. 5 when she will present "The Princess Virtue," a Robert Leonard production. Plans are maturing for an early announcement of Bluebird's purposes that will be of interest to exhibitors. A most vigorous campaign of national advertising is included in the Bluebird purpose to popularize its stars.

Gladys Hulette Again Leads Pathe Program

"A Crooked Romance" Is Hulette Features—Molly King Is Tied to a Balloon and Pearl White Picked Up by Paddle

GLADYS HULETTE will again appear as the feature player of Pathe's program for the week of September 30th, and the other box office stars on the same program are Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd.

Miss Hulette is seen in a five reel feature produced by the Astra Film Corporation under direction of William Parke, and entitled "A Crooked Romance." In the cast are Paul Clerget, from France, J. H. Gilmour and William Parke, Jr., and a number of other players in lesser roles.

It is comedy-drama with a touch of fantasy that would do credit to J. M. Barrie.

Mollie King, starred in the third episode of the "Seven Pearls" serial, entitled "The Air Peril," is tied to a balloon by a rope which is being slowly eaten away by acid. Creighton Hale attempts to rescue her in an aeroplane and his efforts are combated by the villain in another machine. Another in cast is Leon Barry.

"A Dash for Arabia" is the title of the thirteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring" in which Pearl White stars. Pearl is shanghaied, but jumps overboard. Sailors bribed by Carlako pursue her. Tom Carleton and the Spider race to her rescue in a motorboat. The steering gear breaks after they have succeeded in getting Pearl into the boat. They find themselves in the path of a swiftly approaching ferry boat, and Pearl is taken up in the paddle wheel to what looks like certain death as the picture fades out.

"By the Sad Sea Waves," is a one reel girl show with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. It is one thousand feet of laughs, girls and prize winning bathing suits.

"The American Switzerland" (Glazier National Park) is a scenic release produced by Ralph Earle and showing the most beautiful spot in the "Alps of the U. S. A."

Universal News Reel Shows Our Big Guns

Universal's news reel, Current Events, No. 16, for release August 31, has the following subjects:

New Coast Artillery officers in big gun handling; girls of "Ziegfeld Follies" before National Convention of Dancing Masters; elite of canine society at Atlantic City show; parade of the Eagles at Buffalo; Dolly Sisters as "iron workers"—dancing on hotel roof; Y. M. C. A. teaching swimming at Silver Bay, N. Y., before letting the boys into water; Benny Leonard in exhibition boxing at Monument grounds for Uncle Sam; G. A. R. veterans in parade at Boston; railroad wreck at Seabrooke, La.; Ocean Park, California, beach Venuses and Belgian War Mission at Washington.

The aerial submarine destroyer, animated by J. F. Leventhal, of the Bray studios

Trolling for Submarines with Bomb in Pictograph

In the 86th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine-on-the-screen," the Aerial Submarine Destroyer, an invention of Thomas Edison Lake, will be shown in diagramatical drawings animated by J. F. Leventhal from drawings and information furnished by the inventor and Popular Science Monthly.

Lake's "destroyer," an aeroplane, is equipped with a long cable wound on a drum. To the end of the cable is fastened a high explosive bomb. When the aviator has once located the U-boat, he lowers the bomb into the water to the proper depth and proceeds to troll for the submarine, much as a fisherman trolls for bass.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now! Don't be a slacker!

News Beats and Open Booking Plan Boom "U"

Universal Claims First Pictures of Russian Revolution to Add to a Like "Scoop" on Pershing's Arrival in France

UNDER the hustling leadership of Jack Cohn many news specialists have been developed for Universal's twice-a-week news. Universal says that news "scoops" recently put over by these men will probably go down in cinema history. They include the first picture to reach this country of General Pershing's arrival in France, it is stated. Universal also claims first pictures of the Russian revolution.

The open booking plan under which Universal's news service is now being handled is declared to be meeting with gratifying success. During the past summer the exhibitors using the Animated Weekly and Current Events have increased in number nearly 100 per cent. Issued on Wednesday and Saturday, respectively, these two pictorial chronicles of the world's happenings are enabled to cover every event of wide interest with almost unbelievable speed. On special occasions, such as the recent parade of New York State troops, entire reels have been photographed, titled, printed and distributed within a space of six hours.

Many interesting personalities figure in the 18th issue of Universal Current Events, just released. Among those who might be mentioned are Donald B. McMillan, the recently returned Arctic explorer; Sir William White, chief of the British recruiting service in America; Miss Lucy Freeman, the 19-year-old girl who holds the national long distance swimming record; Andre Tardieu, French High Commissioner to the United States; the Rear Admiral Usher, commanding officer in charge of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

One of the features of the issue is a series of pictures showing the Missouri girl who wore an even $1,000,000 worth of diamonds at the National Jewelers' Convention held in St. Louis a few days ago.

The memorial exercises in honor of Lafayette's birth, which were held in New York, contrast widely in subject matter.

Some military scenes, showing one of our units going into cantonments at Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont, and incidents that occurred during the journey of the Third New York Field Hospital from Manhattan to Spartansburg, S. C., are well above the average in interest.

A new title has been designed for Current Events which displays the letters of both words as though they were composed of live electric wires.

Gaumont Weekly Men Are Everywhere with Our Soldiers

ON the road to Berlin, via France! Our soldier boys are everywhere, in camp, on the high seas, even at the very edge of battle! And wherever they may be, there you will find Gaumont cameramen to keep the home folks posted as to their movements. The release of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is on Wednesday of each week. Weekly No. 143 is released on September 26. As the Weekly is "made up" at the last moment, like a daily newspaper, it is not possible to predict its contents.

One day later the Gaumont film magazine, "Reel Life," will be released. It is the policy of the Gaumont Company to make the subjects in this release as diversified as possible, no two similar subjects appearing in a singie issue. "Reel Life" No. 74, which will reach the public on September 27, contains a half dozen such subjects.

"The Correct Time" shows how the U. S. Naval Observatory determines exact noon each day and flashes it throughout the country. "Beans and Lady-Bugs" illustrates how the common lady-bug is working to prevent a shortage in the food which makes Boston famous. Contrarily, "The Lamprey," a blood-sucking fish, is doing its best to deplete the food supply. In "Making Eyeglasses" we are familiarized with a novel industry, and shown how even the poorest of us may duplicate the best natural sight. "The Soldier's Staff of Life" enabled Uncle Sam to gain many recruits. "So Easy," an animated drawing from "Life," America's leading humorous magazine, completes the reel, which, without exception, is surely one of the finest and fullest of interesting detail that ever emanated from the Gaumont Studios.

Four Vitagraph Blue Ribbons for November

"The Fettered Woman," "The Municipal Report," "Next Door to Nancy" and "The Tenderfoot" Are the Quartette to Be Offered

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, announces "Blue Ribbon" releases for November as follows:

Nov. 5—"The Fettered Woman," an adaptation from "Anne's Bridge," a Robert W. Chambers story, with Alice Joyce and Webster Campbell featured. Thomas Terris directs.

Nov. 12—"The Municipal Report," an adaptation of an O. Henry story, featuring Corinne Griffith, with Mary Maurice and William Dunn in support. The director is W. P. S. Earle.

Nov. 19—"Next Door to Nancy," featuring Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald, directed by Ashley Miller.

Nov. 26—"The Tenderfoot," a Wolfville story by the late Alfred Henry Lewis, with William Duncan and Carol Holloway in the feature roles. Mr. Duncan is the director of the picture.

"The Fettered Woman" is one of the six Robert W. Chambers stories selected for production by Vitagraph through an exhibitors' ballot plan.

"A Municipal Report" is one of the best known of the O. Henry stories, dealing with the devotion of an old slave for the daughter of his dead master. It is replete with strong dramatic situations and the love interest is highly developed. There is also a comedy vein running through the story.

"Next Door to Nancy" is a quaint little story in which a young girl, daughter of an inventor, bears the burden of keeping the family together. Her mistaking a struggling young author for an escaped convict when she finds him in the house next door to her own leads to a series of complications, tragic and humorous, and finally to a beautiful romance.

"The Tenderfoot" is one of the "Wolfville" series started by William Duncan and Miss Holloway, who did such remarkable work in "The Fighting Trail," the Vitagraph serial which was released last week.

A REEL OF GOOD THINGS

The writer's taste for maple sugar has became a tradition rather than a reality. Yet maple sugar has a romantic flavor lacking in the best of—we won't mention names. It suggests New England orchards, and barns all warm and smelling of new hay. So despite our advancing years and many troubles we youthfully enjoyed the Universal Screen Magazine No. 39 because it showed us just how maple sugar is made. Would you believe that all the maker of the sugar gets from a whole barrel of sap is a mean little gallon can of pure syrup? But then the syrup is such concentrated delight—when one is young!

Of more serious interest are two other sections of this issue. "The Travels of a Check" is a series of pictures, excellently titled, covering the many things that happen to this most important scrap of paper from the time it is signed and mailed in payment of a bill till it plays its last function in making balances and settling accounts in the Clearing House. In the fifteen minutes that elapse from the time when the bank messenger enters with his deposits, till he leaves with his certificate of balance, many things happen, but the Universal camera seems to have caught them all with lively fidelity.

"Safety First" is exemplified in the training given would-be motormen in the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company's school. The principles of operation are demonstrated on a board mounted with the necessary apparatus, and on a car chassis; practice is given the novice on an actual car under the supervision of a veteran motorman. Fifteen days after his lessons begin, the new man is alone on the job.

That nationality is only a matter of a few dabs of the thumb on a piece of clay is cleverly demonstrated by Willie Hopkins.

RUSSIA, A GIANT IN TROUBLE

The vast squares of Moscow, thronged with dense masses of men and women cheering M. Kerensky, convey some idea of the enormous, troubled mass that is Russia today. Mutual Weekly No. 141 opens with intensely interesting views taken during a visit to the ancient capital by the Russian leader. Throngs such as no plaza or square of Manhattan could accommodate make way for his carriage and surge beneath the platform from which he delivers his address.

Thousands of miles away, in our own peaceful land, Ruth Law, as trim and smiling as a Summer's day, shows the students of Ohio University how to fly for their country.

Flying of another sort is performed by the carpenters and builders who are putting up contonments for our new army. Down at Camp Gordon, Ga., two hundred men erected a barracks with all modern conveniences in the incredibly short space of eight hours.

This reel, which opens in distant Russia, closes in almost equally distant California. Here we see our Jackies drilling in the beautiful San Diego exposition grounds, and the Palma Indians, at Temecula, celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of their mission church. The reel is an unusually satisfying one, both in interest and beauty.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeL. Berg

FRANCE AT PEACE

Surely this beautiful film just now released by Pathe, "A Corner of the Morvan," must have been taken before the war! No matter how remote it may be from the battle line, we feel that it would reflect in some way the terrible conflict. As it is, nothing could be more tranquilly lovely than the tiny, ancient villages, with their walls and terraces and twelfth-century churches. Between these little communities stretch rolling pastures along the valley of the River Cure. A flock of sheep, herded by one who seems as venerable as the time-worn archway through which he leads them, gives a sympathetic touch to a picture almost pathetic in its quiet beauty.

As a lively contrast are the pictures, in color as are the preceding, of various types of game birds. Lacking not a whit in courage when her nest is attacked, mother Mallard strikes out angrily, though ordinarily she is a timid creature. This latter characteristic she seems to bequeath to her offspring, for the ducklings, just out of their eggs, refuse to move except in a tightly packed group. However, the sight of water overcomes lingering fear, and each gallantly takes to the water on his own responsibility.

UNCLE SAM, MODEL HOST

If only in this terrible war, one good turn would bring another! Certainly, if those of us who stay at home could be assured that as good treatment would be meted out to those of our boys who may fall into German hands as Uncle Sam is according his present prisoners of war, one ever-present fear would be removed. Views of the men taken from the German ships in our harbors (Universal Weekly No. 89) discloses conditions pleasant in the extreme. The men have ample means for work and recreation in their camp at Fort McPherson, Ga., even to a Y. M. C. A. building, and the opportunity to earn money by the manufacture of wooden toys. They certainly seem happy.

Do you realize that horses still exist; nay more, that they do so old-fashioned a thing as compete in trotting races? We had forgotten such things had ever been, until reminded by these pictures of a contest at Poughkeepsie.

There have been many Fountains of Youth, but we doubt if any possessed greater living beauty than one the cameraman discovered in Galveston. Added to the charm of surprise, there is the added grace of lithe young bodies and swift, graceful movement.

Our Teddy exhorting his boys to battle has become so familiar a figure that one views with pleasure our sturdy ex-president exercising a milder function and extending pleasant greetings and encouragement to a group of suffragists at Oyster Bay. Mr. Roosevelt looks quite benign and peaceful as he stands between Mrs. Ogden Mills Reid and Mrs. James Lee Laidlaw.

HOW CLAY COMES TO LIFE

"Shop talk" may or may not be a bore. It depends on whether one is interested in that particular brand of shop under discussion. But the skilled workman practising his craft is always an object of interest. When to skill he contributes the power of creating beauty and the semblance of life, we render him the tribute of reverence due the artist. In Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 85 we are privileged to watch Edward Field Sanford, Jr., an American sculptor of international reputation, fashion the pedestal and cast the mould for a delightful group of tiny boys and huge dog. Each step is of great interest, and when we at last behold the finished statue crowning a fountain set in a lovely Westchester garden, we feel almost a partnership interest in the sculptor's creation.

All Easterners know of Hampton Institute, where ambitious young Indians may overcome the handicaps that ignorance and servitude have imposed. But in the West, at Riverside, Cal., is an even larger school, Sherman Institute, housing seven hundred students. The Indian girls, dancing the folk dances of Europe, or playing basketball with a zest equal to that of Eastern college girls, and the boys engaged in bricklaying or drill, form a pleasant sight and one promising for the future happiness of the race.

Bobby Bumps starts for school after painful and unaccustomed ablutions. Needless to say, school comes to a sudden and unexpected termination.

THE OURANG VOLUNTEERS

You may not admire this collateral descendant of our common ancestor, as photographed under the above title by Mr. Ditmars for the Educational Films Corporation. He's awfully ugly and ungainly. But he certainly is funny, and the very fact that Mr. Ditmars attempted no tricks, but left his pet to his own whims and devices makes the pictures all the more interesting and amazing. Mr. Ourang needed no special urging to fire a gun—the first time. But he didn't like the comeback, and thereafter he finds his original method of raising the dust by scattering it in great sweeps of his long arms quite satisfactory. An army water bottle is tried. Civilization suggests a cup. But there's too much chance of a slip 'twixt cup and lip, so our friend uses both simultaneously. As for the frying pan, its usefulness does not cease with the end of the meal; it makes a good fan.

A LITTLE BIT OF EVERYTHING

The Selig Library No. 18 gives us glimpses all over the world, and perhaps for this reason does not seem quite up to its usual excellent standard. The lima bean harvest, the oyster crop, strange birds and animals residing at the Zoo in Sydney, Australia, and the Ming tombs of China are the subjects covered, with a few views taken at and near a coal mine. We wish the Library had included fewer volumes and those of greater length.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

New Producers Body Gets Away to Flying Start

"Producer's Protective Association" Elects Officers, Board Members and Prepares for Whirlwind Business—Incorporated Last Week in New York State

FOURTEEN independent producers, all well known to the trade, have merged interests in a body incorporated under the laws of New York State under the title of "The Producers' Protective Association, Inc."

The Association, whose preliminary moves have been reported previously by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, intends to make the world safe for independent producers and buyers.

A New York clearing office is to be opened as soon as a site is selected; a high salaried manager is to be placed in charge.

In many respects the Association's New York headquarters will resemble a miniature stock exchange. A big blackboard will run across one side of the room on which all pictures and territories available will be chalked up for the benefit of visiting buyers, the chart to be made up from data supplied by the members.

A meeting was held in the office of William L. Sherrill last Wednesday, at which the following officers were elected:

President, William L. Sherrill; vice-president, Theodore Wharton; secretary, J. J. Goldberg. It is understood that Mr. Wharton is to resign the vice-presidency, and that M. A. Schlesinger, of Mayfair, is to be elected in his stead.

The directors of the Association are William L. Sherrill, Theodore Wharton, Harry Rapf, J. J. Goldberg and J. N. Chadwick.

The by-laws contain, among others, the following provisions, as objects of the Association:

To regulate the medium of advertising, the members agreeing not to patronize any publication, lithographer, printer, slide manufacturer, engraver or any other concern unless such publication or concern has been listed with the association as one worthy of the patronage of the members of the association.

To pass upon all grievances of members against any person, concern or corporation, and in the event of the complaint being sustained, the members of the association agree not to employ or do business with such person, firm or corporation. This applies to commercial institutions, trade publication, actors, directors, as well as state right buyers. The by-laws do not provide for any hearing to the person or firm against whom a complaint is lodged.

The employment of outside brokers for the sale or leasing of the productions of members is prohibited.

A complete record of all transaction with state right buyers on the part of members of the association is to be kept to the end that a commercial rating may be had, and the failure of any exchange to live up to its obligation will prevent it from doing business with any other member in the future.

A central sales exchange is to be established. All productions of the members must be listed on the floor of the association, with territory open and price asked. All productions will be sold by the association for the benefit of its members. A print of each production with a complete line of advertising matters must be deposited with the manager of the association who will have charge of the sales. A percentage of the gross receipts on all productions of a member is payable to the association.

Mr. Sherrill, when interviewed at his office made the following statement as to the future intended operations of the Association:

"We have aimed primarily to systematize our business. At present the disposition of state rights production is without a head or tail. We intend encouraging the state rights buyer to assist him in the operation of a legitimate business, but where any given territory is without any buyer with whom we can deal we intend to ultimately open our own producers' exchange in that territory.

"We are fortifying ourselves against every contingency by the accumulation of a treasury that can meet every new circumstance as it may arise.

"You can compute the amount in back of this Association when I tell you that the average number of productions of the present membership of eleven is a minimum of five a year and the minimum average receipts on each production is $50,000.

"This makes a gross return on the productions of the members of $2,750,000 annually, and the percentage due the Association will amount to a minimum of $1.375,000, a sum sufficient not alone to establish exchanges but to meet every contingency that may arise.

"And of course as we live we expect to grow. Other state rights producers will join us. But for the present we have sufficient to know we are a going institution to be reckoned with, and one that will cure, I hope, many of the evils of the motion picture business. We are not in opposition to any other organization, but rather in the spirit of good and welfare do we desire to co-operate with them in their legitimate endeavors."

The membership in the Association is at present composed of the following firms: The Frohman Amusement Corporation, Ogden Pictures Corporation, Mayfair Films, Ivan Film Corporation, A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Duplex Films, Cosmofotofilms, Edward Warren Production, Arrow Film Corporation, Wharton Brothers, Harry Rapf. Application for membership has been received from two other producers.

True Company, of Dallas, Active

True T. Thompson and David Reed, forming the True Film Company, of Dallas, Tex., promise unusual activity for the coming fall season. Mr. Thompson reports to MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the company "is at all times interested in the better class of motion pictures." Contracts have just been closed to distribute "Babbling Tongues" in the Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana territory.

Ogden Gets Rights to Phillips' Novel

A contract has been signed by the Ogden Pictures Corporation with the estate of David Graham Phillips, James K. Hackett, and the American Play Company, through their representative, Edgar Selden, whereby the Ogden Pictures Corporation receives the world's motion picture rights to David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Grain of Dust."

Lillian Walker, the star of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, will portray the title role.

The screen rights to this production were purchased in competition with almost every other large producing concern and the price, it was ascertained, was $12,000. The story ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post.

"In purchasing the screen rights to 'The Grain of Dust,'" said Albert Scowcroft, president of the Ogen Pictures Corporation, "we are merely carrying out our announced policy of doing big things in a big way. We are striving to visualize those works of literature which have met the popular approval of men and women the world over and we feel that in acquiring the rights to 'The Grain of Dust' we are adhering to our announced purpose.

"We expect to announce shortly to the trade the acquisition of two other novels of almost as great, if not as great, a drawing power."

Levine Represents Southern and Western Exchanges

H. Z. Levine, widely known director of publicity and advertising, has established an agency that will negotiate purchases for several Southern and Middle Western independent distributors as well as handle the sales and exploitation campaigns for big special productions to be released in October. The headquarters will be at Suite 514, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street, New York.

Mr. Levine, who will personally direct the activities of the new agency, has had practical experience in every branch of the industry and has been associated in one capacity or another with some of the leading companies.

He has occupied the position of director of publicity, both here and abroad, and personally directed on the ground intensive campaigns for serial attractions in England, Scotland, France and Germany. He has conducted elaborate sales campaigns in this country and has crossed the continent several times, in the interest of feature exploitation. He has been purchasing agent, film editor, and in the early days of the business did everything around a film plant except turn a crank. Mr. Levine was associated with the Blaches, Universal in Europe, Fox and Triangle. Prior to his film affiliations he was on the Brooklyn Eagle.

Hoffman Buys "White Trail"

M. H. Hoffman, Inc., has bought the United States rights to "The Great White Trail," the Wharton picture of the North, which was purchased last week by Mr. Hoffman, following several conferences with Theodore Wharton.

In commenting on the transaction Mr. Wharton stated that he was more than pleased that the picture was in Mr. Hoffman's hands. "After our trade showing in June," said Mr. Wharton, "I found that the open market was a very uncertain quantity, more agents than buyers.

Mr. Hoffman is to begin his distribution at once. Ten minutes after the contract had been signed the picture, it is stated, was booked in a circuit of houses and arrangements were being made for the booking of it in three more circuits.

The story of "The Great White Trail" is one of Alaska in the gold rush days. The direction and picturization were both made by Leopold D. Wharton. Doris Kenyon, Paul Gordon, Hans Roberts, Thomas Holding and many other well known artists appear in the picture.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Company on Way to Los Angeles

Producing Director Scott Sidney and company of thirty, making "Tarzan of the Apes" for the National Film Corporation of America, are expected in Los Angeles from Morgan City, La., about September 20. This information came to the Hollywood studios last week, together with a statement that all scenes of the canebrake country needed for the film had been secured.

Still Another Exhibitor Circuit Under Way

Warners, of the Pacific Coast, On Way East with Organization Work Progressing En Route—Report Strong Support Already

LOS ANGELES (Special). — Another Exhibitor Circuit is on the map. This time it is the Pacific Coast which takes its turn to speak. Jack and Sam Warner, who have been in the exchange business in San Francisco and Los Angeles for many years, are the moving spirits in the latest proposed plan for the co-operative exhibitor booking organization.

It is planned that this shall be conducted along lines of the National Exhibitors' Association, it being provided that every large city in the country shall have a representative exhibitor in the organization. Films will be purchased by the association, and prints sent to each representative, and every representative will look after the distribution or booking in his own territory.

It will take several weeks to work out this organization. Jack Warner is now working East, visiting Salt Lake, Denver, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, while en route to Chicago, and his brother Sam is taking the northern route, visiting Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Butte and Minneapolis, and will then go to Chicago. From there they will work through the East together.

The Clune Theatre Company of Los Angeles and Lorrie Sheehan, manager of the Rialto theatre at San Francisco, are reported members for the California, Arizona and Nevada territory.

Richmond Completes "Over There"

The Charles Richman Pictures Corporation has just completed its first picture, entitled "Over There."

The title is used through the courtesy of George M. Cohan, and is the same as his internationally popular song.

James Kirkwood, formerly director for Mary Pickford, directed the picture, and the cast includes, besides Mr. Richman, Anna Q. Nilsson, Walter McCrail, Gertrude Berkeley, Walter Biers, Veta Searl and James A. Furey.

The trench and battle scenes were supervised by Lieut. W. A. O'Hara, of the Twenty-fourth Battalion Canadian Expeditionary Force, who spent several months in the trenches in France, and actively participated in the famous battles of Somme, Ypres and Vimy. It is said that the battle scenes are unusually realistic and thrilling.

Standard Moves into Larger Quarters

The Standard Film Service Company, L. W. Greenstein, manager, 14 West Seventh street, Cincinnati, Ohio, has moved to enlarged quarters in the Film Exchange Building in that city. This company handles Art Dramas, Christie and Billy West Comedies, which have proved very successful in its territory. The company also handles Mo-Toy Comedies, Ditmar's Educaiional releases, Moss Features, Mutt and Jeff Comedies and other subjects.

Mr. Greenstein reports that business generally in his territory has been exceptionally good in the past few months regardless of the warm weather. This company is preparing to make a strong drive for the Fall and Winter months, and feel that, with the subjects they have to offer exhibitors, the future outlook for the Standard Film Service Company is very bright.

Brenon's "Fall of the Romanoffs" for Sale

Picture Is Offered Under Territorial Rights Plan with All Added Interest Due to Recent Changes in "Russia"

HERBERT BRENON'S historical panorama, depicting the collapse of the Russian autocracy and all of the developments since the abdication of the Czar, is now offered for sale on a territorial rights basis.

The trade press reviews of the production, as well as the reviews of the New York daily newspapers, are unanimous in their approval of the picture which deals with large historical perspective.

So great was the interest in the production, both as a historical photo-narrative and as a drama, newspaper reviewers came to New York for the Ritz-Carlton showing from cities as far away as Denver and Houston, Tex.

Herbert Brenon on the day following his first public presentation of the picture rushed the negative to the laboratories with a heavy order for prints. This will enable the Iliodor Picture Corporation to make a quick delivery of the production to purchasers.

In building this great picture around the figure of Iliodor, the former spiritual adviser of the Czar, and having Iliodor in the flesh before his camera, Herbert Brenon exercised uncanny judgment in the selection of his splendid cast, utilizing such popular stars as Nance O'Neil, Alfred Hickman, Ekaterina Galanta, William E. Shay, Mlle. Marcelle and a dozen others of popularity on the screens of the world.

The address of the Iliodor Picture Corporation is now 16 East 42nd Street, N. Y.

Globe Films Organizes to Cover All Canada

A new factor in territorial purchases for the Dominion of Canada is Globe Films, Ltd., with headquarters in Toronto. Arthur Cohen, the Toronto exhibitor, has been elected president of the new organization, with Phil Kauffman, vice-president, and Harry Kauffman general sales manager. Ella Marks is treasurer.

Western Canada is to be controlled from an office in Calgary under the management of Bert Lubin, and branches are planned for Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg and Vancouver. "The Warrior," "Redemption," and "The Spoilers" are some of the productions being booked.

"Weavers of Life" Is Warren Picture

The Edward Warren picture just completed has been titled "Weavers of Life." It was suggested by an allegorical reference in the plot. The art direction of the subject was handled by Mrs. Warren, who was also responsible for the direction of this part of "The Warfare of the Flesh."

Helen Hayes is the star and is supported by Howard Hall, Kenneth Hunter, Barney Gilmore, Earl Schenck and Edna Hibbard.

Ogden Reports Requests for Bookings of Whole Series

Ogden Pictures Corporation, New York City, announces numerous requests for the opportunity from exhibitors to book the entire series of eight Lillian Walker productions, to be released within the coming year.

While the state rights purchasers of "The Lust of the Ages," the initial Lillian Walker release, are receiving an option on the remaining seven productions, nevertheless the Ogden Pictures Corporation has decided that each production be booked independently, rather than by a single contract covering the entire series. This has been determined upon because of the fact that the subsequent Walker productions will be adaptations of popular novels, screen rights to which are purchasable.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Wolfberg to Take Charge of "Deemster"

Edgar H. Wolfberg is leaving the Pittsburgh office of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions to take charge of the distribution of "The Deemster" in Missouri and Kansas, which was recently added to the Eastern states already controlled by the Wolfberg Exchange.

During the last six months he has played an important part in booking "The Crisis" in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia. His sensational success in Pittsburgh was the talk of moving picture circles. Newspaper men estimate that he was accorded the largest amount of publicity ever secured for any photoplay.

Previous to his connection with the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions Mr. Wolfberg was assistant manager of the General Film Company's office in St. Louis. It was during these days that he created "The Film General," a house-organ that received the approbation of the photoplay journals.

Friends of H. E. Stahler will be glad to hear of his promotion as manager of the Pittsburgh offices of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions. Until his promotion Mr. Stahler had charge of the publicity department of the Wolfberg Exchange. Previous to this be represented the V-L-S-E in St. Louis, and later the Essanay.

In connection with Mr. Stahler's promotion, Mr. Wolfberg says: "It was Mr. Stahler's fine work with "The Crisis" and "The Deemster" that has hurried his promotion. His method of exhibitor co-operation, which is the outstanding feature of the distribution of these features is largely responsible for Mr. Stahler's success.

"The open market men of the future," continued Mr. Wolfberg, "must recognize the importance of exhibitor co-operation. In the field of merchandising, dealer co-operation is developed to a fine point, and the manufacturer does not stop when the goods are on the dealer's shelf. He helps him sell, and by helping the dealer he helps himself. There is no reason why the same intensive co-operation should not exist in the photoplay business."

"Who's Your Neighbor?" Packs Denver House

The Mammoth Film Corporation, New York City, reports a capacity house in Denver for the opening date of "Who's Your Neighbor?" on a tour of eleven states. The company has received a telegram from the Paris theatre, which reads:

"Packed them all day when 'Who's Your Neighbor?' opened here. Everyone is pleased. It created a sensation. You may depend upon our co-operation for your future productions."

Christie Comedies in Ohio

Ohio has proved to be fertile soil for the Christie Comedies. Mr. Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service Company, through which the comedies are released in Ohio and Kentucky, says that he can not fill bookings on them. They are being shown regularly at the Knickerbocker and the Southern, in Cleveland; at the Colonial, in Akron; the Temple, in Lorain; the Schade, in Sandusky; the Star, in Cincinnati; the Eagle, in Hamilton..

Hoffman Makes Flying Trip to Quaker City

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of M. H. Hoffman, Inc., made a flying trip last week to the Philadelphia Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange, where Division Manager Jerome Abrams reported excellent business. "Whither Thou Goest," with Rhea Mitchell and Orris Johnson; "Her Fighting Chance," with Jane Grey; "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sin Woman," in which Irene Fenwick, Reine Davies and Clifford Bruce are the tri-stars, were all popular.

But what pleased Mr. Hoffman was the fact that Manager Abrams' bookings on "One Hour" and "The Great White Trail"—two of the newest Hoffman-Foursquares—exceeded all expectations. It is evident that Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Virginia and West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia want Hoffman-Foursquares.

Equally satisfactory business was reported by Manager Abrams on "The Silent Witness," and "Madame Sherry" and "A Trip Thru China" are also progressing in a manner that indicates fine returns from these two pictures.

"Fated Hour" Released by Victoria

Victoria Feature Films, 220 West 42nd Street, New York City, have contracted to release Cines' six-reel drama, "The Fated Hour" in the United States and Canada. It will likely be offered to state right buyers and the sales campaign began September 15.

The picture had a successful foreign run and is considered one of the few of the larger features that have attracted attention in Europe in the last year.

The punch of the picture is a thrilling fire scene, depicting the destruction of a theatre. This particular effect is reported to have never been secured with such realism before. "The star, Minichelli, has attained much publicity abroad through her close resemblance to Petrova, now so popular in American films," says an official of the company. "We had this ready for the market in June, but it was not thought to be the best time to launch such a picture until now."

Lesser Buys "Today" and "Mad Lover"

Sol L. Lesser has added to his ever-growing list of features, the new seven-reel production, entitled "Today," featuring Florence Reed, and the six-reel feature, "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, for exploitation in California, Nevada and Arizona. The deal was consummated through his associate, Leon D. Netter during Mr. Lesser's illness.

Mr. Lesser has now so far recovered that Mr. Netter, who has been with him constantly, has found it possible to make a trip to Cleveland for a few days, and will return next week.

From present indications, Mr. Lesser will be out of the hospital within a week, at which time some interesting announcements concerning his new undertakings and activities will be made.

What Makes an Open Market Picture

It Is One of Three Types, Says Blumenthal; Sensationalism, Propaganda or Dramatic Appeal Are the Divisions

"WHAT makes an open market picture?" This question was recently put to Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., during a discussion in his office. This is the important problem that confronts the independent distributors; how to distinguish between the average program picture and the open market production.

"Of course," said Mr. Blumenthal, in replying to this, "the first point of distinction lies in the classification of the picture. An open market picture production must be one of three types: sensational, a propaganda, or containing an exceptional story. In addition to this, it must be interesting, well balanced in cast, and have real thought and study put into its production.

"The exhibitor must pay more money for the open market picture, for he takes it independently. Therefore the distributor must be doubly sure of his proposition before he undertakes it, for he must have something really good to offer. For this reason also the independent release must possess some advertising possibilities, in order to bring the proper returns to its exhibitors.

"All these points must be considered in selecting a fitting release for the independent field. If a picture has a claim to the majority, it can be counted upon to be successful; if it contains them all it is sure to be a winner.

"As an example of what I consider an open market production ought to be, let us take the 'Tyranny of the Romanoffs,' our new Russian release. I selected this picture because I felt that it possessed every element of a successful release in this field. In the first place it is sensational, having been made in Russia, under most trying conditions; the story reflects the realities of Slavic life of an older century, with all its hideous brutality and tyranny. It preaches the sermon of liberty, the struggle of an outraged people striving toward a new ideal, and instills a hatred of injustice and intolerance.

"The cast is exceptional, made up of a selected group of the best of Russian artists, and directed by Cines of Rome, so that there can be no doubt of its balance. In addition to this, Illiodor, the Russian Monk and confidant of the ex-Czar Nicholas II, appears in the picture, and has given valuable suggestions in the way of criticisms.

"Thus the picture seems to me to possess every factor necessary for success in the independent field, and combined with the present great advertising campaign, which we are maintaining for it, gives fine promise of becoming one of the most successful pictures of the year."

Elaborate Publicity Matter for "The Warrior"

FOLLOWING out the theory that a large film attraction should be exploited on a plane equal to that of the big theatrical production, A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., which controls the seven-part version of "The Warrior," have provided a most comprehensive outlay of advertising material to accompany the feature in which Maciste, the giant in "Cabiria" makes his re-appearance before the American public.

The lobby display end has been given particular attention and a line of scene photographs, both black and white and of the hand-colored variety, have been ordered in large quantities. In order to meet all demands, the sizes are varied, and the lobby pictures are obtainable in eight by ten, eleven by fourteen, twenty-two by twenty-eight and thirty by forty, the latter size lending itself admirably for use by theatres with extensive lobby space.

In "The Warrior"—Maciste (General Enterprises)

The lithographs have been made from especially prepared sketches by prominent poster artists. Two styles of one and three sheets, two styles of six and one of twenty-four sheets stands form the nucleus of the paper display. The scenes on the paper are striking in their action and interest compelling qualities.

An important adjunct to the line of lobby display is a series of beautifully colored paintings, depicting Maciste in several heroic poses.

A staff of publicity specialists have prepared press matter, stories and business-drawing advertising forms, which are particularly designed for newspaper and program use. A musical setting, so orchestrated as to be easily adapted for large or small theatres, completes the service, which Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin feel will enable all exhibitors to give "The Warrior" a public heralding fully in keeping with the film spectacle.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Patch Takes Issue With "Broadway Runs"

Newcomer in Open Market Field, Who Is Handling "The Italian Battle Fronts," Declares That Public Throughout Country Is No Longer Impressed with New York Showing

WILLIAM MOORE PATCH, president and general manager of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, Times Building, New York, who recently entered the field as the distributor of the official war pictures "The Italian Battle Fronts," has expressed an opinion on the doubtful value of certain kinds of "Broadway runs." He says:

"Theatres are rented at from $2,000 to $3,000 a week. A fifteen hundred dollar orchestra is engaged. The house is fantastically decorated and four or five thousand dollars are put into the newspapers. Then comes the opening night.

"There must be a big house, at any cost, to impress the trade, and so that the photographers can get a smashing picture of the crowds outside. And, so the trade and its relatives are all invited.

"What would happen to opening nights if the trade ever balked, is frightful to contemplate.

"But the trade doesn't, and so the first big night is always assured. True it is that there may not be ten dollars in the box office and that everyone knows that everyone else is there because of the receipt of a beautifully engraved invitation.

"We must all be impressed by the size and enthusiasm of the audience, in the same manner that we would be if we didn't know that the enthusiasm is the price which the audience always feels called upon to pay for having been asked, and the size of the house, is the work of a dexterous press agent, who keeps his mailing list in good shape.

"These things are very well and good if the production is really worthy of them. I yield to no one in my appreciation of the value of music, advertising, atmospheric effects, etc., to the success of a moving picture.

"But, if the production proves unworthy of such expenditures, why must the pretense be kept up week after week, with the theatre, the orchestra, the advertising, etc., eating up thousands of dollars, while the house is doing a business which never for any one week is big enough to defray any one of the items of this list of expenses.

"Think of the waste—not only in money, but in confidence—and then measure the results. What are they?

"Years ago, in the legitimate field, a real Broadway run was worth a fortune in prestige and profits.

"Not so today. The canny legitimate manager plays his offering on Broadway as long as it makes money—and no longer. There are a few who still defy all the laws of economics, in the hope that they will get it back on the road, but these are fast becoming rarities.

"Broadway no longer possesses the magic spell for the rest of the country that it once did, particularly in the case of moving picture audiences and moving picture theatre owners.

"We, for instance, at the Pitt theatre, in Pittsburgh, have been privileged to give the initial presentation of a number of moving picture productions and these productions have somehow managed to survive. In fact, I am told that they have duplicated the most substantial successes of equally as meritorious productions, which were given New York showings.

"There are exceptions to this, of course. Pictures like 'The Birth of a Nation' can consistently run in New York for weeks and weeks, and are entitled to all the publicity and prestige which accrue to them from such Broadway showings.

"But please bear in mind that these are productions which make money during these runs—which means that they would make money without them.

"In other words, a New York showing, unless it is founded on real business means no more to the public nor to the trade, than a showing in Kokomo.

"Where, then, is the logic, the business sense, to say nothing of the fairness in distributors spending thousands of dollars in a pitiful attempt to keep a mediocre offering alive, simply that they may flood the trade papers with claims of 'capacity' audiences for extended runs.

"Let us discard the use of the word 'capacity' which because of abuse, has lost all of its impressiveness. Let us frankly print the box-office receipts of these 'runs.' Let us, in short come down to earth, stop trying to delude one another, and run our business like business men, instead of 'fly-by-night' artists."

Supreme Obtains Rights to Three Subjects

The Supreme Photo-Play Productions of Pittsburgh, Pa., has acquired the rights for their territory to "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw; "The Cold Deck," starring William S. Hart; "God's Man," featuring H. B. Warner.

The company has grown rapidly under the management of Harry F. Grello. It had its beginnings in humble quarters on Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, several years ago, and its growth was rapid, until today the exchange occupies the fourth floor of the Seltzer Building.

The Pittsburgh exchange, in addition to looking out for the entire Western Pennsylvania territory, also books West Virginia. Among the productions controlled by this company are the following: "The Masque of Life," "Idle Wives," "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Unwritten Law," "The Ne'er Do Well" and "The Spoilers."

Weber Film Gets New Title

The first Lois Weber production has been given a new title, which is "Did You Ever Have a Good Time." This subject is now practically ready for release, and is said to contain many scenes which have been treated by a new color process conceived by Jack Bloom, formerly affiliated with D. W. Griffith, who is now in charge of the tinting and coloring of the Lois Weber Productions.

Ivan Outlook Promising for the Fall

I. E. Chadwick, of Ivan Film Productions, back in New York after a trip to the country, reports a bright Autumn outlook for his company. Speaking to a Picture News representative he declared:

"M. & R. Feature Film Company of San Francisco, Herman Rifkin of Boston, Unity Photoplay Corporation of Chicago, Owl Features, Inc., Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., Super Film Attractions of Syracuse, and Super Film Attractions of Indiana, all report unprecedented business on respectively "One Law for Both" and "Babbling Tongues." So satisfactory have been the results of these two productions wherever they played, that quite a few of the above mentioned have placed running orders for every production released by the Ivan people for the next six months."

The successful results achieved during the past year compels the decision to double the Ivan production for the coming year.

Crown Handles Children's Programs

The Crown Film Exchange, under the management of Mark Kaufman, was recently established at 261 North Twelfth street, Philadelphia. The exchange handles short comedies and dramas, many subjects being especially suitable for children's programs.

Edward Kraupa, of the Monarch Film Exchange, of 1220 Vine street, Philadelphia, handling independent releases, reports the most successful year in his history without any dull summer season.

Mr. Kraupa has had a handsome medal given him by the convicts of the Eastern Penitentiary, for whom during a year he has arranged weekly picture and vaudeville entertainments.

The medal is the work of the convicts themselves, and is suitably inscribed.

Overland Distributes Russian Pictures

Berg Starts on Trip Across Continent to Introduce Subjects Showing Revolution in Muscovite Republic—Were Put on at Strand with Success

THE new Russian Pictures Corporation has bought the films of the Russian Revolution and war pictures, imported last month by the Skobeleff committee, and the sale of which has been for the relief of the Russian soldiers and prisoners of war.

The pictures show the Russian people at war, first under the rule of the Romanoffs, with the country honeycombed with Teutonic intrigue, and later fighting for their Fatherland under a cleansed and popular administration.

They are said to be not a simple record of historical events, but the human, flesh and blood story of the struggle of the Russian people; pictures which will enable the people of this country to better understand the tremendous forces at work in the Russian mind, the inspired courage and devotion to duty in the hearts of these soldiers of the people.

At the Rialto theatre, New York, the regular program was dropped and the revolutionary pictures made up the bill for the entire week. The Eighty-first Street theatre has been quick to follow its example, and recently gave over its entire program to the showing of these new pictures.

The Overland Film Company is distributing them for the new Russian organization, and Samuel Krellberg, the president of the former company, states that there has already been a large demand for territorial rights. The pictures are being sold on the open market.

Mr. Krellberg, in a recent interview, said that he was having several new prints made to fill the present demand, and that one would shortly be presented to the government and to one of the country's great historical societies, to be presented as a permanent record of these events.

Harry Berg, sales manager for Overland Pictures Company, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, has started on a trip across the continent, covering the various film centers in the interest of the new pictures of the Russian revolution and war. The Overland organization is distributing these pictures for the New Russian Pictures Corporation, and has organized an extensive advertising campaign in their interest.

Mr. Berg's idea is to visit all the important film markets and screen the pictures for the various states rights buyers, for he feels that results can be obtained most efficiently by this direct method.

"Man Without a Country," a Lesson in Patriotism

THE story on which Thanhouser founded its "Man Without a Country," is based on a novel which has become a classic teaching. a strong lesson of patriotism.

The story was written by Edward Everett Hale in the Summer of 1863, designed, in the words of the author as "a contribution, however humble, towards the formation of a just and true national sentiment of love to the nation." It attained immense popularity and undoubtedly had the effect for which its author hoped. In 1888, a Spanish translation of the story proved of use in quickening national feeling in the trials of Peru.

In 1898, when the United States went to war with Spain the publishers of "The Outlook" reprinted it in their wish that the nation should not shrink from the duties of a nation. If "The Man Without a Country" was timely then, say its producers, it is even more timely now and the story of Philip Nolan should have the same appeal to present Americans that it did to the men of the North, in the years of the Civil War, and to the men in the nation in 1898.

The photoplay tells the tale of John Alton, a wealthy young American residing in New York just prior to America's entrance into the world war. Alton is a pacifist, and a member of a peace organization whose motto is "peace at any price." The head of this society is Phineas Blair, and Alton is engaged to his daughter, Barbara. The complications that arise with the entrance of America into the world war and the striking stand taken by John Alton furnish the theme.

The picture, featuring Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert, was directed by Ernest Warde, and is released by the Jewel Productions, Inc. The picture was put on for a run at the Broadway theatre, New York, beginning September 9.

Advanced Bookings of Latest Ivan Reported Large

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., reports exceptional volume of pre-release bookings for "Married in Name Only." A handsome twenty-four sheet poster has been brought out for the picture. It is already in use before the release of the picture and is attracting attention from the public.

In addition to the usual line of advertising regularly issued with Ivan Film Productions, there has been prepared a very ingenious, yet simple piece of literature. As a matter of fact over six hundred thousand of these cards have already been ordered by different houses which have booked "Married in Name Only."

"Married in Name Only," with Gretchen Hartman, Milton Sills and Marie Shotwell in the stellar parts, should create a sensation.

Edmund Lawrence, who directed the picture, is said to have exercised so fine a delicate touch in the eugenic argument which he presents, and so ably have his ideas been carried out by the cast, that the finished product stands out as one of the best, if not the best of Edmund Lawrence's efforts; in fact, the tout ensemble is replete with data of most characteristic incidents.

Pathe Bases Folder on Orchestra Hall Record

Pathe Exchange, Inc., has issued a clever eight-page folder which is such a novelty that it is certain to attract attention. It advertises the production of "Les Miserables" and has been mailed to every exhibitor in the country.

The unique point about the booklet is that it is entirely based on the run of the picture at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, which is called one of the two most beautiful theatres in America. The cover, which bears the mail address shows an immense crowd in front of the theatre, but with nothing to show what picture is being run, and the words, "Why Not Draw a Crowd Like This?" On the back another picture of the crowds in front of Orchestra Hall is shown with the big electric signs announcing "Les Miserables."

Within the fold there are pictures of the front of the theatre, a photograph of the lobby, of the interior of the huge auditorium which seats 3,500 people and which was filled to capacity by the Victor Hugo masterpiece; the stage and orchestra and the foyer. All of the reading matter is confined to the record made at Orchestra Hall, the result of the booklet being to emphasize the power of the film to fill such a magnificent theatre for twenty-one days.

The folder is a splendid example of combining dignity with a strong punch. It is the work of Tarleton Winchester.

National Opens in Cleveland

The National Film Company of New York has opened up a Cleveland exchange. It is located on the fifth floor of the Frederick Building on East Fourth street, two doors from the Sincere Building. This exchange is in charge of B. M. Stern.

The National will specialize in three, four and five reel features, with service booked by the day or week.

Marie Walcamp Forgets Wrist and Scores in "Red Ace"

MARIE WALCAMP, who makes her 1917 bow to Universal patrons in Jacques Jaccard's new outdoor mystery serial, "The Red Ace," has, with one brief intermission, appeared in dramatic thrillers released under Big U auspices throughout the past four years.

Her work last season was as the heroine of "Liberty," Jaccard's big patriotic story in sixteen episodes. It is confidently predicted by those who are now following her work in the opening episode of "The Red Ace," that she will add considerably to her prestige with the characterization of Virginia Dixon, the fearless and appealing American girl who fights her way to victory over a band of alien conspirators seeking to wrest the secret of a lost platinum mine from her family in the wilds of British Columbia.

Since the release of the first episode of "The Red Ace," on August 27, more than 240 houses have booked the Universal serial in the vicinity of New York alone.

Born in the town of Dennison, Ohio, twenty-three years ago, Marie Walcamp first gained attention in musical comedy, appearing with Weber and Fields, Kolb and Dill, De Wolf Hopper, Anna Held and Frank Daniels, before she entered the films.

Card Booking Corp. Looms Up in Jersey

The L. S. Card Booking Corporation is a newcomer in the New Jersey field. L. S. Card, whose name the organization bears, has been associated with Frank Hall for the past year as manager of the latter's Civilization Film Corporation, booking "Joan the Woman," "Civilization," "The Whip" and other features. Previously Mr. Card was for several years manager of the Mutual Corporation's Newark exchange.

One of the first acts of the new firm was the purchase of Frank Hall's "franchise" in the First National Exhibitors' circuit. The unusual sale is said to have been at a price of $32,000.

Associated with L. S. Card is Mr. Ed Church, also of the Civilization Film Corporation. Mr. Church will be remembered from his connection for many years with the General Film New York office.

Robards Puts "Mothers of Men" on Open Market

Willis Robards, actor-director and manager of the Robards Players, has recently come East with a picture entitled "Mothers of Men," written by Hal Reid. It is on the order of a suffrage propaganda, based on the election of a woman to the governorship of a Western state, and finding herself in the position of having to pass judgment upon her husband, accused of murder.

The cast includes Dorothy Davenport, Katherine Griffith, Willis Robards, Mr. and Mrs. Hal Reid and others. Six reels.

Willis Robards, the director, is enthusiastic about its future. It has been well received at several private showings. Mr. Robards has been in the industry since its infancy, and has come in active contact with all sides of the game. Before his entrance into the motion picture field, he was for eighteen years on the legitimate stage, and his ability was well-known throughout the country. He has been connected wth several of the largest organizations in the industry, as a writer of scenarios as well as actor and director.

He has come East with this new picture with the idea of selling it outright, and feels that he would prefer to dispose of it entirely rather than to state rights it himself. Shepard and Van Loan, of 729 Seventh Avenue, are acting as his agents.

¶ Through an error the name of the prominent film brokers, Hiller & Wilk, No. 924 Longacre Bldg., N. Y. City, was omitted from the telephone list card recently distributed by Motion Picture News Studio Directory.

THE WORLD MARKET

South American Shipment First to Be Licensed

Three Hundred Thousand Feet of Film from Prominent American Shippers Nearly Misses S. S. "Vasari," for the Argentine

PICTURE palaces in the Argentine would have been forced to put out the "dark" sign or else to repeat old pictures if film shippers last week had not stirred things up in the Washington headquarters of the Export Embargo Board.

Three hundred thousand feet of film from Universal, World, Metro, Paramount, Triangle and others was scheduled to go aboard the Str. "Vasari" Thursday. The "Vasari" cleared for Buenos Ayres last Saturday and because of the latest international upheaval over the actions of the German ambassador, Luxberg, in the Argentine capital, shipments of all kinds to that section of South America have been headed off by drastic order from Washington.

The dismissal of Luxberg has cleared the air considerably, with the result that the bars have been let down a trifle, and the film men were allowed to send thir product through.

When it became known in New York that the shipment of positives would likely be held up on the "Vasari" representatives of the foreign shippers hastened to Washington, where they went into quick consultation with the heads of the Export Embargo Board. Official red tape was sliced, licenses were issued and the Lamport and Holt Line, owners of the "Vasari," who previously would not allow the films even to be deposited on their dock, permitted the big shipment of positives to go into the steamer.

According to film men who were involved in the "provisional delay," Washington appears to be somewhat in the dark concerning exactly what a film is made of. L. R. Thomas, of the firm of North American Motion Picture Company, exporters, told MOTION PICTURE NEWS that one of the Export Embargo Board's officials claimed motion picture films contain potassium cyanide, which is used for war purposes in the refining of copper. Mr. Thomas forthwith offered to pass a hundred-foot strip of the film over his tongue, to prove that that amount did not contain "enough cyanide to hurt a mosquito."

Mr. Thomas went on to say that the embargo is not likely to affect shipments to allied nations, but that neutrals who cannot give a good account of themselves will very probably suffer. Film contains guncotton, which would prove useful to Germany's ammunition factories; hence neutrals who are in the habit of shipping prohibited stuffs across the border to the "boche" wil have difficulty in securing film.

The shipment of film on the "Vasari" was handled by the Transatlantic Shipping Company. It contained 100,000 feet of Universal film, 100,000 feet of North American Motion Picture Company's exports, including productions of World, Metro and others; and 100,000 feet of Paramount film exported by Garfinkle.

This is understood to be the first shipment of film to a neutral country since President Wilson issued his embargo order. Since that order went into effect, twenty thousand licenses covering all classes of goods are said to have been issued. At present, rate of issue is rather slow, but the machinery of the Embargo Bureau is being speeded up.

Cummins Gets Two Features

A five reel negative has been purchased by Samuel Cummins, New York film broker, for the Phax Picture Co. from Trans-Oceanic Film Co. The price reported paid was $15,000.

Another deal closed by Cummins recently, announced as involving $20,000 was the purchase from Coronet Film Co., a six reel feature for one of his clients. The picture in question deals with international spying.

The advertising campaign, the promotion, the appraising, and distribution of these two pictures will be done through Samuel Cummins.

He also wishes to announce that he is in the market for unreleased negatives as he has a great demand for same.

Picture Show Social Event in China, Says Traveler

According to Ernest Young, who has just returned from China and is journeying through the United States, motion pictures have made a big hit in China; so much so, in fact, that the women of the Celestial Empire now make attendance at a movie show a social event, to be observed with a lavish display of their choicest silks and jewels.

"The motion picture craze in China," remarked Mr. Young to a Motion Picture News correspondent, "now has reached a point where the natives are demanding an all-day show. The way the women 'doll up' at these exhibitions would send their sisters of other countries into hysterics."

He further declared that the Chinese motion picture fans want plenty of action on the screen. They gladly would sit in a picture show all day if there are enough thrills to keep their minds occupied.

"What particular action do they desire?" was asked.

"The more shooting the merrier," he replied. "They are keen for comedy."

Prominent Piedmont Officer

G. A. Engler is in full charge of the service and distribution department of Piedmont Pictures Corporation.

Through long employment in foreign banking business, Mr. Engler is said by Feliz Malitz, President of Piedmont, to be thoroughly conversant with the method of foreign trade and is able to unravel the Gordian knots that the red tape that must be gone through in the export business, ties, in record time.

Brockliss Sails for London

Prior to his departure a few days ago for London, J. Frank Brockliss, foreign representative of King-Bee Films was guest of honor at a theatre party.

In the party were the executives of the King-Bee Films Corp. who acted as hosts. Preceding the theatre entertainment an informal dinner was arranged by Louis Burstein, president of the King-Bee Co. Among the guests were S. Garrett, L. L. Hiller, Jacob Wilke, Nat. H. Spitzer, Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., and Arvid Gillstrom.

Slight Request from Minas Garaes, Brazil

William Fox has received this note from a motion picture "fan" in Minas Garaes, Brazil:

"Salutations! Enthusiast admirer of this insuperable company cinematographic, very appreciated everywhere! (and now comes the denouement), 'I beg you to send me portraits of your admirable and celebrated stars. . . . I beg you to receive antecedently my thankfulness.'"

Export Film Men Act on Embargo

At a meeting at the Hotel Astor members of the Foreign Film Buyers' Association unanimously decided that Jacques Kopfstein be empowered to transact all business for the association in connection with the screening and purchasing of films for foreign market. The official title voted upon Mr. Kopfstein was that of managing director.

The question of embargo on foreign shipments of American films was discussed and Mr. Kopfstein was empowered to appoint a committee to cope with this problem. L. R. Thomas was delegated by the association to take the matter up in Washington.

"Wheel of Life" Sold for Scandinavia

A deal was closed last week on "The Wheel of Life" to Carle E. Carlton for Scandinavia, by Samuel Cummins, film broker. The production was for John Cort.

A deal was also closed by Mr. Cummins for Trans-Oceanic Film Company, of a negative to the Phax Pictures Company and another negative for the Coronet Film Company. The purchaser's name was not disclosed.

Exporters May Feel Russian Foreign Exchange Embargo

Advices from Russia indicate that an embargo placed on foreign remittances will have a wide effect on export of films to that country.

The embargo is a sweeping one, forbidding all money remittances to foreign persons, firms and institutions or their representatives in Russia, and also the undertaking of obligations involving remittances and deposits unless special permission of the Ministry of Finance is obtained.

Just how much this will affect the handling of film for Russia remains to be seen. There is considered a possibility that arrangements will be made whereby the credit institutions indicated by the Minister of France, will handle and conclude such film deals in which foreign exchange is concerned.

Enterprises, Inc., Gets "Deadly Sins"

General Enterprises, Inc., has bought the foreign rights to the McClure series entitled "The Seven Deadly Sins." The company was influenced in obtaining the pictures for the market abroad as a result of the popularity of the pictures in this country.

"The Adventurer," Mutual's Chaplin, for Early Release

Charlie Chaplins' new picture, "The Adventurer," soon to be released by Mutual, is, according to the comedian himself, the picture he has long tried to achieve.

Edna Purviance, who supports Mr. Chaplin in most of his comedies, has plenty to do in luring the inimitable Charles into tight places and in rescuing him after he has become so involved that escape seems impossible.

"The Conqueror" Makes Success on Broadway

To Run Another Week at the Globe—New York Newspapers Bubble Over with Laudation—It Pleases in Photography

"THE Conqueror," the William Fox photodrama based on the heroic life and romantic times of General Sam Houston, starts its second and last week at the Globe Sunday.

Scenes of beauty follow one another in profusion, for "The Conqueror" abounds in excellent photography.

The settings are as picturesque as they are attractive. The early days in Tennessee—the Nashville of 1825—is shown in all its quaintness, and there is the Cherokee Indian village at nightfall, and the wild ride of the braves as they answer the call to arms, that makes a gripping, exciting spectacle.

Through all these runs a love story—the story of Sam Houston's love for Eliza Allen, the fairest rose of Tennessee.

Opposite Mr. Farnum as Eliza Allen is Jewel Carmen, and others are Charles Clary, J. A. Marcus, Owen Jones, and three Indian chiefs, William Eagle Shirt, Chief Birdhead and Little Bear.

"The Conqueror" will close its engagement at the Globe on Sunday night, September 23. On Monday night, September 24, William Fox will present at that theatre a picturization of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the second of the "Fox Kiddie Features."

Following are excerpts from reviews of "The Conqueror":

Harriette Underhill, in the Tribune, said: "A chance to see William Farnum in a picture which abounds in human interest. Sam Houston is the best thing that William Farnum ever has done."

"Zit," in the Evening Journal, said: "'The Conqueror' has come and conquered. This William Fox wonder picture revealed for the first time last night at the Globe is a triumph of photoplay production."

The American said: "The audience last night actually sat on the edge of their seats. 'The Conqueror' is clean, wholesome, stirring, patriotic photodrama. It is superlatively American."

The Evening World said: "'The Conqueror' lived up to its title, for it surely did conquer the large audience that turned out to see William Farnum in the leading role."

New Producing Company Has Three Comedy Releases Ready

LOU MARKS, once Keystone comedian, will be featured in "Three C Comedies," one-reel eccentric subjects, to be produced by the Commonwealth Comedy Company, Inc., and released through General Film. The new concern has offices at No. 1545 Broadway, New York.

Production of "Three C Comedies" has begun at the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle where accommodations have been secured under a long lease. Frank P. Donovan is directing Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard, Oom Paul and a large stock company.

Three releases are ready, "His Watery Waterloo," "His Winning Ways" and another subject not yet named. The first picture, "His Watery Waterloo," leads a series.

Marks has appeared in Universal, Vitagraph, Marcus Loew and F. P. Donovan comedies. He is an alert, hard working acrobatic comedian with a winning personality and mannerisms all his own. It is with the intension of featuring him in his own conceptions that the new company engaged him.

Pearl Shepherd is the winner in three beauty contests. The first was at a motion picture exhibitor's convention at Madison Square Garden, followed by an engagement with the Thanhouser company. She has played the feminine lead in Pokes and Jabs comedies, and later in Wizard and Vim comedies. Last Winter she won the first beauty prize at the ball of the Bronx exhibitors, and also at a movie "fan" ball at the Hunts Point Casino.

Joseph S. Klein, a New York Attorney, is president of the Commonwealth Comedy Co., Inc., and is remembered as prominent in urging the passage of the new Act raising municipal courts of New York to courts of record.

"The Little Princess"—Next Play for Mary Pickford

SIMULTANEOUS with the country-wide success of the latest Mary Pickford picture, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Artcraft announces "The Little Princess" as the next vehicle for "Our Mary." This subject has appeared with wide success both in book form and on the stage. The original book which became popular throughout the country is "Sara Crewe" from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett. In 1903 Mrs. Burnett dramatized the book, and at the Criterion theatre the story was staged under the management of Charles B. Dillingham.

Work has already been commenced on the picture at the Lasky Studio in California, under the direction of Marshall Neilan, whose achievements in the film presentation of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" has attracted wide attention. Although Mr. Neilan is still a young man, his insights into humanity and his master touches of the true artist as displayed in "Rebecca," "The Bottle Imp," "Jaguar's Claws" and other similar film successes, have placed him among the very foremost motion picture producers in the field.

One of the features of this production is the large number of important characters that it demands, the cast offering twenty characters, each with great individual importance to the story.

When the play appeared on Broadway it received praise from newspaper critics as well as the metropolitan theatregoers, due not only to its novelty, but also to its great human appeal. It is understood that "The Little Princess" will be released by Artcraft in November.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

Police Close 24 Houses Which Are Without New Licenses

Twenty-four of the motion picture theatres of Chicago, which were without new licenses for the coming year, were closed by order of the police last week. The sudden order to close and the enforcing of it by the police in person brought about many amusing as well as perplexing situations at many of the theatres among the number affected.

On last Tuesday evening when the Little Majestic theatre at 14 Division street, was crowded during the first show, policemen entered and ordered the show stopped. The patrons were forced to leave, lights were turned out and the doors of the theatre locked. The manager of the theatre was forced to refund all fees to the ousted audience. The police contended that Manager Pedorr had neglected to take out his new license.

The latter stated they had made application and had presented the $100 fee for the new license just two days before. He claimed the clerk in the license department at City Hall refused to accept the money until the application was approved and therefore was responsible for the inability of the theatre to secure the new license in time. In the meantime Manager Pedorr claims that he was told that he could keep on running his house until the approval and license came through the proper channels.

All of the other theatre owners and managers had similar experiences.

Luncheon and Reception Tendered Billie Burke's Male Lead

Thomas Meighan, who is at present working opposite Billie Burke in her Paramount-Artcraft series, found time in between pictures, as he put it, to come to Chicago for a short visit last week. The visit was primarily to see his wife, Miss Frances Ring, who is a member of the "Upstairs and Down" Company at the Cort theatre.

A theatre party and a luncheon was tendered to the daily and trade press by Max Goldstein, manager of Artcraft, with Mr. Meighan as the honor guest on each occasion. He predicted great things for this latest Billie Burke series and also gave some encouraging and optimistic viewpoints on the motion picture business for the future.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer Plan New Picture House

It looks to be necessary for Jones, Linick and Shaefer to open another Loop theatre for motion pictures exclusively. There is rumor rounding to the effect that they are planning such a move. Aaron Jones, the fountainhead of such information, is, however, in New York, and nothing definite can be learned.

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

Manager G. W. Frankland, of the Pastime theatre, announces a new policy regarding the "pink permits" of this city. His policy is to refrain from showing "pinks" in the future as much as possible.

"When the Call Came," a patriotic picture by Jack Lait, the local newspaper man, and put on the market by the Herald Land Bureau, is getting its first trip through the Chicago theatres.

"The Spy," the Fox picture which Major Funkie tried to hold up in this city but which was passed over his head by a court order, had a showing last week at Harry Miller's Rose theatre.

Jack Falleis, for the past eight years manager of the poster department of the Laemmle Film Service office here, has been transferred to the head office in New York, where he will assume charge of a new department.

Manager Weisfeldt, of the Wholesome Film Corporation, gave a special showing to the trade press of their revamped picture, "Cinderella and the Magic Slipper," last week. The picture has been much improved by cutting, etc.

Manager M. J. Mintz, of the Unity Photoplays Company, reports excellent bookings for all of the pictures they are now handling, especially "Babbling Tongues," which made a big hit upon its first showing in this city.

Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Photoplays Company, tells me that he contemplates the purchase of one of the biggest of the recent New York screen successes for distribution in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. He will give no further details yet.

Harry Beaumont, formerly one of the shining lights of the Essanay directorial staff, has signed with Selig. Mr. Beaumont was responsible for the Skinner pictures.

One of the most pleasant bits of correspondence that has come to our desk in many a day came this week in the form of an announcement that Miss Margaret Tighe, the well known "aide-de-affaires" to Manager Bill Jenner at the local K-E-S-E office, is to be married on Sept 18. Thomas J. Hackett, now enlisted in the United States army, is to be the fortunate person. Miss Tighe is well known to the local exhibitors and especially the local trade press representatives. For the latter she always has had a smile, a synopsis or a bit of Irish wit ready at each week's showing for the press.

Work on Production Starring Charlotte Is Begun

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, of this city, have begun work on their production of a picture to feature Charlotte, the widely known queen of ice skating. Miss Charlotte has made fame in New York and this city as an ice skater and this will be her first trip into pictures.

H. A. Spanuth, president of Commonwealth, announces that they have secured Oscar Eagle to direct this first production. Mr. Eagle has been with Famous Players, World Film and many others in that capacity, so that end is well taken care of. C. J. Van Deusen, of Vitagraph, has been engaged to aid Mr. Eagle.

In charge of the camera end will be Jackson Rose, better known as Jack, who for the past seven years has been with the Essanay Company and who has filmed most of their star productions. Jack Meredith, late of Triangle, will be leading man working opposite Miss Charlotte. Mr. Meredith has been featured in many big screen productions of the past and is also known for his work on the legitimate stage.

Appoint Chicago Manager of Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange

Frank J. Flaherty, for years a successful manager of motion picture distribution in the West and recently of the Universal, has been engaged to take charge of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange in Chicago. His assistant is to be Miss Deborah Finnan, who has long held that position with the Universal Chicago branch.

The Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange has large quarters in the College Building, which is 207 South Wabash avenue. There exhibitors will find customary Foursquare treatment, and a special suite of offices is being fitted up for use by visiting theatre managers and owners, with a stenographer in attendance to look after their wants.

Big Print House Issues New Review Pamphlet

Cahill-Igoe, well known printing house of Chicago, the home of Cico Toodles and always striving to help the motion picture exhibitor to whom they cater, have gotten out a little pamphlet entitled, "Screen Opinions." It is edited by Paul G. Smith and gives good reviews of all current screen productions, together with excerpts of reviews from the various trade journals as well as advertising hints. It should be a worthy and useful little book for the exhibitor's desk.

Hazel Daly, the well known "Honey" of the Essanay Skinner pictures is to become a star under the Selig banner. Her first role in a Selig picture will be in "Brown of Harvard."

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

IT may be rather spiteful and it may be bad business judgment and everything else but frankly we wish that Hector Clarence Rasputin had been gently slaughtered in childhood. What a boon this would have been to Russia and the ex-Czar, but then there is always the picture business to think about.

IN "The Adventurer," Charlie Chaplin will be seen as a convict who escapes. "Imagine the fun," writes the frenzied p. a. If that were possible Charlie Chaplin would not be Charlie Chaplin.

WHEREIN THE COMEDIAN TURNS JOKESTER

Billy West, King-Bee's comedian, walked into the studio at Bayonne recently and found a lot of charming young girls engaged for a scene at a sea shore resort. One of the damsels fair to look at and with a wealth of "honest to goodness" blonde hair was sitting with her legs crossed "a la masculine." Something attracted Billy's attention, and seemed to hypnotize him. It was a pair of rich colored yellow stockings worn by the blonde. After a critical observation (at a distance of course), Billy called his director, Gillstrom, and pointing to the wild colored hose, exclaimed, "that's the largest banana I ever saw in my life."

HARRY REICHENBACK postcarded from Paris that he would be home on September 12, but the advance notice was overtaken by Harry and they arrived together. As yet he has given out no interview regarding the condition of the warring countries.

WE have with us this week an exclusive picture of Thomas J. Geraghty, not Geritty, caught between Paralta scenarios with daughter and son. When in New York, Tom was generally known as the Hound of Herald Square but since his sojourn on the other coast where his waggish ways have become equally as well known, they call him the Hound of Hollywood. Any biographical matter concerning this person will be forwarded on request. Neither space nor policy permits its relation on this page.

THE first issue of Screen Opinions, a weekly service containing reviews and advertising hints published by the Cahill-Igoe Company of Chicago, is at hand.

WILLIAM FOX has gone S. L. Rothapfel one better in presenting his picture "The Conqueror" at the Globe. During the fight stuff real guns are discharged back of the screen successfully drowning out the orchestra, making the spectator's head ring and filling the theatre full of smoke.

CHARLOTTE has gone into pictures, too, but this doesn't mean that she's a cheap skate.

EDITORIAL

The question as to where to draw the dividing lines between the work of author, director and editor has come up so many times that it's becoming a great mystery to some earnest students of pictures.

The logical answer is that the line isn't drawn.

In one studio it's one thing. In another a thing altogether different.

The question presents a problem similar to those who ask the same of the stage play. An author's original manuscript may be rewritten and rewritten by himself and by others. The stage director may change it here and there and the producer may think more changes there and here to its benefit.

It seems to be about the same in the studio. A scenario writer may prepare a working script that needs no changes. (In one or two studios he must.) And then again he and several others may work over it until the final product takes on a new shape.

Frankly there seems to be no drawing the line between the work of the three above mentioned artists. In one studio they may have definite duties to perform, in another the duties may be just as definite but quite different.

At any rate, the author, director and editor accomplish a man's job and a half whenever they turn out a completed picture. The spectator who wants to know who did this and who that, however, has little chance of being enlightened unless he sees every scene in the making.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Exchange Man Uses Sound Business Methods

E. R. Crary, manager of the Famous Players Film Service at Cincinnati, is an example of the efficiency expert who can come into the moving picture field and make good. A little more than a year ago Mr. Crary was auditor for the Peters Cartridge Company, and when he came to the Famous Players' Exchange he applied the same methods to selling Paramount and Artcraft pictures that had been used in marketing shells.

"The same sound business methods which apply to any old time business must be applied to the motion picture industry," says Mr. Crary, and all his policies have been built on that theme. He is a strong believer in service and has taken for his motto that of the Rotary club, "He profits most who serves best."

Exchange Notes from Calgary, Western Canada

N. M. Trafton, who controls the Orownay Circuit, with houses in Fernie, Nelson and Trail, has arranged for the Artcraft productions in these towns, as well as several special features, booked by the Famous Players in Canada.

Mr. Dawson, of Vancouver, is in the city looking after his interest in the "Ne'er Do Well" during its engagement at the Grand theatre, Calgary, for one week.

C. G. Bowker, Empress theatre, McLeod, was in the city, and arranged for some of the Famous Players Specials.

A. W. Warner, who controls the theatres in Prussia and Prelate, Sask., was in Calgary this week, and arranged for several of the special features, as well as regular service from the Famous Players Film Service.

The Famous Players have arranged to supply the Military Hospital in the Alberta District with their war picture, "The Advance of the Tank," as well as the Military Training Camps in and around Calgary.

Ivan Exchange for Cleveland

The Ivan Film Productions is making preparations for opening a Cleveland distributing office in the Belmont Building. George Stockton, popular among film men of Ohio, will be in charge. They have announced their first production to be "One Law for Both," a play with a big cast of well-known players, including Rita Jolivet, Leah Baird, James Morrison, Paul Cappelani, Margaret Greene, Vincent Serrane and Anders Randolph. It is a story of Russia and America.

Mutual First to Move Into New Detroit Building

The Mutual Film Exchange has moved from 97 Woodward avenue to the new film building, being the first to take quarters there.

All Cleveland Exchanges Report Booming Business

WARTIME demand for motion pictures apparently is becoming the business of the Cleveland exchanges which look for a prosperous Fall. They are all busy.

The new Goldwyn distributing offices in the Standard theatre building are not fully equipped yet, but when they are they will be something to gaze upon, especially the projecting room. Manager Bandy lays great stress upon the projecting room. "We're going to have a regular theatre," he said, "to show our pictures properly." The Oliver Supply Company is furnishing two Simplex projectors and one of the new Danish Diamond Curtains. No expense is being spared to make the Goldwyn offices reflect the stability and quality of the Goldwyn pictures.

First run Goldwyn features will be shown at the Standard theatre, and second runs at the Metropolitan. The second run contract is unique in that it will be the first time that a second run picture will be played for an entire week in the same city in which the first run played an equal engagement. The Metropolitan is the largest uptown house. In fact, excepting only the Stillman, it is the largest house in Cleveland.

First-run contracts outside of Cleveland include the Strand, Youngstown; the Temple, Toledo, and the Grand, Columbus.

T. M. Eckert, for the past six months connected with Pathe's Pittsburgh branch, has been chosen manager of the new Cleveland office of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, which is expected to open some time this month. Mr. Wolfberg is arranging with large advertising agencies in each section of his territory to handle publicity for his attractions. This service will be given free of charge, on the two and three day bookings, as well as on the longer ones.

Herman Mandelbaum, son of Henry T. Mandelbaum, manager of the Cleveland branch of the United Theatre Equipment Company, left this week with his artillery brothers to join a concentration camp in Alabama. Young Mandelbaum has been associated in business with his father for several years, and is well known among the Ohio exhibitors.

Uncle Sam wants efficient men. The Famous Players Film Service specializes in efficiency. So that may be the reason why so many of their ranks have been depleted lately. R. E. Brasher, auditor for the Pittsburgh office, was drafted some time ago. His place was filled by George W. See from New York. Now See has been called to the colors, and Famous Players is looking for another auditor. Cleveland is no better off. Auditor Miles has received word to be prepared to report for duty any time.

There is a new little girl in the home of J. S. Bruce, booker in the Cleveland Vitagraph office. And she is a real Vitagraph baby, because they named her Mary Jane. And now they are calling Bruce "Mary Jane's Pa."

E. A. Eschman, the local manager for World Pictures, is in the East. His point of destination is East Quogue, L. I., where his family has been summering. But he'll stoff off in New York before he returns.

The Cleveland K.E.S.E. branch has grown too big for its new Fall productions. It had to move across the hall in the Sincere Building, where it will have more room to spread popular wares and receive its enthusiastic patrons.

Mutual Changes in Lake Superior Country

A. C. Field, manager of Mutual's Escanaba branch has been transferred to the sales force of the Milwaukee office and C. K. Olson, formerly a salesman at the Minneapolis branch, has been apppointed branch manager at Escanaba.

B. Whitman, formerly salesman at Winnipeg, has been named branch manager at Winnipeg, succeeding J. H. Boothe, whose resignation became effective September 2.

Vitagraph Shifts Middle West Managers

H. J. Bayley, manager of the Minneapolis branch of the Vitagraph distributing organization, has been transferred to the post of branch manager of the company's Chicago office, succeeding S. E. Abel. E. S. Holmes, former manager in New Orleans, succeeds Mr. Bayley in the Minneapolis office, and he, in turn, is succeeded as manager in the Crescent City by A. W. Plues, a salesman who won promotion by his splendid work. Mr. Holmes had the distinction of bringing his office first under the wire in a selling contest.

W. T. Kinson at Pittsburgh for General Film

A new manager for the General Film Company exchange at Pittsburgh is announced. He is W. T. Kinson, who was for two years the Mutual representative in Pittsburgh. For five years before that he was connected with General Film Company. Mr. Kinson has always had an excellent record in the motion picture distributing world and comes to his new position with excellent prospects of usefulness.

Farewell Dinner Planned for George F. Meeker

George F. Meeker, manager of the World Exchange in Philadelphia is to be tendered a farewell banquet by his friends when he leaves to accept higher honors. Jay Emanuel, of the Park and Jefferson theatres, has the arrangements in hand.

Probably the dinner will be served at the Bellevue-Stratford about Sept. 20.

Paul Brunet Hears from Drafted Cashier

Paul Brunet, comptroller for the Pathe Company, has just received this letter from O. J. Ribichek, cashier at Cleveland:

"Having been drafted into the New National Army, I wish to state that although I am proud to be able to serve my country, I am indeed sorry to sever my connections with the best organization with which I have ever been associated.

"It pains me even more, now that the work of cashiers has been made easier by the installation of the new systems."

Newsy Notes from St. Louis

Y.; early football at University of California; building barracks 140 feet by forty-two feet in eight hours; Colonel Roosevelt addressing suffragists at Oyster Boy; a "fountain of youth" at Galveston, and finally, cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Pathe's Park Series to Show Yellowstone

In "Our National Parks," a series of one-reel scenics, Pathe is releasing subjects of much interest to all Americans.

Ralph and Mrs. Earle are now in the Rocky Mountain National Park. From there they will go to Cody, Wyoming, to take scenes in the Yellowstone Park and vicinity. They hope to be able to film the Mt. Rainier Reservation in Washington before the season closes. They have traveled in all 32,000 miles.

The latest pictures submitted by Mr. Earle to the Pathe were of the Mesa Verde country and show the strange dwellings of the cliff dweller perched like birds' nests under huge overhanging cliffs.

Harold Lockwood Is in New York with "Paradise Garden"

FINISHING touches are being put on Fred J. Balshofer's production of George Gibbs story "Paradise Garden," which is the name of the last Yorke-Metro picture made on the West Coast. Some few scenes requiring a New York background are being filmed and after Mr. Balshofer has assembled and cut the picture he will immediately begin work on his next subject, the first to be made in New York.

"Paradise Garden," the current picture, is a seven reel picturization of George Gibbs' popular novel of the same name, with Harold Lockwood playing Jerry Benham, the hero of Mr. Gibbs' book. It will be released October 1 as a Metro play.

George Gibbs is a writer of romance which readily adapts itself to screen usage. He recently contributed "The Yellow Dove" as a starring vehicle for Mr. Lockwood and this picture scored a mark for him. His "Paradise Garden," already a success as a book, is expected to add considerably to his name as an author, from the motion picture point of view.

Having unpacked their trunks and put their belongings in order, the principals of the Yorke-Metro Film Corporation headed by Fred J. Balshofer, president; Harold Lockwood, the star; Wiley Gibson, business manager; Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; Antonio Gaudio, cameraman; Lester Cuneo, William Clifford and John Schronberg, members of the acting force in Mr. Lockwood's support, are becoming settled in their new surroundings in New York after their experience of moving from California.

Timely in Magazine and News Reel Is Gaumont

In Gaumont's "Reel Life," No. 75, released October 4, are two subjects of timely interest, "Making Army Rifles," taken under official supervision in the most historic arsenal in the United States and "Dogs of War," showing the training of some of the thousands of dogs which will accompany our soldiers abroad.

"Japanese Dwarf Plants," showing century-old trees, which are only a few inches high; "The Sign of a City", and "The Chorus Girl" and "Who Hesitates Is Lost," two animated subjects from Life, complete this number of "Reel Life."

"Gaumont-Mutual Weekly," No. 144, reaches the screen October 3, and will contain only the latest up-to-the-minute news. About that time many of our soldiers will be embarking for France, some of them will be arriving on foreign soil, and it is quite probable that not a few will be in actutl battle.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Many Live Subjects in Hearst-Pathe Reel

In the Hearst-Pathe News, No. 74, release September 12th, there are French pictures showing General Pershing at a garden party given by American Red Cross workers.

Other subjects are: General Lafayette celebration at Philadelphia; football at Berkeley, California; Chinese telephone exchange, San Francisco; reception to U. S. battleships at Buenos Aires; girl scouts as farmhands at Ossining, N. Y.; trying to salvage steamer Del Norte at San Francisco; Colonel Roosevelt to suffragists at Oyster Bay; Chilean submarines starting away at Sagamore, Mass.; soldiers departing from Los Angeles, San Francisco and Minneapolis. Besides there is a cartoon "Fall Styles for Men."

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE got a surprise at Metro Studio the other day when Tammany Young, who has always been submissive heretofore, entered upon a revolt. Tammany said:

"I will not play this part of a German spy. I wouldn't have any heart in it and would surely spoil the character you have drawn, and besides how could I ever again speak to Mr. Belasco or Willard Mack, both of whom have engaged me for speaking roles."

"That is certainly more than one hundred per cent. loyal, Tammany," replied Mr. Cabanne, "I will certainly have to recast you."

LLOYD LONERGAN, who wrote the first scenario for the Thanhouser Company, and has been connected with that institution since it was started in 1909, retired on September 1. He is going to Cape May, N. J., for a rest, and intends to put business to one side until his return.

The latest picture from the pen of Mr. Lonergan is "The Man Withot a Country," suggested by Edward Everett Hale's patriotic story. This photoplay, a six-reeler, was made by Thanhouser, and will be released by Jewel Productions, Inc.

VIOLET HEMING, engaged by J. Stuart Blackton to star in Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Judgment House," is one of the best known of the many celebrated English actresses who have come to this country. She has already appeared in one Paramount picture and recently played opposite H. B. Warner in "The Danger Trail."

Miss Heming made a great success in the leading role of the great war drama "Under Fire" in which she appeared with William Courtenay, and has to her credit a large number of successful stage appearances.

THANKS to Marie Dressler and a group of her friends at the Piping Rock Club, members of the "Rainbow Division" of the army encamped at Camp Mills, L. I., were treated last week to a special showing of Miss Dressler's newest motion picture, "Tillie, the Scrub Lady." Several thousand soldiers, stretched on the grass in an improvised open-air theatre, applauded the performance.

Between reels, thousands of packages of cigarettes, purchased with the proceeds of a collection taken up at a Piping Rock tea, were distributed. Those who helped make the event one to be remembered were Mrs. Reeves Merritt, Mrs. Edward Townsend, Mrs. Stowe Phelps, Mrs. William Solomon, Mrs. William Guggenheim, Mrs. Frederick Esler, Mrs. Prime, Mrs. Buchard and Miss Dressler.

LEAH BAIRD, as Laurette Maxwell, has a part in the much heralded Ivan Abramson's "Sins of Ambition."

The part calls upon the finest sentiments as well as most raging passions of women's heart; moreover, she is compelled to undergo some exercises that may not altogether be to the liking of some of the more ease-loving players.

Notwithstanding the cold spell last week, one scene which required the sinking of a vessel in the Sound, with Leah Baird as a passenger, was successfully filmed.

TO come East, leaving California's sunny shores as flat as you found them, and to arrive in New York to find yourself appearing at a big Broadway theatre, is by way of being a unique experience, the only thing necessary to complete the experience being to discover that you have made a hit in that same big Broadway playhouse.

That's what Jewel Carmen found when she arrived in New York from the William Fox California studios. Miss Carmen, as you may know, is the young woman now appearing on the screen at the Globe opposite William Farnum in the Fox picture "The Conqueror."

Miss Carmen has scored a sizable personal hit, for her Eliza Allen, beloved of Sam Houston, "The Conqueror"—otherwise Mr. Farnum—is one of the most interesting and deftly done screen heroines of the season.

Miss Carmen has been in motion pictures about four years, but she has earned the greater part of the generous following which is hers since her initial appearance in Fox films, some twelve months ago.

Mabel Normand Makes Her Appearance in "Joan of Flatbush," a Goldwyn Production

JAMES A. MARCUS and Ralph Lewis, who have had important roles in many William Fox productions, have been selected by Director R. A. Walsh to appear prominently in the supporting company of his brother, "Smiling George" Walsh.

Marcus will be remembered particularly for his admirable characterization of the Governor in "The Honor System."

THE Theda Bara wink is scheduled to make its screen debut in Miss Bara's picture for William Fox, "Camille." There, for the first time in her film career, she indulges in a sly closing of the eye, which means worlds to the man she is looking at.

It is estimated that three-quarters of the men in the audience will think that Miss Bara is winking at them when the scene appears on the screen.

A REGULAR playroom and nursery has been established at the Essanay Studios for the use of the score or more children who are members of Little Mary McAlister's Company now filming comedy-dramas of child life.

Considerable difficulty was experienced with the children until this novel idea was put into effect. They romped over the expensive sets, breaking several vases and scarring the furniture and often got into the director's way. Now, however, they have ample room and opportunity to play to their hearts' content when they are not in the scenes.

HARRY HILLIARD, a leading man with the Fox Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that company. His contract still has a year to run. Two years ago Mr. Hilliard left the legitimate stage after a season with Florence Reed in "The Yellow Jacket."

He played with Theda Bara in "Gold and the Woman," "Her Greatest Love" and "Heart and Soul."

Mr. Hilliard is considering several offers and will soon announce his new connection.

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE, the wonderful little Foxfilm stars, received a delicate compliment from Mayor Mitchel last Saturday when they were given a special permit to appear at the Riverside theatre with Bert Levy, the artist.

The occasion was one of Mr. Levy's original "kiddie mornings," and he chose the Lee children from the scores of juvenile players as best able to amuse the several hundred children he had bidden to be his guests.

Jane and Katherine made a big hit with Mr. Levy's little guests. They demonstrated their way of making scenes before the camera and depicted the several emotions required in motion picture work, to the great delight of the big gathering of children.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

PRESENT plans provide a merging of the Triangle producing forces on September 15, after which the making of all subjects, both dramatic and comedy, will be done at the Culver City studios.

To prepare for the additional organization now making Triangle and Keystone comedies at the Hollywood Fine Arts studio, General Manager H. O. Davis has a big crew of carpenters at work constructing a mammoth open air stage which will have a floor space 60 x 300 feet. This stage is located back of the property rooms on a plot of ground formerly used for exterior settings.

There are now ten directors and companies working at Culver City, and when the comedy department is transferred, it will increase the number to seventeen. To provide scenarios, a staff of fifteen writers is now working under Editor Jack Cunningham and Julian Johnson, who has arrived from the East to take up his duties as film critic.

The next three months are to be the busiest of the year at the Triangle studios according to plans of Mr. Davis. He wishes the producing organization to take advantage of the best weather of the year, and thus be far ahead of release by the time the rainy season of January and February begins to interfere with production activities. By following up this plan considerable saving can be made as in the past it has been found the greatest loss to producing companies in California is caused by the two months of cloudy weather.

Now It's the "Real Life Vampire"

Walter Edwards has been selected to direct the filming of a new series of vampire stories which are referred to by the producing organization as vampire photoplays of real life. Belle Bennett is playing the featured role in these stories with such supports as Lee Hill and Texas Guinan. The first of the series is from a story by Maude Reeves White, picturized by Grant Wallace.

The Canadian Northwest picture, "Wild Shumack," starring Margery Wilson, under the direction of William V. Mong, will be finished within a few days. The cast supporting Miss Wilson includes George Chesebro, Walter Brownlee, Wilbur Higby, Ray Jackson and Diana Carillo. The story was written by Eileen Stern, and the scenario prepared by Agnes Parsons.

Raymond D. Wells, a recent addition to the Triangle directorial staff, has in the making, "The Strange Weakling," with William Desmond taking the featured part, that of a tramp. Wells will be remembered as producer of "Julius Caesar," the open air spectacle in which 5,000 took part, and a number of highly successful releases of Bluebird photoplays, as well as many other Universal subjects. "The Strange Weakling" is from a story by Harry Schumate, prepared for the screen by Alvin H. Neitz, formerly writer of the David Horsley studio, who recently joined the Triangle.

Roy Stewart, to be starred as cowboy by the Triangle, has completed his work in the Western thriller, "One-Shot Ross," and with his director, Cliff Smith, has taken up the making of "Guardian of the El Dorado." Editor Jack Cunningham is responsible for this story.

H. O. Davis Finds Time to Write

The recent sixteen acre purchase of Triangle, is being used for the first time as a site for an exceptionally large exterior setting, representing a street in the tenement district of New York. This was built for the second Ruth Stonehouse-Triangle photoplay, which has been titled "Doing Her Bit." Jack Conway is in charge of directing, and has Jack Gilbert in the leading role opposite Miss Stonehouse. Carl Ullman, who will be remembered for his fight in "The Flame of the Yukon"; Jack Brammell, former member of the Fine Arts staff, and others well known in pictures make up the supporting cast for Miss Stonehouse. H. O. Davis is author of the story and the scenario is by G. E. Jenks.

"The Stainless Barrier" which was put in production this week by Thomas Heffron, is to have an especially big cast, there being eighteen important parts. The principal players are Jack Livingstone, J. Barney Sherry, Mary MacIvor, Irene Hunt, and Jessie Hallett. This is from another Jack Cunningham scenario.

Charles Gunn, who has been playing leading man parts in Triangle subjects for almost a year, is now being featured in "An Even Break," being directed by Ferris Hartman. The principal feminine roles are taken by Laura Sears and Mildred Delfino. George du Bois Proctor wrote the scenario for this photoplay.

Another photoplay titled "Blue Blood," which has a Southern locale is being made with Walt Whitman in the featured part, and Alma Rueben playing the feminine leading role. Whitman recently appeared in "The Tar Heeled Warrior," which gave to him opportunity of characterizing the role of a Southern gentleman of the old school, and this was so well received by the management of the Triangle, that John Lynch was immediately assigned to writing similar photoplays. Katherine Carr is credited with preparing the scenario.

Lynn Reynolds Turns to Society

Lynn Reynolds has written a society drama as yet unnamed, and with a company is now at Santa Barbara making exterior scenes. Fritzi Ridgeway, who has been on the Coast with Universal for the past year, following a long engagement with Essanay at Chicago, together with George Hernandez, is being featured in the Reynolds photoplay.

Increase in Keystone Staff

The Triangle-Keystone producing staff has been increased to seven companies, the most recent directors to be engaged are Harry Williams, the song writer, and director who was formerly associated with Mack Sennett, who has already taken up his first subject. William Beaudine, for the past year director of Joker-Universal Comedies, will begin producing for the Triangle-Keystone within the next few days. Other additions to the producing staff announced from the studio are Charles Arling, who for the past year has been with the Fox organization in drama and comedy, and M. Binchi, who was also engaged this week.

Gladys Tennyson, a New One with Universal

The first comedy to be made by Harry Williams has a cast which includes Eddie Gribbon, Rose Carter, Marie Manley, Mal St. Clair and Blanche Payson.

One Triangle comedy company is now working at a small village thirty miles out of Los Angeles, which is reported to be the only town within a radius of fifty miles, which has not heretofore been shot and re-shot by film companies. H. Raymaker is the director of this company, and he has sworn all his players to secrecy to insure that the place can be used for filming future rural comedy scenes.

The company under the direction of Henry Kernan have finished two of the military comedies written by Jay Dwiggins, who also plays the leading role. Earl Rodney, Myrtle Reeves and Caroline Rankin are the principals supporting Dwiggins.

Quiet Week at Universal

This has been a rather quiet week at Universal City, with respect to new activities by the producing units, and of the twenty odd companies working there, a greater number giving their attention to the making of five-reel subjects, but two began work this week on new photoplays. One is titled "One Clear Call" and is being produced by Harry Salter, with Carmel Meyer and Kenneth Harlan in the featured roles. The cast includes Howard Crampton, Sidney Dean, Allen Sears, and Fred Shilling. The story is by Larry Evans.

Herbert Rawlinson is the featured player in a Bluebird being made by Director Elmer Clifton, at present known as "The Flash of Fate." Scenario for this was prepared by Waldemar Young from a story by J. W. Atcheson. Playing with Rawlinson is Mary MacDonald, a new protege of President Carl Laemmle, who will make her debut as leading woman in "The Dragnet," recently released by this company. Others of the cast are Dana Ong, Madge Kirby, Willis Marks, Jack Nelson and Frank MacQuarrie.

Director Jack Wells has begun the filming of a Christmas story with Jack Mower, a leading man recently added to the Universal forces, who will play opposite Donna Drew.

Lyons and Moran, supported by Juanita Hansen, specially engaged for the present subject, are filming under the direction of Harry Edwards, "The Fnishing Touch," which will be a two-reeler Nestor; and Allen Curtis is making "The Smugglers Last Smuggle," a one-reel Joker. Dave Morris and Gladys Tennison are leading players in "Hay Sneezes," a Victor Comedy being directed by Craig Hutchinson.

Stuart Paton and company completed the last scenes for the concluding episode of "The Gray Ghost" serial of sixteen two-reel releases this week on schedule time, and the players, including Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo, Harry Carter and Emory Johnson, as well as Director Paton, are enjoying a vacation they claim they earned. Paton is shortly to begin another serial. The Jacques Jaccard company making "The Red Ace" serial with Marie Walcamp, Larry Paton, Charles Brindley, Yvette Mitchell and Bobbie Mack, are now on the twelfth episode. Director Francis Ford and company, including Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, are still working on the sixth episode of "The Phantom Ship."

Within a week, Directress Ida May Park, will complete "The Boss of Powderville," which has Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell, Jack Mulhall and Lon Chaney as the principal players. Director Joseph de Grasse will finish "The Winged Mystery," starring Franklyn Farnum with Rosemary Theby playing the opposite lead. Important parts are taken in the latter by Claire DuBrey and Sam deGrasse.

Other subjects nearing completion are "Julio Sandoval" with Ruth Clifford and Rupert Julian. "Miss Summerville's Deception," featuring little Zoe Rae, supported by Gretchen Lederer, Harry Holden, Lule Warrenton and others, and "The Wolf and His Mate," directed by E. J. LeSaint with Hart Hoxie playing the part of the wolf.

Ella Hall Takes the Step

Ella Hall became the bride of Emory Johnson on September 6, the wedding being officiated by Rev. E. P. Ryland in the presence of members of the two families at the bungalow home of the bride in Hollywood. Elsie Cohn was bridesmaid and Harry Carter the best man. Miss Hall has been leading woman and featured player in Universal and Bluebird subjects for the past three years and her subjects have proven very popular. Johnson has played in Universal releases for the past eighteen months, his most recent work being in "The Gray Ghost" serial. The couple are now on a honeymoon trip to San Francisco and the Yosemite Valley.

Two accidents are reported from U City this week. Miss Ruth Clifford fell from a horse, badly spraining her wrist, and on another day a frightened Western pony ran away with Yvette Mitchell, and she was badly bruised when rubbed against the rough side of a cliff along a mountain road. Marie Walcamp proved herself the heroine of the latter accident by overtaking the runaway horse and stopping it.

Harry Harvey, who was added to the Universal directorial staff last week, began the filming of "Man of His Word," a two-reel subject, which has Neal Hart and Eileen Sedgwick as principals, supported by Joe Rickson, Gypsy Hart, Bud Osborne and Buck Connors.

Busy Days at Lasky Plant

Four companies are now busy at the Lasky and Morosco studios. William C. DeMille is directing Sessue Hayakawa; Donald Crisp is in charge of making the second Julian Eltinge story; Robert Thornby has a producing unit headed by Vivian Martin, and Marshall Neilan is completing "The Little Princess," starring Mary Pickford. William D. Taylor is now editing the Huckleberry Finn story, recently completed with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff.

Nettie Evans an English actress who played with Pathe and Gaumont in Paris, and had considerable experience with the Berlin and Copenhagen Producing Companies, is a recent addition to the stock company of the Lasky organization.

During the past week Cecil B. DeMille has been working at Balboa Beach with Geraldine Farrar and supporting company.

Considering that Henry Walthall has just signed a fat contract with Paralta, and bearing in mind that none other than Mary Charleson is his leading lady—why should he look so sad? Cheer up, Henry; the war can't last longer than fifty years!

The exterior scenes made there required several days.

Paul Dowling, formerly in charge of publicity at Horsley and Yorke-Metro studios, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to assist Kenneth McGaffey, head of the Western publicity department.

Billy Sunday, who is in Los Angeles, has been invited to speak during the noon hour at the Lasky studio, and has accepted C. B. DeMille's invitation. Mr. Sunday, when visiting the studio previously, made the statement that motion pictures did more to drive the saloons out of the country than any other one thing.

Chaplin Off on Vacation

Charles Chaplin will leave during the coming week for a vacation of six weeks, providing he does not change his mind and decide to materially change "Adventurer," which is at present destined to leave the studio for the Mutual Eastern offices on Wednesday. Mr. Chaplin is keeping all information concerning his vacation strictly confidential, for he proposes to go to some mountain resort away from every one who knows anything about films, so that he can get a perfect rest. It is intimated he will remain away about a week. During Mr. Chaplin's absence, plans will be made for productions to be filmed for the First National Exhibitors' Association. Several sites in Hollywood are now under consideration, and a new producing plant will be built there. The equipment of the plant now used by the Lone Star Company will in all probability be purchased and moved to the new plant. John Jasper, who has served as business manager of the Lone Star, will continue in this capacity for Mr. Chaplin's new company. It is also said Mr. Chaplin's entire force will remain with him in the making of new productions.

A mammoth setting, representing the interior of a hospital, occupied a portion of the Lois Weber studio, where scenes in "K" were taken. Miss Weber, to insure correct settings, had the interior of one of the finest hospitals in Los Angeles reproduced under the direction of Frank Ormston, who is head of the technical department. Two doctors from the hospital were employed while the scenes were being made on this setting that the players would have the correct action and expressions. In the Mary Robert Rinehart story, "K," True Boardman and Mildred Harris are the leads. Albert Roscoe takes one of the important parts.

Helen Holmes' R. R. Move

Helen Holmes, J. P. McGowan, Leo Maloney, Tom Lingham, Robert Brunton, and practically the entire Signal producing organization, together with three extra train crews secured from the Salt Lake Railway, are off for a two weeks' stay in Yosemite Valley and the northern part of California. Many sensational scenes will be made about Mount King mine near the entrance of the Yosemite, and from there the company will go to Sacramento, where the directors of the California State Fair Association have set aside one day of the annual exhibit to be known as Helen Holmes day. A feature of the program on this day will be a head-on collision of two locomotives, one of which will be piloted by Miss Holmes. Scenes of this will be used in the coming episodes of "The Lost Express" now being released by the Mutual. McGowan is to appear in this serial when he takes the role of foreman of the Mount King mine. The part requires but few appearances, but all are of a very important nature.

Dustin Farnum Tries His Hand at "Snow Stuff" in This New Fox Picture, "North of Fifty-Three"

The eighth chapter, which is next to be made will be titled "The Looters," and is said to have a number of new, thrilling scenes.

Success Extends "Fighting Trail"

The Arizona State Penitentiary was used this week for scenes in the second series of the Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail." Director William Duncan and company spent several days in Arizona securing scenes for several episodes. Instructions received from the New York office of the Vitagraph advise that "The Fighting Trail" is to have thirty-two reel releases instead of twenty-five. Originally it was planned this should run but fifteen weeks.

Larry Peyton (Universal)

The fourth release of the O. Henry series to be made by Director Dave Smith, "The Enchanted Kiss," has been completed and forwarded East.

Another film completed at the Vitagraph plant is "The Red Prince," which was made by William Wolbert with Alfred Whitman and Mary Andrson as the featured players.

The new office buildings of the Vitagraph studio have been completed, and were put into use this week by the executive force. Other improvements are under way at this studio, where it is reported there will be seven companies working during the winter season, four being sent from the Eastern Vitagraph plant.

Ince Rents Normand Studio

The studio in Hollywood formerly used by the Mabel Normand Feature Film Company, has been leased by Thomas H. Ince and will be used by the William S. Hart company for the making of future subjects. This plant is suitably equipped for the making of Hart productions, and with the edition of Western props it will serve ideally for the Artcraft star and his organization.

Work has been commenced on the second Charles Ray-Paramount subject, produced by Thomas H. Ince, but cast is not announced as definite, nor has the title been selected for this subject. Victor Schertzinger will be in charge of the direction.

Thomas H. Ince needed a type for the current Dorothy Dalton production and after a week's search found John B. Ritchey, member of the scenario reading staff, the man for the place. Ritchey is a former producer and theatrical manager whose acquaintance extends to every city in the country, as a result of his several seasons as manager of the great Herman. While thus engaged, he had with him two seasons the musical Laskys—Jesse and Blanche—and now after seven years he is to make his screen debut through the releasing organization of which his former cornetist is vice-president.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"A Man's Man"

(Paralta—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS long-heralded production in which J. Warren Kerrigan makes his return to the screen is an adaptation made by Thomas J. Geraghty of Peter B. Kyne's story which ran serially in "The Red Book." It is a story of the manner in which American heroics made a southern republic sit up and take notice and its many complications work up an amount of suspense that is unusual to say the least. The central figure, John Stuart Webster, the part carried by Mr. Kerrigan, is one of those fearless, quick and witty fellows who are always ready for a fight, no matter how great the odds, who stop at nothing to boost the cause of virtue and to defeat the forces arrayed against it. The "fearless" and the "quick" elements in the character are excellently brought out by the star, while his wit and humor are amply taken care of in the subtitles which Mr. Geraghty selected from the original work. In fact the hero is quite ideal, all things considered.

It was practically a safe bet that Mr. Kyne's story, given proper treatment, would make a good picture. And proper treatment has been accorded it from first to last. The many complications of the original work were carefully and clearly set down by the adaptor and equally well transferred to the celluloid itself by Director Oscar Apfel. The picture gathers suspense as it progresses, until in its latter reels, with the preparation for the revolution, the revolution itself and the conclusion of the love affair between Webster and Dolores which contains a delightful touch of humor, it surpasses even the fondest hopes. The first part contains the all important character planting and an abundance of comedy, present both in the action and the subtitles.

Mr. Apfel has obtained a most convincing Central American atmosphere for his picture. Whole street settings, palaces and minor buildings were erected especially for it. Typical looking characters are introduced incident to the story to complete the desired effect. Photographically the entire seven reels rank unusually high. There is not one bad scene as to photography and all its technical details.

Lois Wilson as Dolores, Kenneth Harlan as Billy Geary and Ed Coxen as John Cafferty acquit themselves in a highly creditable manner, while the supporting cast and the large number of supernumeraries taking part in the battle stuff render fine assistance.

Paralta's first is, everything considered, well worthy to be put forth as the initial effort of a company about which so much has been said in praise and so little known in fact.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

John Stuart Webster (J. Warren Kerrigan), successful prospector, journeys to the Central American republic of Sobrante in order to develop a mine with his friend, Billy Geary (Kenneth Harlan). Here he again meets Dolores Ruey (Lois Wilson), whom he had rescued from the attentions of a masher back in the States. He believes her in love with Geary and becomes resigned to the belief that she will marry him. Webster learns that Richarde Ruey (Harry Von Meter), a stranger he had assisted in escaping from America, is in reality the rightful president of Sobrante, and helps him prepare for the revolution. Dolores is not acquainted with the fact that she is Richarde's sister. Taking part in the revolution, which proves successful, Webster is injured and it is not until Dolores practically tells him that he realizes she loves him and not Geary.

Ida Lewis, Eugene Pallette, Ernst Pasgue, Arthur Allardt, Joseph J. Dowling, John Steppling and Wallace Worsley complete the cast.

"One Hour"

(Hoffman-Four Square—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

"ONE HOUR" is a sequel to "Three Weeks" and it was taken from the Elinor Glinn novel. In photodrama it far exceeds the interest on the book itself and forms an unusually interesting entertainment. Paul McAllister is responsible for the scenario and with Edwin W. Hollywood directed the picture. These gentlement seem to have an excellent appreciation of the requirements of continuity and the length to which each scene should be shown. The picture runs smoothly through all of its reels, and though the plot is by no means astonishing, tense interest is always maintained. The snow scenes are among the very best that have been shown in moving pictures. In most cases where the directors have had an opportunity to reproduce these they have not padded the picture with unnecessary scenes, but here the amount of their use has been judged to the spectator's satisfaction.

When the name of Elinor Glinn is coupled with a production, one is prone, from newspaper accounts of her novel, to look for pure smut. There is none of it in "One Day" as it is made into a picture. True, one of the scenes shows where it is necessary for the hero in saving the life of the heroine, to strip her clothing from her, but the picture portrayal is handled delicately and the "One Hour" which they spend together may be seen without retribution by the most narrow-minded of critics.

Zena Keefe, who has the role of "Opal," does some splendid work. Miss Keefe, thanks to say, has never been called "the most beautiful woman on the screen," but she has a camera face that registers the moods perfectly. Alan Hale accomplishes a splendid make-up and plays the hero's role in a manner that will satisfy everyone.

In short "One Hour" will recommend itself to everyone who wants a thoroughly interesting photoplay, with all the elements that go to make an enjoyable picture and with no great emphasis placed on the sordid.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Opal, (Zena Keefe) a romantic young personality with yearning to be an authoress is living with her uncle and aunt (D. J. Flannigan and Ina Brooks) in a splendid lodge in the Adirondacks. She is treated with great reverence by them, but does not know her true status. One day, in their absence she goes out for a walk and is attacked by wolves, when a Mr. Stanley (Alan Hale), a mysterious young man who is living in the neighborhood, rescues her by choking to death the leader of the brutes. In her flight Opal has fallen through the ice into the lake, and after taking her to his lodge Stanley realizes that it is necessary to strip the girl's icy clothing from her to save her life. Searchers coming for the girl attract the attention of Stanley, who warns the girl to dress herself, and the girl is overcome by the sense of what has happened, but on Stanley's assurance that she has been sacred to him, they lay the foundation for a friendship which opens into love. But just then enters on the scene the Baron Karnoff (Warren Cook), come to take the girl back to her kingdom, of which she is the queen, unknown to herself, and marry her to King Ruthevan (Franklyn Hanna) of the adjoining kingdom, to prevent a war. When the girl learns the truth she flees to Stanley, but after a terrific fight in which they have to spend "One Hour" together, she is torn from him and taken to the European country. Just as the wedding is about to take place Stanley, or Count Stanlai, appears on the scene and proves to be the nephew of King Ruthevan. They go to the kingdom of the princess the day before the wedding and that night the king, very much in his cups, tries to attack his bride of the morrow. Count Stanlai hears her cry and rushes to the room. In the struggle the king dies of the exertion of the combat and Stanlai is hailed as the king and claims his bride.

"The Man Without a Country"

(Thanhouser-Jewel Productions—Six Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BASED on Edward Everett Hale's brief masterpiece of the same name, "The Man Without a Country" should prove a gold mine to the exhibitor at the present time. It is a patriotic number in which a slacker of the present day is converted into a patriot after being visited by a vision of the story of Philip Nolan, who was exiled from the United States for the greater part of his life. This vision, a comparatively short portion of the six reels, is the only part taken from the original work, the modern story being provided by Lloyd Lonergan, who prepared the scenario for the whole.

But all parts of the picture, both modern and otherwise, are of the most inspiring sort. Several times was the audience at the Broadway theatre moved to applause at the sub-titles. And it is a safe bet that everyone who stands as an American will be so moved. It is a thrilling, inspiring and entertaining picture. Edward Everett Hale's book, "The Man Without a Country," contains some of the most impressive passages ever written and these Mr. Lonergan has dispersed in the historical portion of the film to wonderful effect. Philip Nolan's talk to the young midshipmen in which he tells them what their flag stands for, what their country stands for, is one of the finest passages in the story—and in the picture it brings cheers and the hasty brushing away of tears. The first part of the modern story is admirably constructed, although it is to be regretted that the pacifist characters were overdrawn to the point of burlesque. However, one doesn't look for faults in a picture of this character and, then, the pacifists furnish a variety of comedy as pictured that is not wholly superfluous.

Florence La Badie gets the most from her part of Barbara Norton and H. E. Herbert gives an excellent interpretation of both Philip Nolan and the slacker. George Marlo makes the enthusiastic boy a real figure, while J. H. Gilmour, Carey Hastings, Ernest Howard and Charles Dundan delineate their characters with precision. Ernest Ward has given the subject a staging that is satisfactory in every department.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Barbara Norton (Florence La Badie) breaks her engagement when, at the outbreak of the war she learns that her fiance (H. E. Herbert) is a pronounced pacifist. At his club the man is shunned because of his freely expressed attitude against the government. In a rage one day he lets out an oath against the United States.

That evening one of the older members of the club (Charles Dundan) comes to him with a copy of "The Man Without a Country," in which he sees himself as Philip Nolan, the man who cursed the United States and expressed himself as never wishing to see them again. Reads of how Nolan was banished on a ship, never allowed to hear reference to his native land, and how finally he died blessing his country. With this lesson, thoroughly learned, the modern man seeks a recruiting office and is soon enrolled among the fighting men of the United States.

"Barbary Sheep"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IT is difficult to determine between Elsie Ferguson's beauty and talent or Maurice Tourneur's artistry and subtlety as being responsible for the superiority of "Barbary Sheep." It is, of course, a combination of both star and director, but the acting of the former and the fine hand of the latter vie with one another for first honors throughout the picture. Miss Ferguson's screen debut could not have been made under more notable circumstances than those provided her by the role of Lady Wyverne in the adaptation of Robert Hichen's novel, "Barbary Sheep." There is a continual conflict of emotions in the character and Miss Ferguson brings out both feelings with a skill that has seldom been approached by actresses used to the picture camera and its exhorbitant demands. Combined with her talent she has a beauty and charm that is altogether irresistible.

Mr. Hichen's novel has to do with the Far East and possesses an atmosphere that is constantly rich and exotic—the dangerous charm of the desert under the moon and stars—a theme upon which a composer of music might sing to his heart's content. The descriptive beauty of Mr. Hichen's book has by no means been lost in its migration to the screen. If anything, Mr. Tourneur has succeeded in bringing out the atmosphere in a still more subtle, more fascinating way. He has proven before that he is an artist. If he wasn't he couldn't have staged a scene between an English woman in evening dress and an Arab in picturesque robes on the Sahara desert and make it appear convincing. His fine direction is apparent in every scene, from the smallest detail to the largest, while settings, photography and light are excellent.

"Barbary Sheep," shorn of its beautiful word pictures, left a rather bare and slim plot before the eyes of the adaptor, Charles Maigne. It presents in brief the old story of the busy husband, the neglected wife and the other man—this time a native of the desert. But he arranged his continuity so that the utmost suspense has been derived from it—which is no small amount. Particularly are the scenes leading to the climax, when Sir Claude begins to doubt his wife, able to thrill with a power far more than ordinary. But the story never gets to dragging even though the same plot, decorated with many more complications, has been seen time and again. It is the locale, the mystic third angle and the magnificent manner in which Mr. Tourneur has transferred the atmosphere of the descriptive passages in the novel to the screen that places "Barbary Sheep" in a class by itself.

Lumsden Hare as Sir Wyverne and Pedro de Cordoba as Benchaalal are well fitted to their respective parts and give excellent performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sir Claude Wyverne (Lumsden Hare) neglects his wife, Kathryn (Elsie Ferguson) in his love for sport. She, longing for adventure, urges him to go to Algeria, where there is hunting for Barbary sheep for him and the magic desert for her. Sir Claude pursues his sheep while Benchaalal (Pedro de Cordoba), attracted both by Kathryn and her jewels, pursues her. He sings to her at night and his voice together with the romantic atmosphere of the desert work a peculiar charm over her. Benchaalal bribes Sir Claude's guide (Macy Harlan) to keep him out over night, but the Englishman, hearing ugly rumors regarding the Algerian, returns late. His wife is out but returns soon after. The next evening he pretends to go and Kathryn is again lured forth into the desert by the same combination of forces. Here Benchaalal attempts to embrace and then to rob her, but is killed by one who has long borne a grudge against him. Sir Claude realizes the state of affairs and pardons Kathryn.

"For France"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

VITAGRAPH offers a war number in "For France" with an American hero and a French heroine—quite an ideal combination in these days. It contains a whole lot of good, thrilling action, such as a hot hand-to-hand fight between the American and a disciple of kultur and several small battles in which machine-guns figure with deadly effect. The producers have, however, exercised excellent judgment in dispersing between these heavy scenes snatches of romance and light comedy that fulfill their duty of relief to a most satisfactory degree.

The story by Cyrus Townsend Brady has a few minor inconsistencies, yet there is such a wealth of action that they never become anything more than minor. Wosley Ruggles has given it a fine production. The battle stuff is effectively handled particularly that scene in which the American escapes from the German cavalry in his aeroplane. This is indeed a novel scene and is so well staged that it will doubtless be immediately recognized as such. For the photography and light effects there is only praise, while the general detail of the production has been carefully attended to.

Edward Earle gives a breezy and likable performance as the American and Betty Howe makes a charming heroine. Arthur Donaldson and Eric von Stroheim as German officers are typical, the latter handling his role of heavy with an efficiency equalled only in reality. Mary Maurice and Frank Anderson complete the remarkably fine cast.

On the whole "For France" presents a war story that is most entertaining—not too heavy—in fact, just right.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Gerald Ackland (Edward Earle), aviation student in Paris, joins the flying corps of the French army when war breaks out. His fiancee, Marthe (Betty Howe), and her father (Frank Anderson) move from Paris to a farm on the Marne. Germans quarter themselves at the place and their leader attacks Marthe. Gerald descends from the skies just in time to save her. An attachment of English arrive and spend the night on adjacent grounds. In the morning they are attacked by the reinforced Germans. It is only through the heroism of Gerald that the English are saved from utter annihilation. He mans a machine gun until assistance comes in the shape of French cavalry.

"The Conqueror"

(Fox Standard Pictures—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Conqueror," the first of the series of Standard pictures inaugurated by William Fox, offers William Farnum as impersonator of Sam Houston, statesman and fighter. It is for at least half its length a romantic comedy but, in closing, it branches off on a dramatic line that rises to the heights of intensity. R. A. Walsh's direction might easily have been recognized had his name been omitted from the leader. His penchant for introducing domestic animals of all species was never so pronounced as here. The little dog that makes an appearance at the first is featured in a number of touching scenes with the title character, and his pathetic death, brought about by the villainy of Stokes, is as touching, if not more so, than the death of Houston's father. Besides the dog, Mr. Walsh has introduced chickens, a water bug, a kitten and a squirrel, all to humorous effect. Spasms of laughter greeted the scene in which the chickens are shown roosting on the neck of a mule. Such comedy has been interpolated time and again. Jumbo, the negro servant, is the mainspring in the comedy action. Seldom has an actor scored such a signal success as does James A. Marcus in this role, for the simple reason that seldom has an actor been given such a chance to match his abilities against those of the star. And while the profuse comedy element in "The Conqueror" is quite often remotely removed from the main line of action it is so effective that it is applauded. A little thing like technique is not to be considered when, by disregarding it, such excellent results have been obtained.

The latter half of the film introduces some strenuous battle scenes between marauding Mexicans and first settlers in Texas, with the Cherokee Indians to the thrilling last-minute rescue. The fights are undeniably realistic with the old-time cannon, powder that sends huge puffs of smoke in the air, and the picturesque garb of the participants. The costuming throughout is perfection itself in every detail. The women in hoop skirts, the men in ruffled shirts and stovepipe hats make a very attractive sight and lend an abundance of atmosphere to the story. The settings are elaborate; there is an entire street set to represent Nashville, Tenn., in its earlier days, while the interiors, particularly those of the Judge's home and the convent, are excellent.

"The Conqueror" outlines the career of Sam Houston according to history, and the love story has been supplied to enrich the action. Henry Christeen Warnack is author and his story has received creditable preparation for the screen. In some places it is obvious that much of the incident has been disposed of in the subtitles instead of in action, but the picture leaves a thoroughly satisfying impression, which is the real test.

Mr. Farnum makes a lovable character of the historical figure and Jewel Carmen is, at least, an opposite who charms every minute she is on the screen. Real Indians play the parts of the Cherokee chiefs, in fact an entire tribe of them appear. Next in importance to Mr. Marcus of the supporting members of the cast are Charles Clary as Stokes and Robert Dunbar as Judge Allen.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sam Houston (William Farnum), reared among the Cherokee Indians, returns to civilization after the death of his father (Owen Jones) and settles in Nashville. Eliza Allen (Jewel Carmen), daughter of the most aristocratic family in the town, laughs at Sam's ignorance and clumsiness and so the man starts in to make good. His progress is swift and after he has been elected governor of the state for the second time she marries him. But at the reception following the ceremony, Sam realizes that Eliza married him only to become the wife of the first gentleman of the state. He leaves in a rage. After he has gone Stokes (Charles Clary) attempts to force his attentions on Eliza. Her father (Robert Dunbar) interferes and is shot and killed. In shame Eliza goes in search of Sam, who has settled in Texas. She is captured by the Cherokees, who recognize her as a friend of the "white brother" by a picture Sam carried. She is given escort to a nearby convent. Desperadoes, headed by Stokes, attack the settlement where Sam has made his home. He leads them against the invaders. The Cherokees come to the rescue. The marauders make to the convent and there Stokes again attacks Eliza, who is rescued in the nick of time by Sam, who rides in pursuit at the head of his troops.

Carrie Clarke Ward, William Chisholm and William Eagle Shirt, Chief Birdhead and Little Bear, Indians, complete the cast.

Conquest Program No. 7

Edison (Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE D. GOULD

THERE is more than a marked improvement noticeable in the group of subjects presented on this Conquest list over former programs. The lighter portion of the entertainment is provided by "T. Haviland Hicks—Freshman" a humorous picture of college life in three parts, and "Gallagher" a two reel story of newspaper life, the work of the late Richard Harding Davis. For straight away value, both from an entertaining and instructional standpoint it is doubtful if any single reel picture can surpass "Turning Out Silver Bullets." The process of manufacturing silver and gold coin was shown in its entirety, the scenes having been officially taken at the Philadelphia Mint, through permission of the Treasury Department. The delicate, wonderful machinery which for practically every process has taken the place of human workers, is depicted working, in a manner which even the child will understand. There is no theatre that will hesitate to run this picture.

"T. Haviland Hicks, Freshman" is an entertaining subject, the plot centering about the traditional rivalry between freshmen and sophomores at college. Hicks, through outwitting his class's hereditary enemies when they attempt to haze him, and doing other things reflecting honor on the class of '21, becomes the most famous man at college.

While the critical may pick numberless flaws in the customs and personalities attributed to newspaper offices and men of the Fourth Estate, in "Gallagher," the picture telling as it does in humorous fashion of the "beat" scored by a young gamin of an office boy, will please many.

The split real "Young Salts" and "The Holy Land" was recently shown at the Rialto theatre, New York. Remarkable exhibitions of skill in all lines of athletics and in drill are given by the pupils of the Culver Military Academy in the first section, and a presentation of the Holy Land, its beggars, shepherds and olden cities, closes the reel.

"For the Freedom of the World"

(Ira M. Lowry—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"FOR the Freedom of the World" is a patriotic number dealing with the soldiers of Uncle Sam in the Canadian army before the United States entered the World War. Director Romaine Fielding and his company spent many weeks in Canada at one of the training camps to obtain desired scenes of recruiting, drilling, real mock warfare and picture mock warfare. In its entirety it is both interesting from a topical point of view and entertaining, even thrilling from a dramatic point of view. Scenes in the training camp showing the rigid physical exercises prescribed by the Canadian officers are some of the most interesting as well as inspiring shots in the picture.

The story furnished by Captain Edwin Bower Hesser is, in its vitals, very familiar; of the same weave that many of the Civil War pictures have been, and yet due to its modern setting seems to command new interest. And, conventional or not, it stands the real test—that of carrying eight reels without a wearisome moment and with many of the sort that move an audience to applaud and cheer. The story has its opening in Canada and then shifts to the battle fields of Europe, where the tale of love, heroism and villainy is worked out to the expected happy ending. There are flaws in its construction, but in a patriotic picture with moments of suspense that eclipse anachronisms, does it matter that a few turns are not handled after most improved and shipshape style? War has a number of flaws, so a picture dealing with it is quite likely to take after it.

Mr. Fielding in his direction is a little bit old style and exaggerated in a place or two. There are no men that sneer at soldiering these days—even the most wicked villains. It is rather crude when the director in his part of the heavy snickers and jeers at the recruits. But then, Mr. Fielding's forte was always melodrama and we can forgive him if he can't get away from its impossible phases. His battle stuff, done at night with an army of lights and star shells, much smoke and only an handful of men is effective in its own way—a great deal more effective than the usual picture warfare, while the few trench shots and the crawling out underneath and through the barbed wire entanglements is most realistic.

E. K. Lincoln makes a fine figure of the American who joins the Canadian army. He is natural, capable, and handles his big scenes in the latter part of the picture commendably. Barbara Castleton as heroine and Mr. Fielding as heavy, complete the trio, while the Canadian regiment which partook deserves many thanks for its services.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mr. Lincoln takes the part of a citizen of the United States residing in Canada. He enlists in the American contingent of the Canadian army. He meets a Canadian girl (Barbara Castleton) when she is attacked by a drunkard. This man (Romaine Fielding) is tried, convicted, and given the choice of going to jail or enlisting. He chooses the latter. Before leaving for the front the American and the girl are married. After a while the young wife, longing for a sight of her husband, goes to London and crosses the Channel with a Red Cross contingent which she has joined without permission. She is moved to the front near her husband. The villainous Canadian who has been made a lieutenant as reward for a deed of heroism which was not his, spies her and maneuvres to bring husband and wife together in the officers' quarters. They are discovered. The penalty for a wife visiting her husband is death for both. The husband in desperation shoots her and then asks that he may end his life by carrying out a perilous mission. The commander consents. The American performs his duty, falls on the field, but is rescued by the Canadian who is given this one more chance to redeem himself. Recovering, the American receives a pardon and is restored to his wife, who has recovered from the wound inflicted by her husband.

"Rasputin, the Black Monk"

(Brady-World Film—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S version of the causes that led to the downfall of Russian autocracy as pictured in the seven reels forming "Rasputin, the Black Monk," is a timely and interesting piece of fictionized history. It follows the career of Rasputin, the Black Monk, from the time he first realized his power over the multitude until he meets death after holding the position of the Czar's confidential adviser for a number of years. Montagu Love in his characterization of the title part gives a dominating performance. His physique and his remarkable ability at make-up, as well as his many times proven dramatic sense, stand him in good stead in portraying the role of the wicked Black Monk, so largely responsible for the final downfall of the Czar.

E. Richard Schayer, who prepared the story of "Rasputin," conceived a number of fictitious characters and wove around them, together with Rasputin and the Czar, an entertaining plot that might easily pass as history. The meteoric rise of the mock Monk from peasant to the most powerful position in the entire Russian empire contains a number of dramatic situations interwoven with actual facts that make for above-the-average entertainment. A large supporting cast appears headed by Julian Dean, June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley and completed by Henry Hull, who carries the part of Alexander Kerensky, appearing only in one scene, and renders valuable assistance to Mr. Love, who can easily be termed the lead.

Mr. Ashley served also as director, but his work in this capacity never approaches in merit his portrayal of the peasant Possibly Mr. Ashley was working on a time schedule and this being the case, one can readily forgive, though not overlook, the somewhat slipshod direction. The settings are below the average and the placement of the camera seems to have been left to no one but a cameraman who was as pushed for time as the director. Art and "Rasputin, the Black Monk" are things apart and yet police reserves were needed when it opened at the Park theatre, New York, a fact which is a box office satement in itself.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

By betraying a band of revolutionists, headed by Rodin (Arthur Ashley), Rasputin (Montagu Love) is given a position of political prominence and soon after gains entrance into the Czar's household by curing the infant Czarewitch. He is largely responsible for many of the autocratic orders of the Czar (Hubert Wilkie). Rodin's wife (June Elvidge) and daughter (Lillian Cook) are members of a band of revolutionists who meet in Petrograd. The daughter, Ilda, makes an attempt on the life of the despot, Rasputin, but is captured. Prince Felix (Irving Cummings), whose wife (Pinna Nesbit) has been insulted by Rasputin, lures the monk to his home by a trick and forces him to release Ilda. He is about to let Rasputin depart when Rodin, escaped from prison, breaks into the room and shoots the betrayer. With his death, the Czar loses all confidence and shortly afterwards signs the abdication.

Florence Beresford, Charles Crompton, Frank Beamish, Joseph Granby, Robert Fisher and Edward Elkas have parts of more or less prominence.

"The Bond of Fear"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALTHOUGH "The Bond of Fear" is rather long drawn out for absolute enjoyment in the way of action, its greater handicap lies in the character of Judge McClure, an extremely unrealistic person. This fellow believes he has killed his brother. Wandering in the desert he encounters a girl. In delirium he imparts his secret to her. She trusts and loves him just the same and tells him that she is also accused of a crime. He accepts her love and, we are led to believe, returns it. But then when he discovers himself innocent he plans to turn his one and only friend over to the sheriff. Rather an unnatural proceeding that, even though the judge did think more of the law than anything else in his court room world.

The story was written by Edith Kennedy. The unreal principal is its most formidable fault, its excess footage another and the rather free manner in which Miss Kennedy has juggled with death rumors in the latter reel in order to bring it to a conclusion still another. There is some good action at the outset and the opening events hold out promise of a good picture all around, yet the law-sodden judge refuses to take a sincere outlook on things and so no point is gained except the fact that the bred-in-the-bone instincts of a man refused to be changed even through sympathy and love. And this is, after all, false. If not false, at least all against public taste.

Melbourne McDowell struggles somewhat stiffly with the part of Judge McClure. Belle Bennett makes a sympathetic heroine and Roy Stuart a rugged hero, who, however, does little. Jack Conway produced. There is some excellent desert stuff, including a sandstorm effect, while the escape of hero and heroine from the posse possesses a real thrill.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Judge McClure (Melbourne McDowell) is a fanatic in administering the law to the letter. This leads him into a quarrel with his younger brother (George Webb) over his allowance. In self-defense the Judge strikes the other man and after a hasty inspection believes he has killed him. He takes to flight and lands in a western town on the edge of the desert. Fearing at the sight of new faces, he employs a guide Cal Nelson (Roy Stuart), and journeys out onto the desert. They meet Mary Jackson (Belle Bennett), who has fled from a desert cabin wherein lies a dead man. While delirious the Judge speaks his secret and Mary overhears. Loving him just the same, she makes an effort to relieve his anxiety by telling him that she too is responsible for a crime. When a town is reached, the Judge discovers that his brother is still alive from a newspaper. This changes his whole attitude. He tells Mary that he plans giving her over to the sheriff. Cal rescues her and the two escape. The Judge discovering that the paper was an old one, hears that his brother is really dead (when after all he is really alive) and he runs to the desert to perish in a sandstorm. Mary's only crime is that she is the daughter of a bandit, so Cal and she are happy together in the final fadeout.

"The Woman Beneath"

(World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

WILLARD MACK is responsible for the story of "The Woman Beneath," which succeeds in bringing in a large number of very familiar incidents of the "society" melodrama. The plot itself is never convincing and though the turns of the story sometimes bring a thrill of surprise, one is convinced from the first of the certain ending. Ethel Clayton is the star and her charming screen presence and her sympathetic interpretation is going to be responsible for the success that this picture has. Miss Clayton has to work against great handicap to make her role realistic, but she herself succeeds, and while she is on the screen the spectators will be thoroughly interested. Curtis Cooksey, who has the hero's role, is always artificial. However, the part he has is one that will never win the sympathy of an audience, and no one would have condemned the wife if she had left him and never have returned. In short, the appeal of this picture is going to be to those who like the old-fashioned melodrama set in "high society" surroundings.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mrs. Fairchild (Isabelle Berwin), who is described as clinging to the fringe of society, is determined that her daughter Betty (Ethel Clayton) shall marry a fortune and has set upon Rupert Brantley (Craufurd Kent), though it is made very plain that Brantley does not intend to marry anyone. In the meantime Tom Connelly (Curtis Cooksey) has made a great gold discovery in the West, but his happiness is marred because of the betrayal of his sister, who returns home just as he has left for New York, to die without revealing her betrayer. Connelly is disgusted with everything in the East except Betty and falls in love with her. They marry, though she tells him flat that she cares nothing for him. They move to a mansion and the wife continues her butterfly life, seeing Crandall especially often. Reading in a newspaper of a millionaire who committed suicide when he lost his fortune and was deserted by his wife, Connelly frames up a similar story, believing that his wife cares only for his money and will get a divorce. But this she fails to do and herself picks out a Harlem flat and moves into it and then goes after her husband. Still Crandall pursues her though she is indignant now at his attentions. In the meantime Connelly's mother has discovered a letter from and a picture of her daughter's betrayer and sends them to her son. The wife opens them by mistake and recognizing the man as Crandall she goes to his apartments to warn him to prevent her husband becoming a murderer as she knows Crandall will kill the villain. However Connelly follows her to the apartment and accuses his wife as the sweetheart of Crandall, and Betty, to save her husband from becoming a murderer, admits the relation. Tom leaves and in the struggle between Crandall and Betty the man seizes and destroys the photograph and letters and then defies her to prove the charge. Betty returns to her home and finally persuades her husband to go with her to Crandall's apartment and to repeat the words, "My wife has told me everything and I will kill you if I ever see you again." Crandall flees the country and in their apartment Betty shows her husband his mother's letter and the envelope in which it came and then tells her story. Reunion and happiness follow.

"Behind the Mask"

(Art Dramas—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

CHARLES T. DAZEY, author of "In Old Kentucky," has certainly cut another notch in his gun-stock of successes with "Behind the Mask," his latest, now being released by Robert Blaché through Art Dramas. The theme is a live one and abounds in tense situations and some thrills of a melodramatic nature. The picture is one that should meet with favor.

The author has woven a pretty story around a girl who seeks a novel mode of revenge against the man, who she learns not only financially ruined her father, but also killed him.

The whole picture is well staged, the locations nicely selected. It reflects credit on Mme. Alice Blaché, who directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Stanton (Charles Dungan) has been ruined financially by Mark Harrold (Kirke Brown), and when the former learns of Harrold's duplicity, he seeks an explanation, the result of which is Stanton's death. Margaret Stanton (Catherine Calvert), the daughter, now realizes for the first time that not only is she penniless, but her father left several unsatisfied accounts, which she determines to pay. At the same time she learns from Larrabee (Charles Holton), Harrold's private secretary, now discharged, that Harrold was responsible for her father's ruin. She therefore takes a position as social secretary to Harrold's daughter Helen (Flora Nason), who has social ambitions and intends marrying Lord Strathmore (Richard Tucker) to attain her end. Margaret realizes that the most powerful blow she can strike the family is to win His Lordship, thus depriving Helen of the title and position she craves, and further humiliating her before society.

She gradualy wins Strathmore's attention, and one day, while wandering in the mountains with him, contrives to lose the path, so they are forced to spend the night alone. Strathmore, rather than have her compromised, offers to marry her the next morning, and she accepts gladly. Later, however, she tells him she does not love him, and leaves him, fleeing to the south. After her child is born she is stricken by an illness which leaves her blind. Strathmore, after a weary search, finds her and seeing her state, does not disclose his identity. On account of her blindness his deception is made possible and he helps her financially by pretending to be an old friend of her father's. An operation restores her sight, and she sees for the first time that her benefactor is the man she deceived. A reconcilation takes place, and the two start their marriage again on a basis of love and trust.

"The Mysterious Mr. Tiller"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A CORKING good detective story is "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," written and prepared for the screen by Elliot J. Clawson. Mr. Clawson is one of the few authors who can boast a complete surprise ending to his credit by reason of this, his latest effort. He has made use of the remarkable ability of Rupert Julian, leading man as well as director, who is able to contort his face so that he appears as a different person. Calling upon Mr. Julian to employ his ability in this line in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" and by use of a popular trick in play and picture writing, Mr. Clawson has evolved a screen story that is at once mystifying and intensely interesting.

The plot concerns crooks and more crooks—supposedly. But these lattern turn out to be detectives when the plot begins to clear. This practice has been employed by several of Broadway's foremost playwrights in the past and it seems an ideal piece of scenario construction. When Clara Hawthorne is revealed in all her glory as a detective it comes as a big surprise. When the Mr. Tiller of the title discloses himself first as the misshapen leader of Mordant's gang of thieves and later as a member of the secret service there are going to be a good many gasps of amazement. Indeed this number of Bluebird's is a cracker-jack detective-mystery-melodrama, with little touches of romance and comedy to balance it.

Mr. Julian in his capacity of director has handled the many twists and incident complications of the plot with fine effect. His settings are appropriate, his scenes well chosen. Ruth Clifford, Frank Brownlee and Wedgewood Nowell serve to the general good of the picture in parts of importance.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Prentice Tiller (Rupert Julian) has a love of adventure that is mystifying. One night he encounters Clara Hawthorne (Ruth Clifford) in a position that almost compromises her before the law. She employs him as a dupe in order that certain members of her "gang" may escape the police. Later he meets her again at a reception. Pitt (Wedgwood Nowell), a detective, and Mordant (Frank Brownlee), a crook, are also at the reception, the latter bent on securing a priceless necklace possessed by the hostess. The climax of the evening arrives when Pitt spots Tiller as the crook. He escapes with the necklace in his possession, and having employed his disguise in order to make Mordant a captive, later reveals himself as chief of the secret service. Clara, a member of the service also, has been working on the case from a different angle.

Harry Rattenberry and E. A. Warren complete the cast, contributing good characterizations in parts of minor importance.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THRILLS and romance share episode twelve, bearing the title of "The Desperate Chance," in pleasing proportions. The opening scenes disclose a fierce running fight between Pearl and Carslake atop a rapidly-moving train. Each time either of the participants approaches the edge of the car roof there will be a gasp for his or her safety and when Pearl is finally pushed off the last car by the villain, her ultimate recovery seems a thing very faint and far off. Carslake contributes a real sensation when he jumps from the train into a river and then Pearl and Tom Carlton indulge in a few scenes of the gentler sort.

Their love making is done in the same sudden and wholehearted way, as is their fighting, and as a consequence it is not without a certain element of humor that is far from unwelcome. As for the celebrated violet diamond, Carslake obtains it and still has it, from all accounts, when the number closes with Pearl fighting him, several stories above the street on a perilously narrow iron girder.

"The Boot and the Loot"

(Ham Comedy)

(Kalem-General Film—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY W. K. STEWART

IN the latest Ham Comedy, "The Boot and the Loot," director Al Santell has accomplished the task of telling a story at a rapid tempo, the "gags" and the slapstick all having a bearing on the unfolding of the plot. Ham and Bud conclude that Henry Murdock, an Italian bootblack, is making too much money and secure his stand by trading him a street-car belonging to the city. Having read that a notorious crook is wearing rubber heels which leave a peculiar mark, the bootblacks examine the feet of all their customers. A false clue leads them into a wild adventure in which a street-car, an old fashioned four-seated bicycle and several jitneys rush around, the characters finally being plunged into a sewer. Edythe Sterling, recently leading woman in the "Stingaree" series, appears in the cast. The story is the combined work of Phil Lang, Frank Howard Clark and director Al Santell and the picture should make good on any program.

"A WHIRLWIND OF WHISKERS"

This one-reel Ham offering is notable for the return of Marin Sais to comedy. Miss Sais has been appearing in Kalem series so long that many have forgotten her days with Ruth Roland, John Brennan, Marshal Neilan and other Kalem fun-makers of old. The story, by the same trio of writers who prepared "The Boot and The Loot," is simple and direct as special stress has been placed on the whirlwind action by Director Santell. Ham and Bud, pursued by a cop, climb a fire-escape and enter the deserted office of Taik A. Look, detective. The chief of police calls and mistaking the comedians for detectives commissions them to apprehend a notorious, bewhiskered counterfeiter. The sleuthing of Ham and Bud takes them to a barbershop where complications arise, leading to a chase over the roofs of high buildings. Marin Sais as the manicurist, R. E. Bradbury as the barbershop proprietor, Henry Murdock as a darky porter and Edward Clisbee as the counterfeiter all add to the special kind of fun for which Ham and Bud are noted.

"The Hostage"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BESIDES presenting a war drama in which suspense is raised to the nth degree this picture,, written by Beulah Marie Dix, presents a wonderful panorama of the emotions of peoples of fighting countries during hostilities. The opposing factions are mythical, the hero comes from one side, the heroine from the other, and as a consequence a neutral attitude is preserved in the spectator. The manner in which the author has brought out the attitude of one country toward the other, the feeling of hatred, of distrust, which exists in both countries is extremely powerful and provides plenty of food for mental digestion. Miss Dix has also given war in general a severe jab in the ribs. Her argument will not be interpreted as that of a pacifist—it merely makes one think, if one wants to.

Naturally all people dont like to think heavily when in a theatre chair. To these "The Hostage" will appeal directly. They won't bother to go beneath the surface. But on the top there is one of the best little romances of war time that has ever been screened. And when one stops to think of the wonderful manner in which author and adaptor have built up the suspense, he truly finds "The Hostage" way and above the majority if not the whole of its contemporary five-reelers.

Robert Thornby has given the picture an excellent production, handling the big dramatic moments with a fine sense of technique. Wallace Reid, featured, does admirable work in the role of Lieutenant Kamper and his support, from first to last, is notable for its ability.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Brigadier Kemper (C. H. Geldert), head of the army of Lowlanders who are invading the Mountaineers, meets with reversals on the field and is forced to meet the demands of the opposition. They command his retreat and take his son, the Lieutenant (Wallace Reid), as hostage. Young Kemper is held at the house of Boyadi (Noah Beery) and is surprised to find his jailor-host most gentlemanly. Boyadi's daughter (Dorothea Abril) overcomes his prejudice toward the Lieutenant when she learns that he is a gentleman and soon after their friendship ripens into love. Brigadier Kemper violates his treaty and makes a surprise attack on one of the distant strongholds of the Mountaineers, and as a consequence the Lieutenant, who has refused to violate his host's confidence in an attempt to escape, is scheduled to be executed. At the last moment the Lowlanders and the Mountaineers unite to fight against a common enemy, and so the story ends happily for the lovers.

Gertrude Short, Guy Oliver, Camille Ankewitch, George L. Spaulding, Lillian Leighton and Lucien Littlefield complete the cast.

"Under False Colors"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE fundamental idea of "Under False Colors" is so conventional that even the more or less original dressing provided it by Lloyd Lonergan fails to conceal its obviousness. A certain twist given the ending is a surprise, to be sure, but considered as a whole it can not measure up to the high standard attained by the greater portion of Pathe's features. And yet we have very often seen just such a plot as contained here register with a certainty that could never be doubted and so it is only reasonable to assume that, given the very good treatment accorded it in this picture, it will register even again.

Frederick Warde brings a certain dignity to the part of John Colton, financier, that is often missed in like characterizations contributed by actors of lesser note. Jeanne Eagels is an engaging heroine and Robert Vaughn a moderate hero. Emile Chautard has given the story a production that measures well up to the rather moderate style always maintained in Thanhouser productions.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In Russia, Jack Colton (Robert Vaughn) negotiating a loan with the government is of service to Countess Olga (Jeanne Eagels), a revolutionist, in assisting her to escape. Neither learns the other's name. Journeying to America, Olga travels with Vera Ladislaus (Anne Gregory), who is on her way to join the Colton's (Frederick Warde and Carey Hastings), Jack's parents. After a submarine attack Vera dies from exhaustion. In America Olga is urged by supporters of the cause to pose as Vera. This she does, much against her will, although working no immediate good to her party.

Mr. Colton eventually discovers the ruse, but, loving the girl, he tests her loyalty by a trick with gratifying results. It then develops that Colton himself financed the revolution in Russia and that the members of Olga's society were really working against their benefactor. Jack's romance with Olga, so abruptly begun, ends after the usual course.

"The Spindle of Life"

(Butterfly—Five Reels. Released by Universal)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE D. GOULD

THERE is a something lacking in this light story—perhaps it may be designated "photoplay character"—which places it in the ordinary class. Analyzation of plot, settings and action reveals nothing of the unusual. The play drifts along more or less smoothly, just as one can forese it will after the initial unraveling of the story. The title is ambitious, but scarcely applicable.

Just why Neva Gerber has never attained full recognition as a refreshingly natural player and star is hard to explain. In "The Spindle of Life" as Gladsome, she most pleasingly characterizes the name, as in fact she has done in all her previous work. One gets to look for her appearance, whether in rough clothes on the wind-swept beach of the fishing village or in the vestures appropriate to society life. Her work is a bright spot in the rather ordinary telling of the ordinary story of an ambitious mother, scheming adviser who uses her money and is ruined by the big Wall Street financier, who of course finally marries the daughter of the foolish social "climber."

"In the Wake of the Huns"

(Pathe—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE cameraman who obtained these views of devastated France accompanied the Allied army in its recent pursuit of the retreating Germans. He was right on the spot all the time and caught pictures of the French entering towns that for three years have been in the hands of the enemy. Nothing but waste and desolation greeted the returning victors in many centers, both large and small. Churches, residences, railroads and stations, bridges and stores have been shelled and mined, until in many places all that is left are piles of debris, bearing not the slightest resemblance to their former character.

What is most interesting in the entire three reels is the spectacle of the French reconstructing railroads and bridges, clearing the streets and patching up the buildings. The spectator gets an insight of the monstrous business of war, the experts it requires from all branches of modern business as well as its almost unbelievable horrors.

"Mountain Dew"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A STORY two-thirds comedy and very little drama is presented in "Mountain Dew," which contains the Kentucky mountains and the familiar moonshiners as background. It is somewhat coventional in conception, somewhat original in its treatment, well supplied with comedy, some of which registers and some of which fails because of repetition, but quite lacking in suspense. It is merely a moderately interesting offering, in which the romantic element is developed in a pretty way.

The boss moonshiner's daughter and the novelist from the city who is thought to be a "revenuer" are the principal characters and are ably portrayed by Margery Wilson and Charles Gunn. A colored gentleman by the name of Thomas Washington takes an equally colored part as the manservant of the novelist. How the mountaineers tolerated him is quite a mystery. He quakes at the rattle of a rattlesnake, the rustling of leaves at night and the sight of a gun. Thomas Washington is hardly a comedian and yet if restrained he might have performed the functions of one to much better effect. As it is his constant shivering of fright in every scene in which he appears becomes rather boresome.

Julien Josephsen and Monte M. Katterjohn are the authors. Thomas Heffron directed. The supporting cast contributes consistently good work.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

J. Hamilton Vance (Charles Gunn), writer, sojourns in the mountains for local color. He meets Roxie Bradley (Margery Wilson), daughter of a moonshiner (Al W. Filson), and decides to stay as school teacher. Milt Sears (Jack Richardson), also a moonshiner, believes Vance a revenue officer and takes a dislike to him. Roxie saves Vance's life by intercepting a bullet meant for the writer, and during her convalescence is taught the rudiments of learning. Lily Raines (Mary Borland), jealous of Roxie, her cousin, hunts Vance's cabin and discovers a scrap of paper upon which he has noted the means of living in the Kentucky mountains. She shows this to Bradley and Milt and straightway they suspect the stranger. They plan to take his life. Roxie warns him and before the moonshiners can get together they are married. Vance declares himself as a writer and all ends well.

Two New "King Bee" Comedies

(King Bee—Two Reels Each)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

TWO clever comedies starring Billy West which were shown for review during the week promise to bring greater popularity to that comedian. All of these comedies are directed by Arvid E. Gillstrom under the supervision of Louis Burnstein and show real effort to evolve new ideas. The same company appears in all of the stories, and a considerable part of the appeal of the pictures comes from the excellent work of Ellen Burford, leading woman among a batch of pretty girls, and Babe Hardy, who has the "heavy" roles. The comedies are elaborately staged and remind one very much of the pictures in which Charley Chaplin appears. Billy West is frankly billed as the double of the "million dollar comedian," and he gets away with the laughs in fine order.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In "The Fly Cop," which will be released Sept. 16, West has the role of a policeman who is assigned to break up a fashionable gambling house which, operating under the guise of a beauty parlor, is doing an immense speculative business among the fair sex, largely due to the protection of the chief of police (Charles Slattery). West first is sent to the gambling house as a detective and falls on the clue by accident, and then returns in uniform to find the tables of chance converted into a chapel and a revival meeting in progress. But in the end he alone effects the capture of the whole bunch.

"The Chief Cook," released Oct. 1, tells the story of the visit of a traveling theatrical company to a country hotel where the help have just struck. The star and only boarder, West, who is caught in his efforts to flee the hotel, is pressed into service as porter, bellboy, waiter and finally as cook. His love affairs with the leading woman of the company (Ellen Burford) and his pursuit by her husband (Babe Hardy) brought a bunch of laughs from the reviewers—something that is very rare. Blanche White as the slavey revealed herself as a comedienne who will bear watching as a future star. Her interpretations are strongly remindful of the work of Polly Moran.

"The Awakening of Ruth"

(Edison-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Awakening of Ruth," written by Lucien Hubbard and directed by E. H. Griffith, is a light little romance that entertains and amuses throughout its length, without ever approaching anything extraordinary in the way of action. Something of a conventional idea has been expanded into a becoming story which has received good treatment in production. Much of it transpires on and about an island and the water stuff is freely dispersed in the opening of the picture. This provides an unusually pretty setting.

Shirley Mason appears to distinct advantage in the featured part, while Donald Hall gives a sincere interpretation of the doctor. The supporting cast discloses an array of types specially well fitted to carry their respective parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Old Hoagland (Joseph Burke) has spent his lifetime digging for buried treasure on an island. His daughter Ruth (Shirley Mason) has known no other companion since childhood. When Winthrop (Donald MacClennan), society man, comes to the island, Ruth believes she has discovered love, but when he never returns, as he promised, she is greatly disappointed. One day Ruth discovers an old cave and in it two chests which she believes contains treasure. At the death of her father, she asks aid from Dr. Strong (Donald Hall) and Reverend Arbuthnot (William Hayes). She plans using the supposed treasure to establish her in the city, that she may cultivate her voice. Strong discovers the chests to contain merely wet gunpowder, but loving the girl he deprives himself to finance her while away, a fact which he keeps from her. In the city, Ruth meets with success, but discovers the worthlessness of Winthrop, returns to the island, there to learn the truth and be happy with the man she really loves.

Edward Elkas, Sally Crute and Jessie Stevens complete the cast.

Triangle to Send to Orient for Local Color

Problem in India with Its 500 Castes, Being Far Too Complex for Absent Treatment, American Companies Will Go There

TRIANGLE will send companies of players and directors to India and China for the purpose of filming plays meant to appeal to foreign patrons and bring a new type of production to Americans. Later, a company will go to Buenos Aires to produce plays of distinctly South American atmosphere.

"We want to supply not merely America and the European continent but the world," said H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation.

"Virtually all the cinema producers in this country are to-day sending films to the Orient," continued Mr. Davis. "The celluloid is proving a potent tie of friendship and understanding between the Mongolian and the Caucasian.

"There are more than six hundred motion picture theatres in China alone. The number in Japan is just as great. Virtually no film is made in either country. European manufacturers are at a standstill because of the war. The United States is supplying the market.

"In the city of Shanghai there are five motion picture theatres with an average of 700 seats. Their admission prices range from twenty-five to sixty cents according to location. Canton is another big buyer of films. Six theatres are now running there with combined seating capacity for 4200 people. Another theatre, now near completion, will accomodate 1100 patrons. The Chinaman pays well for his entertainment, but he likes a long show. One five-reel drama is not enough for him. An evening must offer him at least three hours of diversion; so the program usually consists of two long films and a couple of short comedies.

"The foreign trade has taught us that the whole world is pretty much akin. What pleases America usually pleases India and South America. Romance, adventure, tragedy and comedy are everywhere. Our foreign exhibitors invariably demand the dramas which were successes here.

"India has about 500 castes. These are distinguished sometimes by the folding of a turban, again by the color of a cloak. The local problem is too involved for our American directors. We will therefore send companies with American stars and directors to India and China for regular stock work. Later we will invade South America.

"This move of Triangle is merely in stride with the progress of the motion picture industry. It is only a decade since the days when thrills, accidents, collisions and marathon chases were the vogue. We no longer strive for miraculous 'stunts' except for comedy purposes. We have also been eliminating from our pictures all reference to creeds or religion. It is our purpose to entertain, not to preach. Yet we cannot escape the role of pedagogue entirely."

Looking for Bogus Roy W. Price

M. M. Morgan, of the New York City F. I. L. M. Club, has sent out a call for a bogus Roy W. Price, who described himself as president and treasurer of the Park Theatre Company, Newton, N. J. He said he had been manager of the Strand theatre, Easton, and a salesman for Pathe and Metro at Kansas City, Detroit and Boston.

Three checks cashed by the assistant manager of an exchange have come back marked as forgeries—two for $25 and one for $40.

The much-wanted man, who talked of starting a new house at Hackensack, is described as twenty-five years old, five feet eight, brown hair, blue eyes and with a small scar on the right cheek.

Motion Pictures to Illustrate Food Talks to Farmers

The State Defense Commission, an official body created by the Pennsylvania Legislature at its last session, is to make use of motion pictures as an adjunct to practical talks to hundreds of thousands of farmers. The object is to increase food production.

These picture talks will be given at the farmers' institutes, to be held in all parts of the state during a period to begin Nov. 13 next, and to extend, with almost daily sessions, until March 15, 1918.

Lieutenantcy for Metro Exchange Man

Another soldier boy has been taken from the ranks of the film men of the National Capital—Roscoe B. Dayton of the Metro forces has been called to the colors as a first lieutenant of engineers. The newly commissioned officer is a Lehigh graduate, a civil engineer and bridge builder.

While connected with the Metro offices at Washington, Lieutenant Dayton made a very large number of friends, all of whom wish him success.

Division of Labor in Triangle's Cleveland Office

Triangle is offering such an extensive assortment of wares in Cleveland that it has been decided to divide the goods up among the men.

Hereafter Harry Decker will have the big time Paralta stuff, Walter Brandt takes the Hart and Fairbanks re-issues along with the Keystones comedies, and F. M. Sultzbaugh takes what's left.

Gaumont Has Government's New Standardized Aeroplane

Yankee ingenuity has at last perfected an engine for airplanes which is far superior to any aero-motor which has been invented prior to this time. This engine meets all requirements at any altitude.

Under the direction of the Aircraft Production Board, the greatest engineers of this country, working together since war was declared, have pooled their trade secrets and developed a motor which is not only the fastest and most reliable known, but is of such a type that the different parts can be manufactured in various factories throughout the country and assembled when the entire flying machine is put together.

Secretary Baker proclaims this as probably the greatest achievement of the war.

The Gaumont Company was fortunate in being able to photograph the testing of this wonderful engine on Pike's Peak, nearly three miles above sea level, and these pictures will appear first in Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 142 when it is released Sept. 19 .

Government Gets Million from Amusements in Year

The United States Government received an income during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1917, from theatres, museums and concert halls of $1,027,927.63, an increase over the same twelve months of the preceding fiscal year of $13,016.35, the total of collections then being $1,014,911.28, according to the preliminary report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue Osborn, which has just been issued.

The receipts for the fiscal year 1917 represent the largest collections in the history of the Internal Revenue Bureau, according to Commissioner Osborn. This can be seen from the fact that the aggregate of collections totalled $809,393,640.44, as against $512,723,287.77 during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916. The latter amount had held the record as being the largest collected up to the beginning of the fiscal year 1917.

The report states that the cost of collecting the internal revenue for the fiscal year was approximately $9.53 per one thousand dollars, or 95 per cent., which is the lowest annual cost of the Internal Revenue Bureau, notwithstanding the fact that expenses in supervising non-revenue producing laws, such as the anti-narcotic and cotton-futures acts and the supervision of tax-free alcohol were incurred. The cost of collection the previous year, in which the largest sum was collected prior to the fiscal year 1917, was $14.04 per one thousand dollars, or 1.40 per cent. The average cost of collection since the establishment of the Internal Revenue Bureau is $23.21 per one thousand dollars, or 2.32 per cent.

Clara Kimball Young to Film Play in Porto Rico

Clara Kimball Young, who has just completed her production of "Magda," the first release by her own organization which she owns and controls, under the management of Harry I. Garson, has started filming "Shirley Kaye" at the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle.

Joseph Kaufman, who directed "Broadway Jones," "The Traveling Salesman," and many other notable successes, will direct Miss Young in this, her second production, which will be released some time in October.

"Magda," "Shirley Kaye," and "The Marionettes" will be the only three pictures Miss Young will do in the East, as she contemplates a production of "The Savage Woman" as her fourth release. Immediately after the holidays Miss Young will take her entire company to Porto Rico. states on a state rights basis. Her program of production is complete and her remaining with me is certain."

Horsley Will Not Release Mary MacLaren

David Horsley denies there is any possibility of Mary MacLaren returning to Universal, with which company the star recently had a tussle in court. He says:

"My contract with Mary MacLaren is not for sale at any price. I have not discussed the probability of such an absurd proposal either directly or indirectly with anyone. Mary MacLaren is increasing in value through popularity created by her work in my pictures."

Many Bookings Follow Showing of "Polly of the Circus"

IN the week following the first pre-release showing of "Polly of the Circus," Goldwyn production, at the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theatre, in Chicago, the company has signed contracts for all Goldwyn pictures in many cities. The rush of bookings, Goldwyn says, is without parallel. Among the contracts closed in important cities during the week were:

Rialto theatre, Brockton, Mass.; Alhambra theatre, Utica, N. Y.; Strand theatre, Chicago; West End theatre, Brooklyn; Regent theatre, Garden theatre, Paterson, N. J.; Hamilton theatre, Park theatre, Philadelphia; Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, Pa.; Jefferson theatre, St. Augustine, Fla.; Majestic theatre, Springfield, O.; Plaza theatre, Sioux City, Ia.; Regent theatre, Rochester, N. Y.; Regent theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.; Grand theatre, Reno, Nav.; Ascher Brothers' chain of theatres in Chicago, including Cosmopolitan, Oakland, Frolic, Terminal, Columbus, Milford, Adelphi, Court, Metropolitan, Lakeside, Calo and Chateau.

The reviews of the production printed in the Chicago newspapers last Tuesday, were promptly telegraphed in their entirety to every Goldwyn office in North America.

Throughout the week this Goldwyn picture has played to capacity business in Chicago. Other exhibitors throughout the territory, convinced still further of the drawing power of Goldwyn productions, hurriedly closed contracts for the company's entire annual output.

One week to a day from the release of its first big production, "Polly of the Circus," by Margaret Mayo, and starring Mae Marsh, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, announces that exhibitor interest is at the highest pitch attained since the first announcement of the company—if signed contracts may be counted as conclusive evidence.

World Rights to Bernstein Pictures Bought by Blumenthal

THE Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has bought the world rights to the Isadore Bernstein productions, "Loyalty" and "Humility," excepting the United States and Canada, and are at present negotiating for the sale of the entire territory. Ben Blumenthal, the president of the organization, has had years of experience in Europe with the foreign market, and is considered a keen judge of picture sales possibilities in the business. He has taken the rights to these pictures feeling that they are assured of immediate success in the foreign field.

"We have bought these pictures," he said, in a recent interview in his office, "because they have a moral value and purpose, and although like all American-made pictures, they have the 'happy ending,' their structure and lesson cannot but appeal to the European audiences. I am glad to see that the American producer is finding courage enough to teach a definite moral lesson, undisguised, while possessing the ability to do it interestingly and convincingly. The pictures are well taken and well acted, and filled with thrills from beginning to end. The foreign markets are demanding the American product at present, and we look confidently toward a brilliant future for these new releases.

"I feel that 'Loyalty' will present a great appeal to the foreign audience. It is the powerful story of a man conquering a great weakness with the help of a woman. It is an arraignment of snobbery and the sham of false social position, which will not let itself see the real things that count in life. Under the pressure of the present crisis, people are daily realizing the futility and danger of this false attitude, and the picture will help to bring home the lesson more forcibly perhaps than any other medium.

Ohio Board Objects to Bathing-Girls—No Stockings

That staid and proper body, the Ohio board of censors, takes exceptions to bathing pictures taken in Cleveland by the Argus Company for the Plain Dealer's Magazine.

A girls' swimming contest was caught in the making, but the girls didn't wear shoes or stockings or other impedimenta that make swimming a dangerous rather than a healthful sport. The skyline of Cleveland from the city's breakwater was peaceful enough to meet the necessary requirements of the censors, and beautiful enough to please the thousands who watch for the magazine every week.

Bringing Serial Profits Home

lobby or before your house. Don't plaster them all about at the expense of your current offering. There was never any serial in the world for which you should kill business five days in the week for the benefit of breaking box office records the other two days.

The front of the house is not the place to center emphasis on a picture weeks in advance. You have plenty of other resources, some of which we have already outlined to you.

But when you do start the serial, make the front of the house a smashing advertisement on the days of showing the serials. Don't be content with getting a single banner bearing the name of the star and the picture and striking it across the front of your house on every Tuesday that you show an episode. Of course, you want to keep the name of the serial prominently before the public, but you want to do more and contribute some reason why the public should see that particular episode.

Don't conclude that the public as a whole knows that you are showing a certain serial every Tuesday. In exploitation, don't figure on what you think that some one already knows. Base your work on the idea that you have to sell that particular episode of the picture on that particular day.

Try to use some particular point in the current episode for your display in front of the house. Of course stunts are the great drawing card of most serials and you will find it easy to emphasize some particular feat of the star or some peril that she undergoes, if you will keep before you the synopsis of the story and study it yourself. How can you expect the public to keep interested in a story when you don't yourself keep interested enough to tell your prospective patrons why they should come to your house?

Suppose you were a grocer and there had been a big advertising campaign for a particular brand of soup and you did a big business on it. And then the advertising being done by the makers stopped. Would you hide the soup you had away under the counter and expect every patron to come in and ask for it? If you do the sheriff will be soon selling your soup, your cheese and your scales to the highest bidder.

Keep driving a serial home every week. Try this on one and you will find that instead of thinking about cancelling because of lack of interest you will find business better on the last episode than it was on the first.

And you will find a remarkable effect on your next serial. You will find that you have been attracting the attention of the whole community and that those who missed the current serial will conclude, from your brand of exploitation, that they cannot afford to miss another.

Next week, in connection with another serial, we will discuss methods of keeping up the interest and some ideas that have been used with success.

Kaplan Finds Distributor for Russian Films

Arrangements Nearly Complete for Releasing One Imported Feature Each Week—Preparations for Printing Under Way

ONE of the most important distributing organizations in the motion picture industry is preparing to increase its organization to handle the Russian Art Film Corporation's repertory on the basis of one release a week. As this paper goes to press the negotiations between the company and N. S. Kaplan, who brought the pictures from Moscow, may have been completed.

Preparations of printing and heralds is well under way and a country-wide advertising campaign is being devised.

Nearly a year's service is now in the vaults in New York City. A dozen pictures, enough to last into the new year, could be ready in two weeks. Four of them could be released tomorrow. These are "The Painted Doll," "Pride," "The Dagger Woman" and "My Conscience," all said to be based on stories full of tense dramatic action and requiring the superlative artistry of the Russian stage and screen for proper portrayal.

Ivan Mozukin, Russia's foremost actor, will be starred in three of these four dramas. Prominent women stars of the new republics, who are expected to duplicate their fame here, are Natalia Lesienko, Tanya Fetner and Olga Zovska.

"The task which we are about to complete," said Mr. Kaplan, "has been a tremendous one. I fear that I never would have left Moscow and made the attempt to reveal Russia's message to America had I known the difficulties that were to be overcome before the foreign stars could obtain even a hearing in the United States. But thanks to good advice and loyal and industrious associates, sufficient productions have been selected to show what we have. There will be no difficulty in maintaining the service in America once it is started. A dozen completed negatives are now on the way from Moscow and more will arrive from time to time. Russia does not permit war to interfere with art."

Ticket Taker Saves Patrons from Mad Dog Scare

Ticket takers in motion picture theatres can be of a little more use than mere ticket takers. Jule Cox, a ticket taker at the Covent Garden theatre, on North Clark Street, Chicago, proved this to be a fact last week when he, at much danger to himself, saved patrons in the theatre from the danger of a mad dog that entered the lobby.

The lobby was packed with people waiting for a second show when the dog, growling and slavering, entered the theatre from the pavement. He was snapping at those nearest him and a panic was threatening, when Cox deserted his stand at the door and heaved the heavy sheet iron ticket box at the dog. It knocked the animal senseless. A policeman's revolver did the rest. Jules resumed his ticket chopping.

One Projection Room with Some Fresh Air

Renowned Pictures Corporation, located on the fourth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, has opened a new and up-to-the-minute projection room in their suite of offices.

No effort has been spared to make an improvement over the projection rooms now being used in the trade. The result is a comfortable and handsomely furnished projection room, where pictures can be screened under the most ideal conditions.

Most projection rooms are dependent upon fans for proper ventilation, but the Renowned Pictures Corporation's projection room has fresh air directly from the windows opening into it, with the result that no matter what weather conditions prevail, fresh air circulates throughout the room.

The projection room is at the disposal of the trade; perfect projection by a competent operator is assured.

Earle Williams Offered Get-Rich-Quick Job

A Brooklyn woman, supposed to be either a swindler or untenanted in the upper story, asked Earl Williams, Vitagraph star, to enter into a weird get-rich-quick scheme. She proposed he should dance with society women each night in a big hotel, telling them he was about to have a birthday.

All the money and presents the society women were expected to give him for birthday presents he was to turn over to his "benefactress," she to give him a salary of $100 a day.

Williams asked what he could do with all the money he would earn and she answered he could get a lot of publicity by donating it to the Red Cross, through her.

Instead of entering into the plan the actor hired a private detective who ascertained without difficulty that the woman had a bad record. But she disappeared before they could turn her over to the police. She has approached other actors also.

President Smith Renames Three Girl Stars

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has changed the names of three of his stars. Miriam Fouche will be Miriam Miles, Alice Rodier will be Alice Terry, and Agnes Eyre will be Agnes Ayres. Mr. Smith explained:

"These girls, beautiful and young, had the wrong kind of names for the screen. Miriam Fouche (pronounced Foo-shay), Alice Rodier (pronounced Ro-de-ay), and Agnes Eyre (pronounced Ire) are all beautiful names if properly pronounced, but not frequently would they be pronounced properly."

Fall Before Camera Evil Omen for a Captain

Captain Joseph W. Mattes, of the Second Illinois Field Artillery, who was killed in the mutiny at Houston, was filmed for Essanay just before he left for Texas.

One of the scenes in "The Man Who Was Afraid" called for Captain Mattes and his battery to charge to the summit of a hillock for better gun positions. As the captain led his men in the charge, his sword in the air and riding at breakneck speed, his horse stumbled, hurling him headlong to the ground. The camera was grinding on the action and filmed the fall very clearly and realistically.

Captain Mattes was present when the battle scenes were given a trial run at the Essanay Studios. When he saw himself, during the thick of the fight, suddenly drop to the ground, he exclaimed:

"Gad, but that's an evil omen for me."

Kansas Women Campaign for Clean Pictures

Plans for a state-wide campaign for cleaner motion pictures were discussed at Lansing, Kansas, during the past week by Mrs. J. K. Codding, president of the Kansas State Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations; Mrs. E. R. Tenney, president of the Kansas City, Kan., Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations; Mrs. J. L. Beggs, chairman of the committee for better films of the State Parent-Teacher Federation, and Mrs. Carl F. White, vice-chairman.

As the result of a full-day conference it has been determined to endeavor to interest every parent-teacher association in the state in a plan to establish "family nights" at the moving picture houses. The scheme yet is to be developed from its embryonic stage.

The family night idea, if it is developed in accordance with the plans of the committee, will afford an opportunity for the parents to be reasonably sure that that which is thrown on the screen will not be harmful to the child's morals. A system will be devised whereby a list of clean films will be provided for these family night programs.

New Branch Manager Named by Mutual

The Mutual Film Corporation has appointed J. G. Connor, formerly a salesman, as temporary manager of the Indianapolis branch office.

Big Advertising by Houses Booking Pathe's Pictures

PATHE has booked the new edition of "Les Miserables," by Victor Hugo, an eight-reel picture directed by Albert Capellani, at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, and also with the Sievers interests at St. Louis.

S. Barrett McCormick, manager of the Circle theatre, will advertise the picture as he did "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre." He then used 11,642 agate lines in city newspapers, 22,400 in country papers, 1,000 one-sheets, 1,200 sheets on billboards, 700 street railway cards, 25 24-sheet boards, 2,500 heralds, besides electric signs and flags.

Pathe is distributing "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" with newspaper co-operation in some cities. In Cincinnati the Post used it for raising money for the Colonel of the First regiment and for the benefit of the Cincinnati boys under arms. A check representing the profits was handed to Colonel Fred Galbraith, while a camera was snapped and a "still" made. This was published in the paper.

In Pittsburgh, Pathe's office has signed a contract with the Pittsburgh Press for the use of "The Tanks" for the week commencing August 27, at a very high rental. The Press is an evening paper which has a circulation of about 130,000 and is owned by very wealthy interests. It expects to spend about $4,000 exclusive of the rental of the film, putting over the picture at the Duquesne theatre, a big legitimate house.

They will spend about $2,500 in advertising in all the local dailies. They will send a representative to Washington to invite Miss Wilson, the President's daughter, Miss Jeannette Rankin and a number of other notables. The proceeds over the expenses will be devoted to the Regimental Relief Fund which the Press is raising.

Goldwyn's Maxine Elliott Publicity Covers Country

Goldwyn has set a new mark in the press exploitation of Maxine Elliott's debut on the screen in "Eternal Magdalene." The company has divided the American territory in four divisions and placed a special publicity man in each division.

Thomas E. Bourke, a Chicago newspaperman, has begun this campaign in Detroit and will cover Cleveland, Cincinnati, Minneapolis, Chicago, Omaha, Des Moines and all intervening territory between Pittsburg and Denver.

H. S. Lavner has already been dispatched to New England and opens the Goldwyn campaign in Boston. He will cover all cities of New England and New York State and all intervening territory in the Northesn states west to Pittsburg.

Special men have been assigned to the territory from Denver to the Pacific Coats and will inaugurate a similar promotion campaign in every large city where there is a Goldwyn customer, and another pair of men are at work in all large Southern cities.

Newspaper Laudation of Taylor Holmes' Film

From the newspaper notices of Taylor Holmes's initial bow to screenland in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," Essanay has selected the following:

New York Tribune—"There was no dissenting voice. His success is assured and it is probable that, if he chooses, he can make all the screen comedians looks to their laurels."

New York American—"'Efficiency Edgar's Courtship's couldn't, perhaps, be billed as the 'greatest love story ever told,' but certainly it is the funniest."

Chicago Herald—"Neither the star nor the picture needed an ornate background of music or other trimming, for both came up to specifications with a bang."

Chicago Evening Post—"In the language of the street, Taylor Holmes's first venture into filmland is a 'scream.'"

It is announced that Holmes will be starred in a number of Essanay pictures.

Competition Among Omaha Houses for Pathe Pictures

When the Empress, big downtown first-run house in Omaha, Neb., started using Gold Rooster releases from the Pathe Exchange in Omaha, it led to a chain of big theatres in the Omaha territory using the Gold Roosters.

F. A. Eager, president and general manager of the Acme Amustment Co., which controls and operates most of the theatres in Lincoln, Neb., has signed a contract with Manager C. E. Holah, of the Omaha Pathe office for Gold Roosters for the Lyric, Lincoln, for forty weeks. Mr. Eager is also one of the first to book the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Seven Pearls." He will show it at the Orpheum, Lincoln, in connection with vaudeville. The Wonderland theatre, another of Mr. Eager's houses, is showing "The Fatal Ring," and across the street the Strand, a competing theatre, is showing "The Neglected Wife." The Wonderland is also playing two reels of the Luke comedies and the Pathe cartoons are being shown in the Strand.

The Strand at Sioux City has contracted for the Gold Rooster pictures. The Pathe News Service is now being shown in three first-run theatres in Omaha, two first-run houses in Lincoln and three in Sioux City, the Plaze, Royal and Princess, just booked this week. The Strand is now showing from two to three Pathe features each week, repeating on many, in order to catch up to the schedule.

"Free" Tickets from Stores Unlawful in Winnipeg

Several motion picture exhibitors in Winnipeg who have been issuing free tickets for their shows to retailers, who in turn distribute them amongst customers, are violating the criminal code, Acting Police Chief C. H. Newton has announced.

The storekeepers who distribute the tickets and the customers who receive them are equally guilty of a breach of the law. The sections of the law alleged to be violated relate to trading stamps. A penalty of one year's imprisonment or a fine not exceeding $500 is provided.

This Summer Record-Breaker in Omaha, Neb.

Symposium of Theatre Owners Proves All Are Enjoying Best Business Ever in Hot Weather—They Are Not Using Any Junk

THIS season is bringing the best summer motion picture business ever experienced in Iowa, Nebraska or the Dakotas. Cool weather until late in the spring, with only a few hot days until August 1, assured such good business that a very small percentage of the usual number of theatres closed for the summer.

"In the face of the summer season we raised the price of admission to the Empress," said Wilfred Ledoux, leading Omaha exhibitor. "And our business has been bigger since we increased the price than it was before. Of course we are giving a better show and we have spent considerable in improving the comforts of the theatre."

"Business this summer is wonderful," said R. D. Shirley of the Muse, big Omaha house. "Barring a few hot days, business has been as good as at any season in the year. Business is 100 per cent. better at the Muse than it was last summer."

"The Strand theatre crowds have on a very few days showed the effects of the summer weather," said H. M. Thomas. "All the other days have been as large or larger than usual. 'The Barrier' was a big success, in spite of the fact that it is over eight reels long and was at the Strand during the hottest weather. I am looking forward, however, to even better business this fall. I have booked Paramounts for September and I booked the Goldwyn pictures after seeing them in Chicago."

Barney Gilensky, exhibitor at the Strand, Council Bluffs, Iowa, planned early in the season to close for the hot months. But he remained open, and last week he showed "The Barrier" to crowds. He will remain open all summer.

Louis Markus reports big crowds at the Majestic in Council Bluffs. Showing "The Highway of Hope," just an ordinary picture, the Majestic neared a record the other night.

"Exhibitors I meet from over the state say business is good," said William Roper, proprietor of the Roper theatre in Council Bluffs. "Early in the season I heard more kicks about bad business than I hear now."

"Serials have not let up during the summer," announces Manager C. E. Holah, of the Pathe exchange in Omaha. He introduced Mrs. Doestle of the Ideal theatre, Omaha, who said two of her biggest nights recently have been with "The Neglected Wife" and "The Fatal Ring."

"We are showing 'The Fatal Ring' in sixteen out of twenty-six houses in Omaha," announced Mr. Holah. "This summer we have followed the policy of releasing good stuff even during the hottest weeks, and not trying to unload a bunch of junk just because it is summer. To my mind the time has passed when exchanges can work off their junk during the summer. Then is when the exhibitor needs to fight for the business."

Big Advance Booking for Vita's "The Fighting Trail"

BOOKINGS for the Vitagraph outdoor serial, "The Fighting Trail," according to the announcement, are far in excess of those obtained by any serial released by Vitagraph so far before release date.

Albert E. Smith was in California during the making of a large part of the "The Fighting Trail," and he was so impressed with it that immediately upon his return from the West some months ago, he inaugurated a publicity campaign greater than anything that Vitagraph had ever done before.

In addition to liberal use of advertising space, the Vitagraph Company posted all over the country in towns from 10,000 and up, splendid 24-sheet stands advertising the serial.

The boards carried a plain announcement of "The Fighting Trail," and, necessarily, did not mention any theatre, the result being that hundreds of letters were received by the Vitagraph Company from fans asking questions about the big picture. The reply was given that "The Fighting Trail" was intended to be something "different" in serials, in that it was practically an all out-doors picture play. Of its thirty-one reels less than one reel shows interiors. All of the rest of it is mountain, desert and torrent scenes.

This is the first time, as far as known, that an all out-door serial has been attempted, and trade paper reviewers who have been permitted to see some of the episodes in the Vitagraph projection room, pronounced it a splendid piece of work. A reviewer wrote:

"This serial is so good all the way through and so evenly balanced that it would be difficult to select any one point as better than another." The same writer added a message to the exhibitors in which he said: "Be the first to book this serial in your community, and you will be the envy of the other exhibitors, as it will prove a great drawing power in any house."

J. C. Mack Changes to Mutual's Cleveland Force

J. C. Mack is selling Mutual films for the Cleveland exchange. Previously Mr. Mack was on the Mutual sales force traveling out of Toledo. Pictures of Charlie Chaplin in his latest comedy, "The Wanderer," are being displayed in the Mutual office, although no release date has been set as yet.

Kleine Exchange Manager Goes with Mutual

W. E. Raynor, manager for George Kleine and the K-E-S-E New York exchange, has resigned his position to take up the management of the New York branch of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Raynor first came to New York four and a half years ago to introduce "Quo Vadis" for Mr. Kleine, which was the first big moving picture road show. Since then he has handled Mr. Kleine's various entertainments.

Sydney Abel Leaves Vita for Select Pictures

Sydney E. Abel has been appointed Special Representative of Select Pictures Corporation and begins work in the interest of Select exchanges September 10. Mr. Abel has resigned his position as manager of the Chicago branch exchange of Vitagraph V-L-S-E.

Mr. Abel has made an enviable record in conducting branch exchanges in the Middle West. He started with the Cleveland Exchange two years ago after the Vitagraph V-L-S-E organization was effected. The showing he made in selling V-L-S-E product in the Cleveland district in six months' time brought him promotion to the managership of the Chicago exchange, which position he has held ever since.

Prior to his connection with the Vitagraph interest, Sydney Abel spent four and a half years with the Mutual Film Corporation as branch manager in various eastern cities. He was in charge of the Pittsburgh exchange when the Vitagraph brought him into their fold.

New Boston Foursquare Exchange Gets Good Start

Samuel Rubenstein is the manager of the new Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange opened in Boston, at 18 Piedmont street. Though barely ten days old the Boston office is already doing a nice business, so M. H. Hoffman reports.

The Foursquare features now finding ready booking in New England, are "The Sin Woman," "Her Fighting Chance," "Madame Sherry," "The Silent Witness" and "A Trip Through China," "One Hour," the feature in six parts, which is a sequel to "Three Weeks." The big, seven-part Foursquare superfeature, "The Fringe of Society," will shortly be ready for New England distribution.

H. C. Wales New Universal Man at Washington

C. Milliman, in charge of the Universal Exchange at Washington, D. C., has entered the service of the government for the war and in his place H. C. Wales has been made manager.

Mr. Wales is active, thoroughly alive to business and accommodating to his patrons to the last degree. He says:

"The Bluebirds are booking well. Short subjects are much in demand, too. I find many of the houses reserving one day in the week for short subjects, which exhibitors find a relief from the lengthy single productions which form the usual program."

Uses Old Auto for Billie West Ads

L. Hillman of the Palace theatre at Lincoln, Neb., has had his old automobile made over with room for two six-sheets and small cutouts advertising pictures at his house. He created a sensation last week by appearing for the first time in this turnout, advertising Billy West comedies. A life-size cutout of Billy West occupied the seat beside him.

The Standard exchange in Omaha reports a heavy demand for the Billy West cutouts, the first of which have just been received.

SILVERTIP

THERE'S A REASON FOR ITS PRESENT REPUTATION!

When you trim your lamps with Silvertips it is well to remember that this industry-endorsed carbon is being used by the most discerning and critical exhibitors in the country.

It is not an idle boast that Silvertip has been adopted as the projector standard of the world. Go into the largest and most up-to-date houses—into theaters where the length of throw and character of pictures presented demand a pure white projection light of far above normal intensity—and you will see the reason why.

What is satisfying critical thousands the country over is worth a trial from you. Silvertips mean perfect projection and minimum carbon adjustment. It is little wonder that operators from coast to coast want them right now.

Let us send you our free booklet, "The Why of the Silvertip."

Patrons and the Film

THE physical condition of film as it is received by the exhibitor shows signs of improvement, that is, some of the exchanges throughout the country are exhibiting interest in the movement which has been started by the National Anti-Misframe League, and are listening to the exhibitors who are not receiving film in the condition in which it should be delivered.

* * * * *

I AM quoting from a letter which I received from the Manager of Sales of one of the largest distributing corporations in the industry:

MR. E. K. GILLETT, September 11th, 1917.
MOTION PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
729 SEVENTH AVE., CITY.

DEAR MR. GILLETT:

Thanks very much for your esteemed favor of the 6th instant, with information from the Blank theatre.

We have had this matter up with our manager, having received a specimen of the film shipped to the Blank theatre.

Reciprocating the spirit of your letter, we want to say, that our management has experienced quite some difficulty in securing competent inspectors—competent in the same degree as are the inspectors in our New York Exchange.

We assure you that we are making every possible effort to give a service warranting the respect and admiration of our customers.

Reassuring you of our appreciation for the interest taken, with kindest regards, we are,

* * * * *

THIS letter shows a decided desire to co-operate, but it also shows very clearly that co-operation must be actively given by the operators and their organizations as well as by the theatre owners.

* * * * *

THERE is absolutely no doubt but what the attempt is being made on the part of the exchanges to improve the service. The Anti-Misframe League has received complaints from various operators, and theatre managers throughout the country as to the physical condition of their film, which complaints have been referred to the home offices of the exchanges in question. The letter quoted, however, is the first reply which we have had, which set forth the primary cause of the conditions, namely, the inability to locate competent inspectors.

* * * * *

THE Inspection Department of any exchange must not and cannot be underestimated. It is one of, if not their most important department. If the film is not in good physical condition it cannot be rented. To improve this condition co-operation from the managers and operators will help materially.

Who should know better than an experienced operator the proper condition in which film should be shipped out from the exchange?

Who should know better than the operator how patches should be made in order that they may pass through the standard projector?

Who should know better than the operator whether certain torn perforations will last one or two more shows, or whether the film in which they appear should be replaced at once.

If the operators organizations throughout the country will appoint reputable committees to visit the various exchanges, and co-operate with them in locating men who are capable of running the Inspection Department, we would soon find that film conditions in general would materially improve.

On the other hand, were the various exchanges throughout the country to approach the theatre men's associations or the operators organizations, and request them for co-operation, we know that it would be given enthusiastically, for after all, we are all working for one end, namely, INCREASING THE PATRONAGE OF MOTION PICTURES.

* * * * *

TO this end we request the members of the National Anti-Misframe League and other operators who contemplate joining, write us setting forth film conditions in their territory, and letting us put our shoulder to the wheel with them in helping improve and keeping up the physical condition of motion picture film which is to be shown to the public through the theatres.

E. K. GILLETT.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

International Projection Association, Inc.

AN event of unusual importance is to take place on the night of Friday, September 21, when the first of a series of lectures will be given to the members of the above named society at their clubrooms, 652 Bergen avenue, by Frank S. Pircher, E.E. and B.S.

The subject, "The First Principles of Elementary Optics," is the topic chosen by Mr. Pircher, and as he is one of the ablest operators we have in the city today, being a mechanic of no mean ability as well as being thoroughly versed on the subject of electricity and optics as applied to the operating room, his lecture should be the means of helping along the education of the man who lacks the same opportunity for study and research as he enjoys.

Formerly with the New York Edison Company as one of their engineers, he gained much experience and valuable knowledge which he is willing to impart to his less fortunate brothers. He has received the degrees of E.E. and B.S. from one of our leading universities, which should add to the value of what he may have to say by being authoritative.

The International Projection Association, Inc., as we have said in these columns before, is not a union, but purely a social and fraternal organization formed by motion picture machine operators. Chartered under the laws of the State of New York, on February 28 of the present year, the association has steadily grown from a membership of a few until it now numbers nearly every operator employed north of the Harlem River.

The officers—Al Polin, president; H. Scherl, vice-president; Marcus Rattiner, secretary-treasurer; Morris J. Rotker, recording secretary, and Edgar T. Stewart, chairman of the Board of Trustees—expect that there will be an unusually large attendance, and as all members are invited to bring along a friend, preferably a non-member, I predict that Brother Fircher will have a "packed house" to greet him on his debut as a lecturer.

Remember the date, the place and the time.

Friday, September 21, at 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, N. Y., at 12 o'clock midnight. Those who are not residents of the Bronx and may desire to attend are instructed to take either the Subway or the Third Avenue "L," get off at 149th street, and walk two blocks north and one block east, to the clubrooms.

Invents an Automatic Dowser

H. A. K., Jacksonville, Fla., writes: "I have just completed what I call an automatic dowser. This device enables one man to make the 'change over' from one machine to the other so that it is impossible to detect the change upon the screen. It clamps on the head of the lamp house of any make machine and automatically cuts off the light from one machine as the clutch (on the motor drive) of the other machine is thrown in. This does not put out the arc or stop the motor; simply prevents the light from striking the aperture plate. The device is very small and of neat appearance; weighs about 2 ounces complete, and has no rods, chains, cords, pulleys, or other cumbersome parts to get in the operator's way. I have been in the game for about eight years and have used many methods of making changes, such as having a cord attached to each dowser, running through pulleys, with weights acting as a balance, and closing one dowser as the other is opened; wiring machines in multiple so as to steal one arc from the other; two shutters in front of the light ports, which moved up and down, one opening as the other closed, and have at times even tied cord to the switches, so that I could throw off on one machine when starting the other. Do you know of any other method in use by operators than those I have mentioned by which one man can operate two machines without ever having a dark screen, if so I would like to know of it. I would explain my device more fully, but my patent has not yet been granted. As soon as I have it fully protected I will send you full particulars with drawing."

You seem to have covered pretty thoroughly the various methods in use by operators for making the "change over" without ever having a dark screen. Some of the methods in use are very crude, and if you really "have something" it should find a ready sale, but operators, you know, are "from Missouri" and must be shown. I will be glad to receive further particulars and the promised drawing as soon as you are ready to send them. Until then, it would be useless for me to express an opinion as to the merits of the device.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

NATIONAL MAZDA
THE WAY TO BETTER LIGHT

Nothing to Watch but the Film

New Lamp Requires No Attention

For practically every important application of light there has been developed a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp especially suited to the purpose—as for example, for the lighting of homes, theaters, stores and factories; for streets, street cars, trains and automobiles; for lighthouses, searchlights and electric lanterns; and so on through a long list.

It has been certain from the beginning that there would one day be a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp with which motion pictures could be projected at a practical cost.

Here it is.

It reduces the cost of operation.

It gives an absolutely flickerless light. It sharpens and steadies the pictures. It requires no attention or adjustment. It leaves the operator "nothing to watch but the film." It reduces the fire hazard. It does not contaminate the air in the operator's booth.

It has been thoroughly tested by more than a year's use. Its working efficiency and operating cost have been determined. If you will describe the size and projector-equipment of your theater, we can state what results you may expect from this lamp—or any motion picture supply house can give you the information. Notice! Anti-Misframe League Members

Membership cards are now ready and are being sent out as fast as possible. There are a number of operators, however, who have neglected to send in the desired information. If you will fill out the blank and mail to me, button and membership card will be forwarded.

Member's name.....

Name of theatre where employed.....
Address of theatre and name of manager.....

This notice does not apply to those who have already sent in this information, but it is for those who have neglected doing so, many of whom have merely given their name and name of city, without any street address, making it impossible for the post office employes to deliver the letters addressed to them. Now let us all get together and raise our "Army of 1,000," and show that we are sincere in our efforts to better conditions in general. I. G. S.

Will Do All He Can

RAYMOND R. MORGAN, Sapulpa, Okla., says: "Have been reading up on your latest idea; the Anti Mis-Frame League and am glad to say that I think it is the 'best yet.' Please put my name down as an applicant. There are several other operators here, and I will do all I can to get their names for the Honor Roll."

In reply, the more the merrier. Your name has been added to the roll of honor, and I wish you success in securing the names of the other "boys."

Operator Turns Poet

THE following piece of poetry was written by brother Thomas Costello as a tribute to one of the "Boys" of Local 306; Danny Donoghue, who has joined the colors and is now enrolled as a member of "The Fighting Sixty-ninth," a part of the Rainbow division now encamped at Mineola, Long Island. The poem is entitled:

MY PAL DAN

He left his home and work behind, just like a thousand more
And donned a spit of khaki to fight on foreign shores.
His pals they all will miss him, but we know he is a man.
The gallant Sixty-ninth can be justly proud of "my pal Dan."

He shot pictures in the U. S. A., but shooting Germans now will be his work,
And you can bet the Sixty-ninth will fight like howling Turks.
The Kaiser will get cold feet as the boys his ranks will slam
And Local 306, will be in the front ranks with "My Pal Dan."

There are in the regular as well as in the new national armies many men who formerly were motion picture operators, and as motion pictures form a part of the amusement and entertainment for the boys in camp, we are pleased to know that the machines will be operated by experienced operators as well as "Union Men."

HEREWITH is published a photograph of an operator who formerly a member of Local 306, is now operating for the United States Government. He writes to a friend an interesting letter which is humorous in certain portions and as I have been given permission to use the letter I will quote certain parts of it. Here goes: "Dear ———: I hope you are well and also your beloved wife. I am still operating on the U. S. S. Kentucky and have just received a new Simplex Type S. It is the first one to be installed on any ship in the Atlantic fleet. I was over to the Precision Machine Company and as usual they showed me all the courtesy possible, and loaned me several extra parts as I have been operating the Simplex for so long a time. Lester Bowen was with me. I now have the same equipment as Lester has at the Rialto. I take it from your postal that you are out with a road show. How does forty-five a week seem to you, or does Jo take it away from you as usual? She is a good wife but not for me as I don't like to be bossed around. I am going to be married next June and believe me, my first wife knew I was boss, and my second will also. As for father and mother-in-laws they don't bother me in the least; if they get fresh I heave them out (sailor lingo—Ed). You are getting almost as much per week as I do per month. Well, I will close now, requesting that you send me an I. A. Journal."

The Simplex in the hands of such an able operator as the writer of the above letter will be sure to give pleasure and furnish amusement to the crew of the good ship Kentucky, and I am sure the Precision Machine Company will not object to the words of praise bestowed upon them. The equipment at the Rialto is considered up to date and complete and now that the same equipment is being installed on our battleships the U. S. Navy will also "compare favorably with New York's White Way." A good laugh is contained in the brother's letter where he asks, "Does your wife take your salary away from you as usual?" and then goes on to say "she is a good wife but not for me," following it up with "I am going to be married in June." He does not like to be bossed and yet he is taking orders from others all day. I hope he will not be disappointed in his second venture, and that he will be able to boss his wife and "get away with it" but I have my doubts. The salary question must worry some of the "boys" who formerly received for one week's work the same sum that they are now compelled to work an entire month for. And there is no overtime in the Navy either. It is pleasing to know, however, that the motion picture operators are not "slackers" and that in this struggle for Democracy in which we are engaged they too are "doing their bit."

Never Owned a Punch

ERNEST TYLER, New York State, writes: "I am a new reader of the NEWS and have noticed that a League has been formed to promote better film condition. I am for it, for I have enjoyed "indoor sports," patching and removing mis-frames. I never owned a ticket punch or punched a hole in any film that I have ever ran, and I wish you would put my name down as a member of the A. M. F. L."

Comment: Good boy! You are one of the few who can say that truthfully. Your name will be added to the Roll of Honor, and we hope that you will continue to live up to the pledge and that you will also offer suggestions as to effecting a remedy for some of the other evils prevalent in the industry.

From Washington, N. C.

JOHN WARNER, Washington, N. C., has this to say: "After reading of the good work being done by the N. A. M. L., I wish to express myself as being heartily in favor of it, and think it is one of the best movements ever gotten up in the interests of the operator and better film service. I also, am having considerable trouble with misframes, bad patches and punch marks, and am willing to do my part in eliminating this trouble. I am enclosing a membership application and a signed pledge, clipped from Motion Picture News and would appreciate a more detailed statement of the aims and work of the League. Hoping to hear from you soon in regard to the matter, I am fraternally yours."

Answer: The aims of the League have been set forth in these columns so often that it hardly seems necessary to go into any great detail at this time. I would suggest that you read some of your back numbers and find the information you are seeking.

I believe that I had the honor of opening the first picture show in your city, several years ago. The Bijou Theatre, next to Brown's Drug Store which was started by Mr. Walter E. Jones, head of the Washington Investment Company. We also operated a store show on River street for the "po' white trash." Both of these ventures were more or less successful and I still retain many pleasant memories of that little city on the A. C. L. If Mr. Jones is known by you, kindly convey to him my kindest regards.

Your name has been placed on the Roll of Honor and you will receive your membership card and button in the regular course of events.

Liberty Loving Local 307 Shows Patriotism

AT a recent meeting of Local 307, Motion Picture Machine Operators of Philadelphia, Pa., it was resolved that the Local donate the sum of One Hundred Dollars to the family of any member meeting with permanent injury or death while serving in the armed forces of the United States. Without a dissenting vote this resolution was unanimously carried. The treasury of the Local will in no way be impaired by this donation, as the money will be raised by a voluntary tax upon each member.

As Local 307, has a membership of approximately two hundred and seventy-five members, twenty-four of which are already serving in some branch of the military service, this is a big undertaking and we sincerely hope that there will be no necessity for any donation whatsoever, and that every one of the "boys" will do their bit and return to their hearthside, safe and sound.

Locals who have not already done so, should adopt resolutions along these lines, or, if this is not possible, they should at least make some provision for the exemption of dues to its members while answering the call of their country I. G. S,

No Union—Too Bad

G. S. H., Harrisonburg, Va., writes: "I would like to join the A. M. F. L. I think it is a very fine thing. There are two of us, both operating in the same theatre, and we both wish to join—is it all right? We have no Local here, does that make any difference? We will send our names and name of theatre as soon as we see your answer in the NEWS."

Answer: There are no restrictions placed upon the membership of the League. Any operator, manager or film inspector, working in an exchange is eligible for membership. The members of the League consist of many non-union men as well as a large majority of union men. The fact that there is no union in your city is to be regretted but that does not bar you from lending your efforts to better conditions in the industry. Fill out the printed blank and mail to me. On receipt of the information requested I will mail you membership card and button.

The Lost Is Found

H. S. KLINK, Canton, Ohio, whose letterhead bears the following motto: "I am not learned that I cannot learn more," writes: "Well brother, I can't resist any longer so here goes: Please enroll me as a member of the N. A. M. L. I am working in a vaudeville theatre, showing Pathe News on week days and a World Feature on Sundays. I guess I am worthy of membership in the League as I won the World Film Company's "Better Service" contest for the month of July in the Cleveland District; I have also finished eleven years employment for one man, which isn't bad, is it? I could have worked for him another eleven years as he is one Prince to work for. Ed. E. Bender is the man to whom I refer; general manager of the Lyceum theatre, this city."

In reply: Your letter was indeed welcome, for it has been some time since I last heard from you. To your credit are the words you use on your letterhead, and I am glad to learn that you were one of the winners of the better service contest. The record for long years of service is one that few operators can equal. Of course, the reason for this is that not all managers are "Princes." Don't feel yourself a stranger, and let us hear from you more regularly.

Typhoon Prominent at Exposition

THE Safety and Sanitation Exposition at the Grand Central Palace in New York must have been arranged especially for the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System. This was easily the most conspicuously advertised apparatus at the Exposition last week.

Three immense Typhoon fans were mounted on the railings that surround the entrance to the Grand Central Palace, between the tall columns, above huge flags, making a most imposing display.

There was nothing "stuffy" about the attractive Typhoon Booth either. Signs and salesmen aided the Typhoon fans in emphasizing the importance of proper ventilation.

Lincoln Represented

THE manager of one of the leading photoplay theatres of Lincoln, Neb., writes: "I don't think that Lincoln is represented in the A. M. F. L., but enclosed you will find what my operator did to one reel of film before he started cutting. What do you think of these splices? Do not think that this is the general run of stuff we are using here, for I am glad to say that this is an exception; it is from the 'Runaway Sleeper' an episode of the 'Hazards of Helen' and quite old."

In Reply: You will pardon my frankness, I hope, when I tell you that in my estimation 75 per cent of the splices you enclosed in your letter to me were mechanically perfect, and would have run through the machine without any trouble. The Anti-Mis-Frame League, has for its purpose the elimination of bad condition of film, and even though the subject you mention is an old one, the cutting out of many of the patches could have been avoided.

Praise for the Simplex

FRANCIS STEINER, Pacific Grove, Cal., writes: "Please enroll me as a member of the Anti Mis-Frame League. I had not thought much about joining until last night. Although the manager was with me we had all we could do, marking, cutting out and repairing a five reel feature. There were no less than twelve big misframes, and the joints or splices that had been made were very poor. The film was doubled over and cemented, and was ripped out on both sides. It was a miracle that it ran through the machine; thank Heaven it was a Simplex. My manager suggested that I join the A. M. F. L., and here I am."

In Reply: Welcome to the fold. The conditions you mention, however, are not as bad as they might be. If the film was ripped on both sides, for any great length, I cannot see how it was possible for it to be run through any machine. When making complaints about condition of film, it is requested that you mention name of subject, who it is released by and the exchange from which you received it. In this way we can get in touch with the proper authorities and thereby effect a remedy.

Settlement with Detroit Operators

The next year's wage scale of the union operators in Detroit has been finally adjusted, and became effective September 1. It grants the operators a good wage increase, although not as much as originally asked for. It also strikes out a number of things in the original contract submitted by the unions. It's a victory for both sides, each making compromises to reach a final adjustment.

Menger and Ring Enlarge

MENGER AND RING, INC., 304 West Forty-second street, New York City, who are manufacturers of theatrical display frames, have consolidated with Samuel Weinstein, of 134 Duane street, New York, and henceforth they will be known by the name of Menger, Ring and Weinstein, Inc. In speaking of the change, Mr. Ring said that the business had been advancing so rapidly that it was necessary to enlarge their plant and executive force in order to cope with the flood of new business that has been coming in from all parts of the country. The newly added partner is a man of wide experience in the picture framing business, and the factory of Samuel Weinstein will be utilized in making lobby display frames for the motion picture industry. This factory has a working floor space of over 12,000 feet, and equipped with the latest inventions in machinery for making the highest class wood turnings for display frames.

The offices and salesrooms of the company will remain at the same address, 304 West Forty-second street, New York, while the manufacturing will be carried on in their outside factories which have four buildings and branches.

Aisle Lighting Device Aids Seating

THE BROOKINS COMPANY, Cleveland, a firm which has devoted eleven years to a close study of interior illumination, has been placing its "Aislelite" in many of the most important picture theatres throughout the country. Wherever the device is in use, the management has found it satisfactory. In many instances, theatre men have been enthusiastic in their praise of the merits of the Aislelite and sent to the firm unsolicited testimonials.

The purpose of the Aislelite is to do away with wall lights, and at the same time diffuse sufficient illumination to aid patrons to find their seats. The Aislelite is attached to the end seat facing the aisle and sheds a mellow glow on the floor. The light in the aisle is just sufficient to act as a guide to patrons in finding their seats, and in no way interferes with the light on the screen. As the rays falling from the apparatus are directed toward the floor and completely shut off above, the rest of the house is in absolute darkness, when the wall globes and the center lights have been turned off.

When the Aislelight is installed there is no more fumbling around for the right seat. A patron can find his own seat without aid, if necessary.

The aisle becomes a lighted pathway, and there is no more confusion when the house is crowded. People can go to their seats or leave the auditorium without bumping into each other.

Appearance of the Aisle During the Showing of a Picture. The Subdued Light Reflected on the Floor from the Aislelite in No Way Interferes with the Light on the Screen

This is a decided advantage. When theatregoers feel that there is a house in town where they can go at anytime and enter right in the middle of a performance with the knowledge that there is no danger of being jostled, or that they are liable to stumble about in getting to a seat they are drawn instinctively to that theatre. Freedom from unnecessary annoyance and trouble appeal to all patrons. Give the crowds going to your house a chance to think that they are not in a crowd and they will vote your theatre one that has something to offer in the way of convenience.

IN the previously described investigations on photographic resolving power the effects of light action in photographic films, and their influence upon the rendition of fine detail, were ascertained through the examination of test objects reproduced by a lens upon photographic plates.

The study of images produced by a lens could not, however, yield absolute information on photographic resolving power, because, in no instance is the image produced by a lens an exactly defined reproduction of the object. All objectives possess a certain amount of residual aberration, but even though it were possible to construct an absolutely aberration-free objective; this objective would still fail to reproduce a point of the object as a perfectly defined point in the image. The wave-theory of light shows us that instead of a luminous point being imaged as a point by a lens, it is reproduced instead as a circular patch of light surrounded by alternating bright and dark rings. This diffraction pattern, or spurious disc (as they are called by astronomers), is what we might expect as the reproduction of a point, having regard for the wave-theory, and, as Lummer says: "Physical optics recognizes no other meaning than this to the term point-image."

A thorough study of the investigative work which has been done upon photographic resolving power will show the manner in which scientific problems are progressively elucidated by the joint efforts by capable workers, who fortify their efforts by judicious study of the previous work upon the same subject. The original work of Mees and Scheffer was indeed productive of useful information upon photographic resolving power, but a further advance came about when the inherent imperfection of lens-produced images was taken into consideration, and other means employed to produce test-exposures upon the photographic film.

Some early investigations upon photographic resolving power, without recourse to lens-produced images were those of Féry[1] and Scheiner[2], but the first of the more recent workers who dispensed with objectives as the means of making test-exposures, was Dr. E. Goldberg of Leipzig, to whom all students of the photographic process are indebted for a most interesting research.[3]

Goldberg's investigation is commendable for the extreme simplicity of the devices employed, and it may be said that his paper was the forerunner of the best work which has since been carried out on the subject of photographic resolution.

As the results of previous investigators had shown that the principal enemy to photographic resolution was the spreading of the photographic image, due to the action of the silver particles of an emulsion upon the incident light, Goldberg proceeded to study this spreading of the image by the microscopic examination of discs, produced upon photographic plates by exposure through a metal plate pierced with a series of round holes. The perforated metal plate was placed in contact with photographic plates of various kinds, and exposures ranging from 10 to 100,000 times the "Schwellenwert"* of the respective plates were given.

Although this seems an excessively simple procedure, the preparation and use of the perforated metal exposing plate requires special precaution, and a consideration of the effects which result from the spreading of the light between the metal plate and the photographic plate if the two are not in absolute contact when the test-exposures are made. As is well known, the surface of a photographic plate is far from being optically plane; this being the case it would be impossible to secure perfect contact between the emulsion film and the perforated metal plate, no matter how great the pressure which was applied. Figure 3 shows how Dr. Goldberg surmounted this difficulty. In Fig. 3, a is a cross-section of a metal plate having conical holes drilled almost through it. These partially drilled holes were next depressed with a punch so that they protruded from the lower surface of the metal plate, as in b, Fig. 3, and were then drilled completely through, leaving three round openings whose edges extended somewhat from the bottom of the metal plate; c, Fig. 3. The diameter of the holes in Goldberg's exposing-plate was 0.4 mm.

Regardless of irregularities in the surface of the photographic plate being tested, it is apparent that these protruding apertures in the metal plate could be brought into intimate contact with the former, but to guard against any great irregularities in the surface of photographic plates Goldberg disposed the holes in his exposing-plate in the relation of the three corners of a triangle; d, Fig. 3. By so doing he took advantage of a mathematical law that all three projections on a surface must always touch a support. It should be mentioned here that the effect of light spreading, against which all of these precautions were taken, results from lack of contact between the holes (or apertures) in the exposing-plate and the surface of the photographic plate, and causes the developed test-image to lose its perfectly circular shape, as well as falsifying the proportional spreading effect at the edge of the images, which latter is the subject of the investigation.

When a series of exposures on various types of plates have been made through a properly prepared metal plate, the effects of light action upon the photographic film may be ascertained by examination of the developed results. To secure a series of varying exposures at one single operation Dr. Goldberg placed in front of the metal plate a neutral-black wedge giving exposures through the three holes which varied in the ratio of 1, 10, and 100 times the Schwellenwert of each variety of photographic emulsion. A second series of exposures was given each plate, these being 1,000, 10,000 and 100,000 times the Schwellenwert.

After development the various test plates bore series of small black discs, and the comparison of the diameter of these photographic images with the known diameter of the holes in the metal exposing-plate yielded information as to the properties of the various types of plates. As the photographic disc images were quite small they were studied under suitable magnification. This increase in the size of the discs on the photographic film over the size of the holes through which they were printed is, of course, directly comparable to the irradiation effects considered in the previous section of this article, and it will now prove interesting to set forth the characteristics of various types of photographic emulsions, as revealed by Dr. Goldberg's test exposures.

He found that in the case of a transparent and grainless emulsion, such as is used in the Lippmann interference process of color photography, there was no measurable increase in the size of the exposed (and developed) discs on the test plates, and that the discs printed on Process and Lantern plates showed only a slight spreading or increase in diameter. A noticeable degree of spreading was the case with the Wratten "High-Resolution" plate in which the silver grains are all of the same size, e.g., homogeneous emulsion. As might be expected, the increase in the size of the exposed discs was considerable in the case of Extra Rapid, or portrait, plates, while a double-coated plate showed the greatest spreading of the image of all the plates tested. The most confused and widely spread of all the test images, however, were those produced on Bromide and other developing-out papers, while exposures on printing-out papers showed no spreading, or increase in the diameter of the disc, and were therefore comparable in this respect to the transparent, grainless, Lippmann film. It has to be emphasized here that these observations with regard to the spreading of the discs by various types of emulsion refer to images produced at equal exposures. The discs on a given plate which correspond to the longer exposures, are, of course, of greater diameter than those produced on the same plate at shorter exposures.

Following Dr. Scheffer, Goldberg calls the extent of the spreading of the photographic image (due to the scattering of the incident light by the photographic film) the turbidity of an emulsion, which is more exactly defined as the proportion between the strength of the light reaching the film and the total amount scattered. The turbidity of various emulsions has been graphically demonstrated by Goldberg in the form of curves, where exposures as abscissae are plotted against increase (due to spreading) in the size of the photographic image as ordinates. In such a diagram the curve of a highly turbid (rapid, coarse-grained) emulsion will rise high with increasing abscissa values, whereas the turbidity curve of a transparent emulsion will show no appreciable ordinate value, even in the case of long exposures. As curves plotted in this manner from the observed facts are characteristic of the light scattering properties of various plates, Goldberg calls these curves the turbidity curves, while he terms the steepness of the curve the turbidity factor. It has been shown, however, by later investigators, that Goldberg's turbidity curve is not identical with his definition of turbidity factor.

Now as the turbidity factor of any given plate is a physical constant, and of a purely optical nature, it follows that it must be independent of the nature of the developer and the time of development, and also independent of the intensity of the scattered light which causes the lateral extension of the photographic image beyond its true boundaries. These conclusions were demonstrated by Goldberg in the following simple manner: To show that the turbidity factor of a given emulsion is unaffected by time of development a series of equal exposures were made upon a plate, the exposures being many times normal, or, in other words, severe over-exposures. The discs thus produced on the photographic plate (by printing in contact with the perforated metal plate) were cut apart and each developed separately for different lengths of time. The diameters of the developed discs were all practically equal, showing that the turbidity of an emulsion is not influenced by development.

The influence of the light scattered within the film upon the turbidity factor was investigated by making exposures through holes (drilled in a metal plate) of various sizes, since it is mathematically demonstrable that the intensity of light scattered within the film increases with increase in the size of the holes in the metal exposing-plate. Considering further the mathematical aspects of this case Goldberg concluded that the increase in scattered light with increase in size of the printing aperture was not, however, sufficient to sensibly alter the turbidity factor, and this was demonstrated by making two exposures behind a metal plate containing three holes of different diameters, the exposures being 10 and 100,000 times the Schwellenwert respectively. When the diameters of the developed images were measured it was found that the degree of spreading in the case of the discs printed through the largest holes in the plate was essentially the same as that for the smaller discs, thus supporting Goldberg's contention that the turbidity factor was not influenced by increase in the intensity of the light scattered within the emulsion film. In the case of severe overexposure Goldberg found the spreading of the image to be very considerable, implying an increase in turbidity with long exposures, which, of course, is a characteristic of the emulsion itself and varies with different types of plate.

While it might seem that these scientific investigations are far removed from the actual business of negative making, the connection between photographic resolving power and sharply defined images is made easily apparent by the following conclusions of Dr. Goldberg:

(1). The sharpness at the edge of a point (a line or a surface) is at its greatest with a given plate, which possesses the smallest turbidity factor and the greatest development factor (degree of contrast).

(2). Two sorts of plates may possess the same degree of sharpness if the ratio between their turbidity factor and the development factor is the same.

(3). To improve the sharpness it is very advantageous that the turbidity factor be very small and the development factor as large as possible. The Lippmann plate possesses an extraordinary sharpness at the edge of the printed figure, because its turbidity factor is immeasurably small, so that the bad influence of its development factor does not spoil it (it has very flat gradation). On the other hand, the sharpness of a line printed on bromide paper leaves much to be desired, which is easily explained, for the turbidity factor is large, and the good influence of its steep gradation is not sufficient to attain a large enough ratio for both factors. Finally, one can expect that those photographic films which have a high development factor and a small turbidity factor, as, for example, the "hard working" (contrasty) process-plates, will show a very good sharpness at the edges, an expectation that is completely confirmed by trials.

The foregoing experiments of Dr. Goldberg throw considerable light on the factors which influence photographic resolution, but to complete his research Goldberg also made some tests to determine the degree of resolving power possessed by various types of photographic emulsions. In these tests he sought to determine the "resolving limit" of various emulsions, the term resolving limit being defined by Goldberg as the smallest width of a printed (exposed) line which can be made on a photographic film. Here, as in the former experiments, the use of a lens to form the images is excluded, and in these determinations of the resolving limit Goldberg used as his test object a piece of silvered mirror upon which transparent and microscopically fine lines had been produced by rubbing just once over the silvered back of the mirror with a piece of emery paper. This scratched mirror was placed in close contact with the various plates to be tested and exposures made, whereupon the appearance of the fine lines thus produced on the developed films was studied under the microscope.

In the case of process plates, lantern plates, and other slow fine grained emulsions, good representations of the scratches on the mirror were apparent in the photographic copies, but in no instance were they so fine as to be of the order of the size of the silver grains in the various emulsions, as would be the case if the theory of Wadsworth (see previous installment) were correct. In the case of extra-rapid, coarse grained emulsions the finer lines were undiscernible as such, and on either side of their true position great numbers of exposed and blackened (by development) silver grains could be seen. As this apparent shift in the position of the exposed lines might be brought about by lack of contact between the surface of the photographic plate and the scratched mirror with which the lines were printed, another series of exposures were made upon flexible films forced into contact with the surface of the mirror.

The results of these test exposures showed the minute scratches on the mirror to be well reproduced by the fine grained emulsion of printing-out paper, and fairly well delineated by bromide paper, which latter, it will be recalled, gave a very confused disc in Dr. Goldberg's previous experiments on turbidity, or light spreading. In spite of the good contact between the printing mirror and flexible film, the representation of the scratches was as poor on high-speed film as had been the case with plates of extra-rapid quality, and the same quantities of exposed grains were to be noted in the vicinity of the printed lines. This might be caused by the action of exposed grains in an emulsion acting on adjacent grains in such a way as to make them likewise developable, but this inference is by no means conclusive, as was proven by Dr. Goldberg by producing a series of lines on an unexposed plate by rubbing the same with emery paper and then developing it. These lines produced without the action of light were reproduced distinctly in the test results, and were not bordered by large numbers of developed silver grains. This showed that the poor rendition of extremely fine lines by rapid emulsions could not be traced to any condition related to developability of the grains, but was due to the fact that the silver bromide grains in a rapid emulsion vary in their sensitiveness. This being the case, it can be appreciated that a line of light falling on a rapid plate may happen to be incident upon grains of less sensitiveness than other adjacent grains. By reflection the more sensitive neighboring grains are made developable, and upon development may be more apparent than the true image produced by the incident light.

Goldberg considers that this explains the superior resolving limit of fine grained (slow) emulsions over the very rapid (coarse-grained) types, but he further concludes that there is no connection between the turbidity factor and the resolving limit of an emulsion, for, whereas turbidity factor is governed by the arrangement of the grains in the film, and by the thickness of the film; the resolving limit is dependent on the difference in sensitiveness of the grains in a given emulsion, and (when the grains are of uniform sensitiveness) upon the size of the grains. MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Sidelights on the Music Royalty Question

TO pay or not to pay for the privilege of using certain kinds of music is a troublesome subject for exhibitors just at present. The exhibitors say "No," while the Authors and Composers Society say "Yes"; and much to the exhibitors' discomfiture a judge has decided in favor of the music men. The exhibitors think they are shouldering enough financial burdens, and the music men feel that too many persons in this world are deriving revenue from their products without paying.

This is not a new situation for authors, composers and publishers. They went through a similar battle some years ago, when the manufacturers of phonographs and music rolls took what they pleased and told the music men to fly a kite when the latter asked for some remuneration. The phonograph makers argued that the copyright covered only sheet music and that they were not infringing.

The publishers, however, held a different view and took the matter to court, arguing that phonograph records and music rolls had a detrimental effect on the sale of sheet music. Publishers maintained that a person with a phonograph record or the music roll of a song would not be likely to purchase a copy of the song. But the court did not share the publishers' opinion and decided in favor of the manufacturers. And until a law could be passed the publishers knew they could not collect a cent.

But the trouble had been started, with the publishers prepared to continue the fight. The manager of one large music roll company felt that sooner or later all manufacturers would have to pay. So he went to the publishers and offered to purchase the exclusive rights to all their publications and agreed to fight any proposed law.

The other manufacturers heard of this plan and, fearing that they would be squeezed out entirely, called a meeting and asked the publishers to attend. At the meeting the manufacturers admitted that the publishers were entitled to a royalty and helped the publishers to frame a satisfactory agreement with the idea of having it made a law. The law was passed, allowing the publishers two cents royalty from every record or music roll made. A violation of the law entitled the injured publisher to begin suit for three times the amount. Some doubted the constitutional rights of Congress to stipulate the amount to be paid on each record, but the publishers have been receiving it ever since. And the authors and composers are paid their share.

Wolfe Gilbert

So in making this fight against exhibitors the musical fraternity is simply repeating history. And this time the court has thrown its weight with the music folks.

The other day the writer discussed the matter with L. Wolfe Gilbert, the well-known song writer and professional manager for Jos. W. Stern & Company. Being an author, Mr. Gilbert naturally looks for all he can get from his work; and yet he is one of the most liberal and broad-minded men in the business. Not being a member of the society, he talks as a neutral.

"We all want to live and get along," Gilbert smiled. "Moving picture exhibitors are entitled to live as well as writers and publishers. And when you hear a publisher tell his side you feel he has a just grievance. Maybe an exhibitor could make his side clear too. Take my firm for instance. It costs approximately $35,000 a year to run this professional department and, with the exception of some dance music, we have to give most of it away gratis. Picture pianists come her and ask for sets of music. They do the same in other publishing houses. They collect from fifty to two hundred sheets of music. A few songs they play, a few they look at, and many they never put on the piano. I know dozens of cases where the picture pianists have handed the music to lady friends without as much as undoing the wrappers. Here they kill possible sales for every publisher. Do you think they would be so generous if someone had to pay for that music?"

"But why don't you give the pianist just the numbers he needs?" Gilbert was asked.

We do that now with most performers, but the picture pianist wants a set or nothing, and if you don't give him the set very little of your stuff will be seen in his house. Of course, I don't mean that all are this way, but we have no way of telling the good from the bad. If a careless pianist loses a job he often leaves his music behind, knowing how easy it is to collect another stack. He gets it so easily that a bunch of grafters come with printed cards pretending they are picture pianists, and it takes a mind-reading diplomat to distinguish between the real pianists and the fakirs without hurting anyone's feelings. Some performers used to gather sets for their friends. Now we teach a performer the kind of song he wants to use and give him a copy of it. At first they put up a kick, but when they realized that the publisher had to cut expenses in some manner they quit kicking."

"Any other reason that publishers have why exhibitors should pay, Mr. Gilbert?"

"Publishers and writers in the society know that if you wish to use patented ideas of a man's brain you must pay him a royalty, and they can't see why this does not apply to music; and when the cost of production of the patented article increases, the owner tacks on an additional charge. Now every expense item in the music business has increased, but with a few exceptions the price has remained the same. One argument is that moving picture fans buy the bulk of popular music. Many attend shows, first, to see pictures, and, secondly, to hear the kind of music that appeals to them. So the song makers and publishers hold that if the music acts as a drawing card in any sense those deriving a financial benefit from it should be willing to pay for the use of it. Maybe some keen-minded exhibitor may have an argument to offset what I have said. And as I said before, I want to live, and I want to see the other fellow live. And it's much nicer to live in harmony."

As the matter stands, it is a question as to whether the exhibitor can afford to eliminate the popular numbers from the big houses. Is it not possible that the masses will be satisfied with classical music? Will some attempt to buy the exclusive rights to the music for certain territories draw trade from the ranks of the men who have been fighting the issue? In the fight for the principle or pocketbook the exhibitors must not lose sight of future business, while the publishers must see the possibility of exhibitors educating the masses to love classical music and lose their liking for the popular numbers. How it will end we canont tell. What do you think about it?

Ventilating Plant in 300-Seat House

The new Gaiety theatre at Cleveland is a very pretty little theatre of approximately 300 seats. While it is small everything in it is of the best. Indirect lighting is most advantageously arranged. A $2,500 ventilating plant keeps the air sweet and pure. A big Wurlitzer is used. In fact the Gaiety is as complete a theatre as you would want to find anywhere.

Although this is the seventh theatre to be built on the busy cross street that connects Superior avenue to Euclid avenue, competitors express their good will to the new management by literally lining the foyer with elaborate floral pieces.

Only first-run melodramas will be played at the new picture house which opened last week with "The Girl That Didn't Know." The program will be changed twice a week. That is the policy of the house as given out by Max Lefkowitz, manager. "We shall run the best that the market provides," said Lefkowitz, "and our top price will be ten cents. "So far we have entered into contracts with no one except Bluebird, and we shall handle as many of them as are in line with our policy."

B. S. Moss to Build "Wilson" Theatre

B. S. MOSS says the statement in a trade paper last week to the effect that he will not go ahead with the erection of his contemplated $1,000,000 theatre at 181st street and Broadway in entirely erroneous and absolutely without foundation. The assumption of this baseless report was probably brought about by a distortion on some one's part of the new fangled "building zone" law, which temporarily affected Moss' new theatre as well as some new theatres proposed by the B. F. Keith Company.

The so-called "building zone" restriction, which prohibits a theatre within 100 feet of the main thoroughfare in certain districts, has been circumvented by Moss with plans for an adjoining apartment house.

Mr. Moss wants to emphasize the fact that once the way is clear of the red tape, which is all that stands in the way of construction, the new theatre ready to open in the early fall of 1918.

The "Wilson," as it is proposed to call the new house in honor of our President, will take in 200 feet on 181st street, running east to west, 178 feet from the north to the south, and a Broadway frontage of 100 x 178. The seating capacity will run to 3,000. The policy will be in line with the other Moss houses of vaudeville and photoplays.

Old College Hall to Be Theatre

HISTORIC Collge Hall, opposite the Hotel Taft, New Haven, Conn., is to have its turn as the home of moving pictures. A. M. Jacobs, a New Haven business man, has leased the structure for a long term and engaged Samuel Bell, recently manager of the Globe, to run the theatre for him.

Workmen have started an extensive remodeling job, plans indicating an unusually attractive front for the building and seats for about 1,000 spectators. Present indications are that the new theatre will be opened about October 1.

R. P. Matthews Promoted by "Fotoplayer"

ARTHUR B. LEWIS is now manager of the Philadelphia branch of the American Photo Player Company, whose large offices are located in the Parkway Building at Broad and Cherry streets.

R. P. Mathews, former Philadelphia manager, has been made general eastern sales manager.

Three Fotoplayers, style 45 have just been purchased and installed by George Bennethun for his theatres in York, Allentown and Pottstown.

Mr. Dysert will erect a new building on the business lot recently purchased at Rochester, to be occupied by the Kai Gee moving picture theatre conducted by Wilson Bros. Wilson Bros. will combine their shows at the Paramount until the new building is completed.

The Auditorium theatre at Connersville was opened two weeks ago after a period of darkness of fifty days, during which time the whole building has been remodeled. This playhouse, inside the building owned by the Fraternal Order of Eagles, has been converted into one of the most up-to-date theatres to be found in this section of Indiana. At a cost of about fifteen hundred dollars the members of the lodge have employed a force of painters, decorators and skilled workmen. The inside walls and ceilings have been redecorated. They are even more beautiful than the day when the theatre was first opened. The decorative work was carried out under the direction of Lafayette Conwell.

The general color scheme of the whole house is old ivory, soft grays and gold trimmings, with the interior wall panels of old rose silk and the hangings of old rose velour at all the exits and carpets of a darker shade of rose. The contract is let to Calvin Zeigler and calls for the completion of the building by February 1, 1918. A force of fifty men began work last week. The walls are to be of polychrome terra cotta with white and old ivory as a base.

The old Bank theatre in Akron has been all built over, and is practically a new structure. If there is anything in a name, it ought to be the leading show house of the city, for it will henceforth be known as the Maine. Dunlevy will have the management of it.

W. A. Park is building what is said to be the most elaborate, artistic and completely equipped house in this territory. It is also located in Akron, at the corner of North Valley and West Market streets.

New Kansas City House to Cost $700,000

A FINE new motion picture theatre, to appeal to an exclusive patronage, is being built in the business heart of Kansas City by Harding Brothers of Omaha. The site is at the corner of Eleventh and Main streets. The ground, building and equipment, it is said, represent an investment of $700,000. The house is to be opened some time this year.

Sam Harding, one of the brothers, is the owner of the Princess theatre, Omaha, and ranks as one of the veteran exhibitors of the state. He says his new theatre in Kansas City will be one of the most modern and best equapped theatres in the country.

An important feature in equipment will be a $25,000 Austin organ. The seats will be of the highest quality installed by the American Seating Company.

obviously replaces the study of photographic resolving power by two distinct lines of investigation, e.g., the estimation of the turbidity factor, and the determination of the resolving limit of any plate or film being examined.

Most interesting and instructive are Dr. Goldberg's final conclusions which are summed up as follows:

(1). In all cases where, with a common or bad lens, the greatest possible sharpness is required, it is necessary to take care that a negative of the steepest possible gradation is obtained. For this purpose a "hard working" emulsion must be used and full development be given. The same rule also holds where the lens is of the best quality, but the image is affected by the use of a filter or prism. In all these cases want of sharpness due to the resolving power of the plate is of small importance compared to the want of sharpness caused by the optical equipment, because it is far surpassed by the latter.

(2). If a first class lens is used to photograph with, and only the middle of the picture, where the aberrations of the rays are that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

relatively small, is required, then our results will be different from case to case.

a. In case fine structures, e.g., narrow neighboring lines or points, fine drawings, reduced maps, etc., are photographed where all light places of the picture possess the same intensity of light, one need pay no attention to the turbidity factor. With very short exposures the influence of the spreading of a simple line or point (turbidity factor) has no value. On the other hand, the resolving limit of the plate in question in these cases plays a particularly important part.

b. But particular difficulty is offered by the exposures where fine lines or points of differing light intensity must be reproduced close together. Such cases are continually encountered in star photography and in spectrum photography. Here lines or points, the light intensity of which is extraordinarily different (e.g., 1: 1,000,000) lie closely together so that the influence of the turbidity factor surpasses by far all other factors, if a really good lens is used. Short exposures are impossible as the points of small light intensity cannot then be recorded, but with sufficiently long exposure the spreading of the disc is already so strong that the weakly lighted points merge into the images of discs caused by the points of strong light intensity and therefore cannot be perceived. Therefore, in this class of photography, plates must be used which have the smallest possible turbidity factor without regard to their resolving limit.

(3). Process and lantern plates unite a proportionately small degree of turbidity with a good resolving limit. It is, however, not at all impossible that photographic manufacturers may succeed in so improving highly sensitive emulsions, as regards the qualities discussed, that a good resolution can be attained both with short and with long exposures.

(To be continued next week)

The Aislelite

because there was the feeling that it meant a battle to get to the seat, or at least because of the dark passageway from the back to the front of the house, a latecomer would be in danger of stumbling.

The Aislelite eliminates all this. Every inch of the aisle-space becomes a clear, plain pathway of guiding light. The patron can walk to his seat in full confidence of getting there quickly and without trouble. The flashlights in use by ushers are rendered unnecessary by the Aislelight. A patron can find his seat more quickly in a house which has installed the Aislelight. His safety is insured by its use. It makes him surefooted, a consideration, particularly in the case of a steep balcony aisle.

Any wiring contractor can install the device without much trouble. No complicated wiring is necessary. The manager does not have to be constantly thinking of the lights. They never need be turned off during a performance. The electrician does not find it necessary to overhaul them ever so often. They are never in the way, yet they are easy to get at.

The manufacturers have the Aislite in bronze ready for instant delivery. But besides this standard color, they can furnish at short notice the devices to match any seat frame, and this is done without any extra charge.

Except on the balcony stairs, only one is needed for every six rows of seats, when a "stagger" arrangement on each side of the aisle is adopted.

The architectural beauty, the exquisite appointments, the music of the $10,000 pipe organ and of the twenty-five piece orchestra——

——it would all be wasted as a business investment if the pictures were so projected on the vital spot that they offended the eye.

Spiegel Brothers knew this very well, when they built the Newark Theater: one of the most magnificent in the country. So they insured the kind of projection that makes people come again, and again, and again——

Crowds Smash Doors to See "RASPUTIN" at Park Theatre

(Headline in New York Evening World)

New York Evening World:—

"It is not often that a Broadway playhouse has its front door smashed by a crowd of late comers who cannot get even standing room but that is what happened last night at the Park Theatre. The occasion for the demonstration was the first showing of 'Rasputin, The Black Monk,' which proved to be one of the most elaborate moving picture productions that has ever been offered."

New York Tribune:—

"No coupon seats were sold, and the management fondly imagined that roping off a portion of the theatre would secure it for their guests and for the newspaper critics the opening night. ABOUT 10,000 PERSONS CLAMORED FOR ADMISSION, however, and a third that number swarmed into the theatre and helped themselves to the best seats without any assistance from the ushers.

"The picture runs for two hours, but at no time does it fail to entertain."

New York Times:—

"The first public exhibition of Rasputin, The Black Monk,' a motion picture dealing with the Russian revolution, drew so huge a crowd to the vicinity of the Park Theatre last night that it finally became necessary to call out the police reserves. The film, which depicts interestingly the rise to power and subsequent downfall of Russia's celebrated monk, is remarkable."

New York Sun:—

"The Park Theatre HAS NOT IN YEARS HAD SUCH A LARGE THRONG FLOCK TO IT AS THAT WHICH BESIEGED ITS DOORS LAST NIGHT TO VIEW 'RASPUTIN, THE BLACK MONK.' The crowd became so unruly THE POLICE RESERVES HAD TO BE CALLED OUT."

New York Herald:—

"'Rasputin,' William A. Brady's mad monk, was projected at the Park Theatre last night as the chief character in a photoplay founded on the Russian revolution. The crowd that surged about the entrance and struggled for admission was as interesting as the picture. The house was filled before half the crowd could get up to the entrance, and it took twenty minutes to clear the lobby and the street of the overflow."

New York Journal:—

"Montagu Love arises to the heights of his splendid career in his portrayal of the greatest imposter the world has ever known—the man who tumbled over the Russian throne. His acting in the title role in 'Rasputin, The Black Monk,' the World-Picture Brady-Made, which is being presented at the Park Theatre, is a masterpiece.

"Unquestionably it is the best so far seen and is sure to create a sensation everywhere as it is doing at the Park Theatre, where the Brady picture was presented for the first time on Wednesday night before an enormous crowd.

"'Rasputin, The Black Monk' was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Brady. The photography is consistently good, many of the scenes being wonderfully beautiful. It is a picture well worth seeing and will undoubtedly enjoy a long run."

Advanced Motion Photography

¶ Simultaneously with the coming of Perfection Pictures, a new era of advanced motion photography is announced. Not content with attaining PERFECTION in stories, casts, and productions, the makers of Perfection Pictures have set out to establish new high standards of advanced motion photography.

¶ A new method of laboratory procedure has been evolved. A huge machine, weighing fifteen tons and costing $100,000.00, has been invented. It bears the same relation to the motion picture film as the great printing press of the day bears to modern printed literature. It insures to Perfection Pictures unexcelled clearness, brilliancy, and ease of viewing.

¶ This advanced motion photography, exemplified only in Perfection Pictures, is instantly perceptible on the screen. It indicates that in every detail, stories, casts, staging, photography—Perfection Pictures are all that their name suggests—"The Highest Standard in Motion Pictures." Exhibitors may obtain complete details of the Perfection Policy at the Exchanges of the George Kleine System throughout America. A new Perfection Picture in five or six reels is released each week.

When the first Rolin comedy, "Just Nuts," was issued two years ago exhibitors said "Somebody who is a genius made this comedy. We'll take all that he can make."

Many Rolin comedies have been released since that time. The houses that showed "Just Nuts" are today showing regularly the two reel both of which feature

Many new accounts have been added and they have all stuck! Hal Roach has been found by exhibitor and public alike to be a 100% producer. He doesn't know how to make a poor picture. He is the king of laugh makers. You should have these comedies in your house.

The Tests Of Pictures Are: Attendance and Profits

GOLDWYN invites the exhibitors of the world to apply those tests to Goldwyn Pictures and to those splendid productions to be distributed through the Goldwyn sales offices.

Madge Kennedy, who will be seen for the first time on the screen, beginning September 23d, in "Baby Mine," by Margaret Mayo, will measure up to every test that can be applied to a star of a picture. Again we predict, at the moment of her screen debut, that she will be the next great popular favorite with tremendous earning power for exhibitors everywhere.

On October 7 Maxine Elliott, one of the greatest of theatrical stars in popularity and drawing power, makes her first screen appearance in "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb. This picture was directed by Allan Dwan—giving exhibitors every element required for box-office success. A famous and beautiful star, nationally-known authors, a strong play and an able director.

Through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation's offices in North America you are advised to book:

REX BEACH'S greatest screen production, "THE AUCTION BLOCK," soon to be exhibited at trade showings everywhere, and offered under the open booking system.

MARIE DRESSLER COMEDIES, the first of which offers that famous star in "TILLIE: THE SCRUBLADY." Trade showings shortly at all Goldwyn branches. Rented under the open booking system.

Each of these powerful attractions is separately exploited by Goldwyn throughout North America. Every exhibitor who reads this collective announcement will realize at once the strength of the attractions and the stars available only through the Goldwyn organization.

Dear Mr. Brennon-

In answer to your letter of recent date, relative to "The Lone Wolf," played at Proctor's Griswold, we wish to say that it was an exceptional feature and apart from the beaten path.

Our patrons enjoyed it because it kept them continually guessing as to what the climax would be and there were also enough thrills in it to hold one's attention for the entire seven reels. Our patrons like stories of this kind and we have found that features like these are our best money-getters.

Mr. Lytell's work was well liked.

attempt in pictures can be judged by "The Lone Wolf," he surely ought to have a splendid future.

More features like "The Lone Wolf" would be a God-send to exhibitors. More power to you.

My dear Mr. Brenon-

Replying to yours of Sept. 2nd, in re-to LONE WOLF am indeed glad to state that the picture gave excellent satisfaction and personally I reviewed it twice myself, my patrons expressed the same delight in my bringing it to Sedalia, the story was intense and one could not tell what the ending was to be until the very last of the picture, stories of this nature are liked at this time as I think the old ball room stuff, pink teas etc. are on the wane, one reason why the MARY pictures are so popular is for the fact that he has something different and done in a finished way, he always has a little simple love story, as well as thrills and lots of human interest interwoven.

Your Lone Wolf, had all that, you also had the Automobile, Aeroplane, and other modern thrillers, the direction as well as acting and photography was good indeed.

Mr. Lytell is sure to be a favorite, is my prediction.

as to what is liked in Sedalia, I think I am safe in saying that plays with what I have outlined above will always make good, as the "old stuff of wronged girl and society" is about done for.

Thanking you for your inquiry and interest, I am

Dear Sir:-

Replying to your letter of August 23rd relative to "The Lone Wolf" which was played at the Circle Theatre the week of August 12th.

I take pleasure in advising that the picture got over in splendid shape and was quite a sensational success. I think it is a splendid production, quite one of the best and intelligent as this is, spreals so widely. Personally, therefore be of interest to you to know that the Circle's clientele is so exclusive, that it will not like to see you even as melodramatic as this is, quite one of the best things you have done and while I would not like to see you devote your entire artistic genius to stories of "The Lone Wolf", I believe that at frequent intervals you will find that similar stories will enjoy the success of "The Lone Wolf".

I have been familiar with your productions from the earliest days of the motion picture, always admiring your artistic prospective and dramatic conception and trust that the future will provide even greater opportunity for a fuller expression of your work. Very truly yours, is now ready for immediate delivery to buyers of territorial rights, together with challenging lithographs and all necessary accessories

with ILIODOR

THIS panoramic production of a nation's dissolution is the history of the day and the moment —bigger than any melodrama ever written.

Its principals are the rulers of the world's great nations lifted bodily out of history in the making and portrayed by famous men and women of the screen.

The story is a picturization of the front pages of every newspaper in the world each day for the past six months and will continue to be for months to come.

Fifty million dollars in cash could not have bought the publicity already obtained for this production.

It is the only picture that will be shown in America with THE REAL ILIODOR as one of its principals, as we have taken legal action under our contract to prevent the imitation of our title or any use whatever of Iliodor's fame and reputation by promoters seeking to market another picture on the strength of Herbert Brenon's remarkab e campaign in behalf of his own master-work.

He is the master who appealed to the world's love of beauty with "A Daughter of the Gods."

He is the daring director who challenged the world's conscience with his "War Brides."

He is the director of the most remarkable screen melodrama ever made, "The Lone Wolf."

He is the maker of stars and the creator of publicity and exploitation that is the envy of the trade.

Buyers of territorial rights to "THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS" therefore are obtaining as their biggest of all exploitation elements behind this mighty picturization of world history THE POWER OF HERBERT BRENON'S REPUTATION as the director of profit-making productions.

Gentlemen:-

I have just closed a most successful EIGHT weeks engagement of "THE WHIP". Four Hundred and Four performances at Quinn's Rialto, on Broadway Los Angeles. This being the record of any picture ever shown here considering the number of shows.

Due to previous bookings I was unable to keep it on longer, however I am not through with the film as I intend to run it for some time to come at other down town houses and the suburban theatres as well. The business done on "THE WHIP" would warrant from four to five weeks more at Quinn's Rialto as can be seen by flash light taken at the last of the Eight week.

The WHIP is a production for the masses and a most pleasing picture. Patrons of this house have remarked at the Box Office that it was their fourth fifth and even sixth time, having seen it therefore the reason that "THE WHIP" holds the record not only for this theatre but for the entire city.

PARALTA PLAYS WILL NOT

Be Distributed by Triangle Distributing Corporation!

THE contract between Paralta Plays, Inc., and Triangle Distributing Corporation has been abrogated by mutual consent.

In this agreement it was provided that should Stephen A. Lynch sell his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation, the contract with Paralta should terminate.

On September 10, Mr. Lynch notified Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., that he was about to dispose of his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation. All contractual relations between the two corporations were then annulled by consent of both parties.

THIS situation in no way affects the activities of the Paralta organization, which has expended over ONE MILLION DOLLARS since it was organized in March last and now has ready to release six big star feature pictures—"A MAN'S MAN," "MADAM WHO," "ROSE O' PARADISE." TURN OF A CARD," "ALIMONY" and "THE GOLDEN THREAD"—with which to demonstrate the value of its original idea. Exhibitors may secure Paralta Plays under the Paralta Plan exactly in the manner previously advertised.

Five companies are now engaged in work on productions at the Paralta studios at Hollywood, Cal., and in sixty days Paralta will have five more big star feature attractions ready for distribution.

EVERY exhibitor owes it to himself to wait and see all these Paralta pictures before booking his time solidly for the season. Do not lock your doors against such obviously big money-drawing propositions as these photo-plays by entirely filling your time.

Paralta's plans are now completed and work is in progress on an output of fifty-two big star feature attractions to be completed before the first anniversary of the organization of its studios, June 4, 1918.

PARALTA PLAYS

PICK OF THE PICTURES

The Following Brains, Talents and Personalities Are Combined In Making PARALTA PLAYS:

Stars

Bessie Barriscale, who has brought the purest delight to the hearts of countless millions the world over.

J. Warren Kerrigan, the first big screen star, and his popularity growing vaster day by day.

Henry B. Walthall, the master genius of poetic romance; whose rank in photoplay is that of Edgar Allan Poe in literature.

Rhea Mitchell, unequalled in portrayal of intense emotions. At her bidding you weep, you hate, you love.

Howard Hickman, a lovable old man to-day, a dashing young blood to-morrow. His art so great, you like him even as a scheming villain.

Clara Williams, always human, sympathetic, and impulsive. The embodiment of all that is sweet and tender.

Lois Wilson, whose fascinating personality and superb skill have earned her the epithet: "The Splendid Girl."

Stories

PARALTA PLAYS, Inc., has made a definite and conclusive arrangement whereby the exclusive optional screen rights of all books and stories, present and future, by the following well-known authors are reserved for PARALTA PLAYS:

Thus the following are a few of the authors from now on working with PARALTA:

MRS. WILSON WOODROW
CHARLES NEVILLE BUCK
LARRY EVANS
ETHEL S. and JAMES F. DORRANCE
FREDERICK ARNOLD KUMMER
"TEX" O'REILLY
RUPERT HUGHES

In addition, the Paralta scenario department is headed by Monte Katterjohn under whose supervision are sixteen writers and dramatists engaged in originating screen plays and adapting material accepted by the board of directors.

Studios

PARALTA PLAYS are directed by

Reginald Barker, whose unforgetable productions such as "Shell 43"—"The Bugle Call"—"Sweetheart of the Doomed"—"The Sign of the Rose"—"The Typhoon"—etc., have made fortunes for exhibitors and distributors.

Oscar Apfel, with an enviable record of super production turned out by him for Metro, Fox, Paramount, and his masterpiece of direction, "A MAN'S MAN," the first PARALTA PLAY starring J. WARREN KERRIGAN.

Raymond B. West, an ardent disciple of Thomas Ince, outgrowing his environs—his genius surely outdistancing even his former master. One of the fourteen really great directors of motion pictures.

These men have produced great photoplays in the past, under difficulties, fighting their way to the top. Now they are arrived, and it is by way of under-statement to say that their past records vouch for the excellence of PARALTA PLAYS.

And there is

ROBERT BRUNTON, in the capacity of Manager of Productions. It was only while HE was general art director in the Culver City studios that Triangle pictures reached their zenith. His achievements in the motion picture field are too well known to warrant recital. Suffice it to say that PARALTA PLAYS, Inc., considers it a stroke of good fortune to have secured the services of this art master.

Suffice it to say that PARALTA PLAYS, Inc., considers it a stroke of good fortune to have secured the services of this art master.

We are naming only the very mountain tops of the organization in whose hands rests the production of PARALTA PLAYS. These men have gathered around them a most complete executive and working personnel. Admitted by all, our organization is the finest on the Coast.

—ask the Accessory People

WE pointed last week to the audited tests of the circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS showing:—

Less than ONE PER CENT waste circulation—practically ONE HUNDRED PER CENT paid circulation—

A VERY REMARKABLE SHOWING! The successful result of a basic and definite policy—to build a non-wasteful, full-value, reading circulation!

We also called attention to the false value of circulation figures—the ease with which they can be swollen—the fact that 100,000 circulation, even though paid for, is valueless to just the extent of the number of copies that are not read.

There's another good test—Mr. Advertiser—by which you can gauge circulation value, besides your own good judgment in estimating any paper's reading value.

Look at its theatre equipment advertising! Find out how much of this class of advertising is carried—and if it is carried continuously.

Telephone or write some of these advertisers and get their opinion of the publication.

These advertisers are in a position to know.

They are after inquiries and orders. They won't continue advertising unless they get these definite results.

Unlike the film advertiser they can check results—and these results are proof positive that a paper's columns are read, from cover to cover—and respected.

It's an easy and quick way. It beats audit figures all hollow.

Try it.

"The Duplicity of Hargraves"

Here is just another of those fine dramas of human hearts and sentiment that made "O. HENRY'S" magic pen a lasting force in literature.

Produced under the direction of THOS. R. MILLS, pioneer of the O. Henry interpreters for the screen, a telling, forceful, soul-satisfying human document has been turned into a picture which will cling to memory.

Such delightful players as CHARLES KENT, J. FRANK GLENDON and MYRTIS MORGAN respectively portray the courtly old Southern relic, Major Talbot, his prim, wistful daughter, Lydia, and the grateful, genteel vaudeville actor, Hargraves.

High Rentals and Better Retailing

LAST week we opened a discussion of the high rental situation. We gave it as our opinion that the facts must be faced; that the facts are that high rentals are with us, that the majority of exhibitors are paying them—even while the kicking is loudest.

We also declared that in our belief there are many cases where local conditions lend strong justice to the exhibitors' complaint against rental boosts. We also contended that these cases must receive more mature consideration, more reasonable handling—that business policies which kill the retailer are business suicide.

But it is with the first-mentioned condition that we wish to deal particularly this week.

High rentals are here—they are being paid.

They cannot be paid at a loss—there must be profits. What is to be done?

* * * * *

WE cited the concrete instance of a Chicago exhibitor who last year chalked up a profit in five figures and this year—after making his new contracts—expects a loss running into the same total.

Our investigator found him helpless. He is unable to make a single step to meet the situation.

Profits had rolled into him year after year simply because he owned a picture theatre, booked a program methodically, and threw his doors open to the public at so much a head.

He does not know how he made his profits; he consequently is unarmed when facing a situation that calls for increased returns.

It may be harsh—it may not be politic, but we must say that we believe this exhibitor to be typical of a very important phase of the high rental case.

The truth may hurt, but the trade paper that praises Peter cannot condemn Paul.

The truth proven by this concrete example is that a better knowledge of retailing is sadly needed by many theatre owners, that the picture theatre is progressing only through the efforts of the comparatively few exponents of high-class retail methods, that the word "average" is still too largely representative of the country-store type of merchant.

WHAT is better retailing as applied to the picture theatre?

Perhaps we can tell best what it is not.

It is not being satisfied to run an establishment carrying goods as high in quality as present-day pictures are and yet catering only to the low-brow and his elder brother the "fan."

It is not following the line of least resistance in stocking your shelves and remaining in ignorance of the other products on the market, of their prices, methods of marketing and adaptability to your needs.

It is not being satisfied with advertising methods that reach only ten per cent of possible patronage.

Too many picture exhibitors as business men—merchandisers—are negative quantities. They take what comes their way—and get no more.

Too few—comparatively—are affirmative, creative, forcing results. These latter get what comes their way—and take more.

* * * * *

THE present high rental situation has but precipitated realization of this truth.

The realization had to come—sooner or later—and at a bitter cost any time.

To those exhibitors whom the cap fits let the realization be a prompting to action. Study your business, every phase of it just as you expect your doctor to have studied his profession.

Study your present patronage—and study even more your possible patronage, those neighbors who pass your theatre by but never fail to attend the Rialto or Strand of the nearest big city on their trips there.

The local department store demands less careful, capable merchandizing direction than your theatre. Are you giving it as much?

* * * * *

WE repeat our last week's declaration: These columns are open to a wide and free discussion of the high rental situation.

We have discussed one phase here, there are other angles, some of a different hue. We shall treat of them from time to time.

Speaking Editorially:

Not Through the Woods

REPORTS from Washington would indicate that we are still far from being through the woods on the theatre war tax question.

This confirms the statement we made before the exhibitor conventions in Chicago, and have repeated since as evidence of the need for real harmony and co-operation among all branches.

The need is also shown for every exhibitor to keep in constant touch with his Representative. This is an all-year-round need—now and at all times.

Mark it on your memorandum pad—and make it a permanent reminder to action.

"Filling a Long Felt Want"

THE lay mind longs to see a dramatic critic produce a play, a book reviewer write a book, and the poltical writer hold an official post.

Perhaps, in this spirit, one may say that C. F. Zittel's appointment to the International directorship fills the well-known and justly famous long-felt want.

But the issue is somewhat clouded by the fact that Mr. Zittel's close touch with all phases of the picture industry dates back twenty years.

"Zit" fills the want—but also seems capable of "filling the shoes."

Aloha!

WE are in receipt of a letter from the Hawaiian Society of Public Information, calling attention to anachronisms and other errors that have crept into American production of Hawaiian life. The Society claims that "Grass skirts aren't worn any more."

The criticism can be answered in two ways:

1. Very well and good.

2. But, gentlemen of the fairest isles, isn't it true that grass skirts were worn?

Does the society object to having Hawaii's very entertaining past delved into?

Service the Stabilizer

SERVICE is the stabilizer of the industry.

When the manufacturer is able to reduce the selling cost by building satisfied customers who make money out of his pictures, and the exhibitors in turn give greater service to their patrons which brings more money into the box office, this entire industry is going to enjoy a much greater degree of prosperity and the greater share of the suspicion removed.

When the exhibitor honestly tries to get the most possible money out of each picture, he is going to be surprised by the increase in his revenue; and the manufacturer will find his own costs reduced because he does not have to sell his film service over and over again to each theatre. Lower selling costs are obliged to be reflected in either lower charges to the exhibitor or in better pictures.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS urges the exhibitor to put real service behind each picture that he shows. The Exhibitors' Service Bureau is reflecting the best thought of the country on service, and is offering you individual aid on specific points. When you take advantage of this service you are making yourself one of the strong links in the industry, you are helping to stabilize the industry and you are insuring your own future.

Up and at 'Em

SO the film pirates are busy again! Hardly anything we can think of has less intrinsic value—and more potential value—than a spool of motion picture film.

In itself—discounting the junking value of worn-out celluloid—a tin can of pictures only represents money. It has no monetary equivalent until and unless it is used.

A thief has to work the reel—and work it hard—to get out the money that his hazard justifies.

Pirating films is "easy money." A thief is sorely tempted.

He ought to be easy to catch—that film pirate.

But the scourge is nation-wide.

We are glad to read that film men are up in arms. We hope they have luck.

Prosperity in the Offing

GOOD crops and top prices in the Southeast and Mid-West are having their reflection in the reports reaching New York through visiting film men.

After a summer more than ordinarily dull in many sectons independent buyers now report a bright and active outlook. The reports are reassuring, for the Fall season, active enough in producing centers, has seen a hesitant awakening in the exchange ranks.

And now, from patrons to exhibitors, exhibitors to exchanges and back to New York comes the Prosperty note.

Filmland is ready—ready for "business better than usual."

High Rental and Better Retailing

But on all points, every side—we would like to hear your views. Our columns are yours.

* * * * *

PARTICULARLY do we want to hear from the exhibitor who considers himself a good retailer. We want to know his problems—we want to learn if these problems are the common lot.

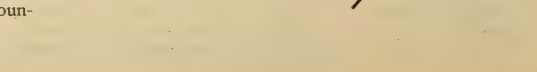
We don't believe they are.

We don't expect to hear the good retailer-exhibitor declare, "I can only get a certain class in my theatre; there's no use trying for the others."

We don't expect to hear the real showman say, "Oh, advertising and mail lists, and personality stuff may be all right for the big theatres—but not for me."

We don't expect to see the live wires—whether their houses seat three hundred or three thousand—throw up their hands and say, "Oh well, I'll take a loss for a while until I'm able to unload on some holding company."

But let us hear from him anyway—let us hear from all.



S. A. Lynch Leaves Triangle and Paralta Withdraws

President of Distributing Co. Concludes His Relations—Expected He Will Return to the South—Paralta Decides to Distribute Film Through Another Medium—Break Comes After Mutual Decision to Disregard Contract

THE contract between Paralta and Triangle, entered into on June 30 last, and by the terms of which Triangle was to handle the distribution of the subjects of the former concern, has been abrogated.

Rumors of the split have been prevalent for some time, and official confirmation was given last Saturday by Paralta. The withdrawal of Stephen A. Lynch from Triangle—a move not entirely unexpected, is also revealed in the Paralta announcement.

Contract Hinged on Lynch's Move

The contract between Paralta and Triangle is stated to have been more the result of the personal friendship existing between Mr. Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., and Stephen A. Lynch, of Triangle, than anything else. When this agreement was entered into it was said to have been with the distinct understanding that should Mr. Lynch sell his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation, the contract with Paralta should terminate.

Mr. Lynch notified Mr. Anderson September 10, that he was about to dispose of his interest in the Triangle Distributing Corporation. At that time the abrogation of the contract between Paralta and Triangle was taken up and during the past week the contractual relationship existing between the two corporations was brought to an amicable termination by mutual agreement of the parties interested.

Paralta's Activities Unaffected

This situation it is announced will not have any effect on the activities of the Paralta organization. Plans made weeks ago for a wide extension of its producing interests will be carried forward as rapidly as possible. Paralta now has six big feature photodramas completed and ready for distribution. This list comprised J. Warren Kerrigan in Peter B. Kyne's, "A Man's Man" and Frederick Chapin's, "Turn of a Card"; Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's, "Madam Who" and Grace Miller White's, "Rose o' Paradise," and two State Rights productions, "Alimony" by Hayden Talbot, and "The Golden Tread" by Thomas J. Geraghey, based on an original story by William E. Wing. Paralta also now has five companies working on productions at the Paralta studio in Hollywood. In two months five more big feature photoplays will be added to its output.

Work was begun at the Paralta studio on the West Coast, June 4, last, when J. Warren Kerrigan and Bessie Barriscale started filming "A Man's Man" and "Rose o' Paradise." When the anniversary of its first year as a producer, June 4, 1918, is reached on the calendar, Paralta intends to have made the record of fifty-two star feature productions.

Organization a Complete One

Paralta Studios on the West Coast are conducted under the general direction of Robert T. Kane, vice-president of Paralta Plays, Inc. Robert Brunton is studio manager. Mr. Brunton came to America with the late Sir Henry Irving, with whom he was connected for several years in the capacity of art director in the staging of the famous actor-manager's dramatic productions at the London Lyceum theatre. After a brief connection with New York theatrical productions, Mr. Brunton joined the Triangle producing interests at Culver City and directed the staging of many of its early great successes.

Arrangements have been made with very noted authors to contribute to Paralta Plays, among which may be mentioned Rupert Hughes, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Frederic Arnold Kummer, "Tex" O'Reilly, Charles Nelville Buck and Harry Evans.

Special Productions Planned

Special productions made and distributed under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc., will present such well known players as Howard Hickman, Rhea Michell, Clara Williams and Lois Wilson, in photodramas by famous authors, especially adapted to their personalities.

In the State Rights' field, artistic productions will also be made and distributed under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, well exemplified in the first two efforts made in this direction—"Alimony," founded on an original scenario written by Hayden Talbot, and "The Golden Thread," written by Thomas G. Geraghty, based on an original story by William E. Wing. It is intended that these special State Right productions shall prove exceptionally valuable propositions to State Rights' operators.

Kaplan Winds Up Business, Returns to Russia

Russian Producer Signs Up with Pathe and Returns to Moscow for Further Film Endeavor—Will Take Cameraman If Permitted in this country to market his productions.

WITH plans completed for the release through the Pathe Co. of the screen productions of the Moscow Art theatre, N. S. Kaplan, president of the Russian Art Film Corporation, has engaged pasage from Vancouver for October 25 and will return to Moscow to continue the production of film features for the American market.

Unless government obstacles are placed in his way he will have in his party a cameraman and studio manager, thereby assuring the continuation of the Russian repertory under the best possible auspices.

The launching of the repertory in America has been a tremendous task because of the handicap of cutting and titling the pictures in New York, thousands of miles from the base of production. This handicap will be eliminated under the new program and the features will arrive in the United States ready for release.

An intimated last week, Mr. Kaplan has obtained the cooperation of one of the most important distributing organizations

Until final papers are signed, however, he prefers to make no announcement of the complete arrangements.

With a year's supply of features on hand before any release is made, it is the intention of Mr. Kaplan and his associates in America to institute a program of one release a week. In addition to this program later there will be a series of special features under the exclusive direction of Mme. Sophie Kaplan.

"After reading many, many scenarios written by American authors," said Mme. Kaplan, "I am convinced that best results will be obtained by adhering to our previous policy of Russian stories for Russian stars. After all, the fundamental emotions are international and I believe that American playgoers will welcome the tense, dramatic plots and the quiet but effective methods of our stars. But I am also convinced that the best results can be obtained by a combination of our resources and yours."

Smokes Campaign Forging Ahead in Various Sections

Cigarettes and Money Are Coming In, Not in Streams, but in Encouraging Amounts—More Exhibitors Needed to Put the Campaign on Its Feet Properly—All Patrons Are Willing

THE motion picture division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" is making progress, not the overwhelming progress that it will eventually attain; nevertheless checks and bundles of cigarettes are arriving, and the horizon is promising.

The receipts of cigarettes so far aggregate more than 25,000; cash receipts are $66.36. These returns represent the turnover of only fourteen theatres; and inasmuch as more than one thousand "Drop a Penny" and "Drop a Cigarette" cards have been sent out, the actual receipts which have not yet been turned over to MOTION PICTURE NEWS should be well up in the hundreds of dollars.

From the Los Angeles office of MOTION PICTURE NEWS the following letter has been received:

Attached herewith please find check No. 1,260 for $34.56 in payment of the following collections at Los Angeles theatres for the cigarette campaign:

Gentlemen:—

Enclosed find check for $1.10, first week of cigarette campaign. If you have some larger cards and can send some publicity stuff to the Maryville Enterprise, the local paper, I think we can do better. Maryville is small and narrow-minded and the majority of folks here look upon that bowl as a kind of skin game or graft for the house. I have given it some publicity in my program this week and hope to have a larger check next week. It is a great movement and should be kept going.

Very truly yours,
Dreamland theatre,

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

Whole Industry Is Hot After Film Thieves—Arrests

Committee of N. A. M. P. I., Headed by P. A. Powers, Appointed to Halt Pirates and Jail the Guilty—Burns Men Are on the Trail—Two First Prosecuted Held to Grand Jury

PROSECUTIONS have begun to drive the film pirates and thieves out of the business Already arrests have been made and the accused persons held to the grand jury.

So important is the crusade that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has appointed a special committee to formulate plans for halting film thefts altogether—if it is possible to do this. Hundreds of complaints have been received of film stealing in widely scattered points over the country, indicating that an organized band is engaged in the thieveries. Some concern posing as a legitimate producing company may distribute forged films.

Whole Industry Alert

In the committee named for the industry as a whole are the following: P. A. Powers, Universal; Ricord Cradwell, World; R. A. Rowland, Metro; J. A. Berst, Pathe; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky; Walter W. Irwin, Vitagraph; John R. Freuler, Mutual, and Stephen A. Lynch, Triangle.

The Mutual Film Corporation began an initial prosecution this week, causing the arrest of Sidney Hoffman, film distributor of No. 729 Broadway, and Joseph Quadrini, manager of a motion picture house at Smith and Sackett streets, Brooklyn. They were held to the Grand Jury in $1,000 bonds by Magistrate Corrigan in Manhattan.

Hoffman lives at Valley Cottage, New York, and Quadrini at 246 Van Brunt street, Brooklyn. The specific charge against the two men was that they had violated Section No. 1,308 of the Penal Code of New York in having wrongfully appropriated and stolen from the premises of the Mutual Film Corporation at 1219 Vine street, Philadelphia, two moving picture films used in the Chaplin production known as "Easy Street."

Court Hearing of Men Arrested

The Mutual Film Corporation called as its first witness Joseph Margold, who testified that he was shipping clerk at the Philadelphia plant. He stated: "I am certain that the films before me were not shipped, for the reason that I had no order for their leaving the plant."

General Manager G. B. Swenson, of the Mutual Film Corporation, testified: "Since I have been identified with the corporation on January 1 of this year we have not sold films to exhibitors. It is our custom to lease the films, and the minimum figure at which the films in evidence are leased is $15 per day."

Quadrini admitted that he had paid but $5 per day for the Chaplin films.

Five Dollars for Chaplins

Richard R. King, of 511 West 111th street, New York, an investigator for the William J. Burns Detective Agency, affirmed: "I was engaged by Manager Swenson to locate the missing films. Within a few days I found that such films as I was tracing were being used at the Brooklyn moving picture establishment, of which Joseph Quadrini is manager.

"I questioned Quadrini as to who had supplied the films to him. His answer was, 'I leased them from Sidney Hoffman, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York.'"

Nahan Koskovici, who conducts a moving picture house at 365 First avenue, affirmed: "I called on Sidney Hoffman at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, on the same afternoon that the films were returned to Hoffman at his office on the eighth floor of the Seventh avenue building by that man (pointing to Quadrini). I arranged to get the films at a daily rental of $5 per day."

Assistant District Attorney Lazarus maintained Hoffman's acquaintance with film price schedules made it reasonable for him to assume that Chaplin reels could not be supplied honestly at the price at which it had been testified he had supplied them.

Magistrate Corrigan then held Hoffman and Quadrini to the Grand Jury.

President Brady Presents Appointments at Quarterly Meeting Held on September 20—Goldwyn Joins the Association

THE quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held on September 20, with President William A. Brady presiding, at which time the administrative committees for the ensuing year were perfected. The appointments for members of the Executive Committee made by President Brady were approved by the Board and comprise the following: Walter W. Irwin, chairman, Vitagraph V-L-S-E; J. A. Berst, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; Arthur S. Friend, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Richard A. Rowland, Metro Pictures Corporation; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal and Louis L. Levine of the Exhibitors' League, and William A. Johnston, representing the General Division.

Prior to the directors' meeting a special meeting of the members of the association was held, when an amendment to the by-laws was voted increasing the membership of the Executive Committee from nine to twelve.

President Brady announced the appointment of a permanent committee on expositions as follows: William A. Brady, president, ex-officio; J. A. Berst, J. E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, J. H. Hallberg, Gabriel L. Hess, W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers and William L. Sherrill. The directors contend that with the two expositions for next year the manufacturers, distributors and supply and equipment companies should not be called upon to participate in any additional expositions, balls or similar propositions where advertising space is solicited, and it was decided to refer all such matters to the Joint Exposition Committee, of which Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott will act as secretary.

Announcement has previously been made that an exposition will be held in New York next February, followed by one in Boston in July, both of which will be under the joint auspices of the N. A. M. P. I. and the M. P. E. L. of A.

At the meeting a communication was presented from Rev. Christian F. Reisner requesting co-operation on behalf of the association. This was granted and Secretary Elliott was given power to arrange for the programs which Dr. Reisner and his associates, representing the International Board of Sunday Schools, comprising five million children, may require.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation was elected as a member of the association and will be represented in the distributors' branch by President Samuel Goldfish. The following individual members were elected: Benn H. Grimm, John F. Chalmers, James L. Hoff, George F. Blaisdell, Archibald McArthur, Jr., Randall M. White, James A. Milligan and Anthony P. Kelly.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has been elected to active membership in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America and will be represented in that body by President Brady and Secretary Elliott.

The organization of the several branches has been perfected, with the exception of the general division, which is to be called together early in October. Adolph Zukor is chairman of the Producers' Committee, Walter W. Irwin, chairman of the Distributors' Branch, and J. E. Brulatour, chairman of the Supply and Equipment Division.

It was reported that the Service Bureau, which is a new adjunct of the association, will be ready for business as soon as headquarters can be established.

The resignation of Arthur James as a vice-president and director of the association was accepted. This vacancy will be filled at the forthcoming meeting of the General Division, of which Mr. James was one of the representatives.

Meeting of Exhibitors

Members of the M. P. E. L. of A., Manhattan Local No. 1, are to meet at 1.30 p. m., Sept. 24, at 218 W. 42nd Street, to consider the operators' wage scale, and the proposed Federal tax on theatres charging over five cents admission.

Patch, Disgusted with "Big Features," Will Produce Himself

Foremost Pittsburgh Exhibitor Deplores Imitators of Griffith—Will Produce Plays for Legitimate Stage—Film Productions "to Be Second Only to Griffith"—Still Has Faith in Big Features

WILLIAM MOORE PATCH, president and managing director of the Fort Pitt theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., has issued a statement from his New York offices in the Times building in which he deplores the standard now reached by "big features," and declaring that he will shortly oust "big features" from his theatre and substitute legitimate drama. Further along in his announcement, Mr. Patch says he will produce film features himself, "second only to Griffith's."

During the past two years Mr. Patch has maintained, at the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh, an unbroken policy of big pictures with two exhibitions daily at a scale of admission prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. In addition to D. W. Griffith's spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," which ran five months at the Pitt theatre, other films, such as "The Battle Cry of Peace," "A Daughter of the Gods," "Intolerance," "The Crisis," "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," and "Civilization," have all enjoyed engagements of from four to eleven weeks.

Coincident with Mr. Patch's statement on the big picture situation in general, comes his announcement of a complete change of policy for the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh—a change that involves the elimination of all pictures, save two or three each year which can be presented in such a manner as to bring two dollars into the box office.

Has Been Successful

Mr. Patch's decision in this matter is remarkable because it is well known that he has achieved success with his big picture policy in Pittsburgh at two dollar admission prices. He states that his present decision is based on a determination to maintain the high standard of his house, even at the cost of sacrificing the policy he has built up.

In place of photodramatic spectacles during the coming Winter, the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh will house a resident company of the best players obtainable, for the purpose of trying out new plays, many of which will be produced later in New York, Chicago and Boston.

A month or two ago Mr. Patch opened his own offices in New York on the 19th floor of the Times building. He intends establishing the Pitt theatre in Pittsburgh as a base not only to try out new plays for himself but for a number of other prominent New York producers who are seeking a place to test their plays before they are produced on Broadway. In other words, Mr. Patch intends doing in Pittsburgh what Mr. Morosco has succeeded in doing in Los Angeles; and as Pittsburgh is only a night away from New York there is no reason to doubt the eventual success of his plan.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Pitt theatre will house legitimate attractions in the future, however, Mr. Patch is not going to give up his interest in big pictures. Any feature films that he considers worth two dollars will be produced on an elaborate scale at the Pitt theatre from time to time throughout the Winter.

Will Produce Himself

It is also an open secret that Mr. Patch intends to take up the production of pictures himself, in the very near future—and on a scale second only to that set by D. W. Griffith.

Confirming his decision in regard to the Pitt theatre, Mr. Patch made the following statement from his offices in the Times building last week:

"It is useless to deny the gravity of the big picture situation in America. Since Mr. Griffith first produced 'The Birth of a Nation' and followed it with his still more remarkable spectacle, 'Intolerance,' every big picture producer in America has been vainly striving to imitate him—with most disastrous results.

"The main trouble seems to be that outside of Mr. Griffith, there are few producers of big pictures in America who possess enough gray matter to know the requisites of a big picture. Most of the would-be Griffiths imagine that by squandering a fortune, and exhibiting on the screen scenes which reveal a prodigious expenditure of money, they satisfy the public. The fundamental principles of entertainment are completely ignored by these men. Logic, human interest, sincerity and even common sense do not enter into their scheme of things. It all seems to be a mad rush to turn out by the mile a mass of film that reveals neither logical forethought, artistry, nor even a decent regard for ordinary dramatic effect.

"Since last June I have sat through sixty-two so-called big pictures and I have only seen two that could be classed under that category. There is no use in mentioning these pictures—except to say that they will be shown at the Pitt theatre later on in the season.

"I furthermore desire to call attention to the state of chaos now existing in the business end of the picture industry in America.

How Griffith Ruins Producers

"It is said that Mr. Griffith has sent more producers into bankruptcy than any man alive. Of course he is unconscious of all the crimes he has committed in this connection; for he cannot stop a mob of inferior people from attempting to imitate him. However that may be, since 'The Birth of a Nation' first took the United States by storm, he has had thousands of imitators, but no competitors.

"One of the direct results of this has been the placing of hundreds of inferior pictures in big theatres along Broadway, charging advanced prices for them (when they were not worth 25 cents) forcing their runs, and then deceiving small exhibitors throughout the United States as to the exact business done. These small exhibitors, in consequence, have paid fabulous prices for inferior pictures and have lost thousands of dollars thereby. They now form an indignant body of 'wise old owls,' who are thoroughly alive as to what does and what does not constitute a big picture.

"The Fort Pitt Theatre Company of Pittsburgh is now directing the American tour of the Official War Films of the Italian Government, called 'The Italian Battlefront.' These films, to get away from picture figures, have done a good business everywhere. But we are having some unique experiences with them.

"Our offices are crowded with small exhibitors who want to play the pictures, but who sincerely believe that we are liars, and that we have done no business at all. Some of the less timid exhibitors book the picture, and they are stupified to find that they make good. There is no use in showing the others box-office statements, because they believe they are faked. The only thing we can do is to exercise the patience of Job and bide our time. Slowly but surely exhibitors throughout the country are beginning to hear about the Italian war films and the business they are doing."

Will Be More Big Films

When Mr. Patch was asked whether in his opinion there would be any more big pictures in the future, he stated:

"To say that there will be no more big pictures, is rank foolishness. The camera is the most marvelous invention of the age. Its scope is limitless and its possibilities are nowhere near perfected. As matters stand at present, however, the big picture, as an art, has been well-nigh ruined in America by an army of inferior men who possess no brains at all; and the pity of it is that pictorial entertainment is one that demands more intelligence, more forethought and more artistry than any other form of amusement

"The human voice, a very necessary element towards perfecting any illusion, is absent; and one must depend upon facial expression, grace of movement and the most adroit subtlety to convey one's message to an audience He who is stupid in the legitimate theatre, therefore, is doubly stupid in the production of pictures The real tragedy of the entire situation lies in the fact that the majority of stupid people in the American theatre seem to have chosen the making of pictures as a profession.

"I would like to say a great deal more along these lines and be more specific, but I am sure I have said enough already to convey my views.

Wants to Be Sued

"My fondest hope is that all those who consider themselves big picture producers in the United States will form a combine and sue me for libel. Then I will have an opportunity to reveal to the public generally the extraordinary conditions now existing in the motion picture industry in this country.

"In the meantime there is nothing for

"Zit" Has Big Plans for International Reconstruction

Widely Known Theatrical Critic of Evening Journal Takes Charge of I. F. S.—Expounds Views on Picture Industry and Gives Advance Hint of His Plans for International

FAR reaching plans for the reorganization of the International Film Service, and the enlargement of its sphere of activities in the picture field, were instituted last week with the appointment of C. F. Zittel, known as "Zit" to the theatregoers of the world, to take charge of the reconstruction work.

"Zit's" column of breezy converse on theatrical topics is, without doubt, one of the most widely read in the country. His name has for a score of years been associated with the drama. Yet, though known as a critic, Mr. Zittel has always prided himself on giving, in his columns in the New York Evening Journal, nothing but constructive criticism, leaving to other journalists the critical "knocking" of plays.

Having but taken office the middle of last week, Mr. Zittel is not as yet ready to fully announce his plans for International. In an interview, however, he told in a general way of the course to be steered, and at the same time gave in a general way, his views on motion picture production.

To Specialize on Futures

"I am here simply to reconstruct," he said. "The plans for production in the future on the part of International, lean strongly to features. Five, six, eight or ten reel pictures—the length does not matter so long as the story is there, will be made. Comedy, drama, and comedy-drama subjects will be made. Probably the first of our new features to be released will be 'Hearts of Three' from Jack London's story.

"Serials will be produced in collaboration with the Pathe Company, as in the past. And let me say, the Pathe-International Pictures have proved the greatest attractions in the business.

"I am not giving up my Evening Journal work, but am merely here to start the new machinery going.

"Zit" an M. P. Pioneer

"The question will arise—what does "Zit" know of the motion picture business? Well, I do claim to have opened the first department for motion pictures in any daily newspaper of the country—that on the Evening Journal. Twenty years ago I promoted picture shows in Cooper's Fourteenth street store in New York, and also in the Eric Brothers store, gave a change of program daily, as many shows as I wished—and paid but $18 a week for the service. Conditions have changed since then, particularly in exchange prices, but I have always kept close to the screen industry."

Here Mr. Zittel suggested a novel idea for the betterment of pictures now put out. Pointing to the fact that a picture made could not be recalled for a change of cast, or in its "lines," he said:

"If the manufacturers would send for the motion picture critics to 'sit in' at times during the making of a photoplay they would obtain criticism and suggestions of such a nature as would greatly benefit their picture. I have made it a rule not to 'knock' plays. I am for the man who spends his money on a production, but I will tell him what I don't like in his play—and that I believe is best all around."

"Long Runs Bring Business"

Mr. Zittel is a firm believer in longer runs of pictures. His argument is this: "One person leaving a picture house, liking a picture he or she has seen, will tell five others in the neighborhood. But when these others come next day, the play is gone. If the theatre owners would realize that quick 'repeats' would bring more people for three or four days than were drawn the first day a good picture was shown, the whole industry would benefit. The manufacturer would not be pestered continually for new subjects. The production standard would consequently be raised with more time and care allowed to each photoplay. But the rebookings must be made quickly. The public soon forgets."

Advocating the building of big theatres to be run on the general plan of the Strand and Rialto theatres in New York, Zit said:

Room for More Big Theatres

"Why concentrate the bigger, better houses within a few blocks as is the case in New York. The people are hungry for high-class picture theatres. A Strand could be built in the Bronx. A Rialto could draw the Harlem crowds. Brooklyn would support a number of such houses. The same applies to all big cities. One criticism I will make, however. The larger houses should not make too much of a musical concert, with the pictures as obligato."

As further proof of Mr. Zittel's competency in picture matters, it is remembered in trade circles that he performed a notable feat in booking "Patria," the serial with Mrs. Vernon Castle, in the Keith houses, recording the first instance where a picture was consecutively booked into the big vaudeville palaces.

"They say the motion picture business is in its infancy," concluded "Zit." "I say it is a full-grown child, with a few whiskers sprouting. It needs development, not nursing, to bring it to manhood.

"It needs harmony. There is too much attention paid to the stars. More attention might better be paid the photographer. At least the picture and star should be given an even break in exploitation."

Rothapfel to Manage New York's Newest Theatre

Managing Director of Rialto to Supervise Broadway and Forty-ninth Street House—Promises Record-Breaking Innovations—2,500 Seats

CONFIRMING the exclusive announcement of MOTION PICTURE NEWS several months ago, S. L. Rothapfel, Managing Director of the Rialto theatre, New York, last week sent out an official statement that he would be placed in charge of the new picture theatre, now being erected at the corner of Broadway and Forty-ninth street, New York.

In many respects, this theatre, it is said will be far in advance of any now in the country.

The opening of the new house is scheduled for about the middle of December. Mr. Rothapfel said that he regarded the new institution as the realization of a dream he has had for many years, "a perfect home for the distinct type of entertainment which he originated and which has raised the motion picture theatre from the side show category into the field of the higher arts."

The new home of the "Rothapfel Idea" will be operated in conjunction with The Rialto without affecting the latter institution in any way.

Music will assume an even more important part in the new theatre than it has on Mr. Rothapfel's program in the past and once a week the orchestra of the new house will be combined with the Rialto Orchestra to form the Rothapfel Symphony Orchestra of one hundred pieces, which will render a popular symphony concern under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld.

Dr. Riesenfeld will have the direction of both orchestras as separate organizations but will conduct principally at The Rialto as at present. Other directors will be provided as well.

Both outwardly and as to interior it is promised that the new theatre will set a new standard of beauty and comfort. It will contain no stores and no offices other than the executive offices of the theatre itself. The Broadway facade will be a collonade of white stone, patterned after the Parthenon at Athens. The interior will be of classic design, decorated and illuminated according to Mr. Rothapfel's own specifications. The seating capacity will be approximately 2,500. The theatre is being built for G. M. Heckscher, Jr., by Russel B. Smith and R. H. Hall, who built The Rialto. The investment represented has not been announced.

Belgium Film, Spirited Through Germany, Soon to Be Seen

Mrs. M. L. Fulton, owner of the United States rights to "Fighting in France" and "Belgium in Grief" is considered one of the busiest women in Chicago these days. Seated in a cozy little room in the Great Northern Hotel, part of it converted into an office, Mrs. Fulton sees scores of film men each day, big and little.

She announces that "Belgium in Grief" prints will be ready for distribution shortly. Rothacker Film Company is at present making prints from a single negative that was spirited away from the Germans in Brussels and brought to this country.

Her other picture, "Fighting in France," is being rapidly sold throughout all the territory in the country. The picture is going big, and new prints are expected to arrive from Paris this month.

Drive Started by Picture Advertisers

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., started its Fall drive, and incidentally the second year of its career, at the weekly meeting on September 20 in New York, when practically the full membership gathered at Keen's Chop House to celebrate the double event. President Arthur James presided.

An innovation which is expected to become very popular was introduced when it was decided to make an effort to have at least one prominent personage present at each weekly meeting during the coming year, to address the members upon vital topics pertaining to the industry.

The Fall drive of the association also includes the proposed effort to recruit the membership of the committee to one hundred per cent of the advertising and publicity men of the industry in order that each company may be represented and the association may act as a unit on several questions of financial import.

The standing committee appointed for the coming year include: Nat S. Strong, L. R. Thomas, Hop Hadley, A. S. Levino and Randolph Bartlett, publicity; Paul Lazarus, Julian Solomon and Charles E. Moyer, membership; Charles Burr, Jacques Kopstein and C. W. Borrell, membership recruiting.

Directors Open New Club Rooms in New York

J. Searle Dawson and Joseph Kaufman, directors of Paramount Pictures, and who are also members of the "New York Studio" of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, were being congratulated very profusely by various director members of the association last week because of their activity in preparing for use the new club rooms of the association in the metropolis. The announcement that the new home of the directors' association, an offshoot of the Los Angeles body of the same name, was ready to receive its housewarming in the nature of the usual business meeting of the association came as a distinct surprise, and a most welcome one at that, to the members, who have been holding meetings at the Hotel Astor. When the meeting assembled at the new "home" at 234 West 55th street it was disclosed that Dawson and Kaufman had been getting the place in order for the past ten weeks, without taking anyone into their confidence.

The various club rooms are appropriately named, as for instance, The Studio, The Cutting Room, Projecting Room, Developing Room and Property Room. The officers of the club are designated as Director, Assistant Director, Technical Director, Scenarioist, Secretary, Inner and Outer Guard. Mr. Dawley is secretary and Mr. Kaufman treasurer of the organiza-

Chamber of Commerce Honors N. A. M. P. I.

Body Representing Business Interests of the Nation Recognizes Motion Picture as Best Federal Publicity

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Inc., which was recently elected to active membership in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, participated in the War Convention which was held during the past week at Atlantic City, New Jersey, in response to an invitation received from President R. Goodwin Rhett.

The National Association's delegates to the War Convention were President William A. Brady and Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott. Although President Brady had made arrangements to attend the convention with a view to explaining to the representative business men of America just what the motion picture industry was doing to aid the government during the period of the war, he was at the last moment prevented from leaving New York.

The industry contributed very materially to the success of the convention in arranging for the news weeklies to be present, and during the five days' session at the Garden Pier where the cameramen, representing the Hearst-Pathe, Universal and Mutual weeklies were enabled to make close-ups and group pictures of many of the executive officials of America's greatest industries, including railroad heads, cabinet officials and many others, whose names are well known in every household.

Upon his return to New York on Thursday, Executive Secretary Elliott stated that it was the most wonderful convention he had ever attended and that on all sides he had heard the motion picture industry commended for the able and efficient manner in which it was co-operating with the government in the furtherance of its war policies.

Mr. Elliott said that several prominent officials had told him that they had seen the slides and film trailers which were shown in the motion picture theatres during the Liberty Loan campaign and they had also seen the slides which had more recently been shown at the request of David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture.

From this it is evident that the patrons of the 1,600 motion picture theatres throughout the country, including the big men of the great industries, corporations and commercial bodies and that the film and screen is now recognized as one of the greatest mediums of publicity at the command of the Federal authorities.

The United States Chamber of Commerce includes in its membership nearly one thousand corporations and organizations. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will participate actively in all of its deliberations hereafter.

Milwaukee Film Houses to Try Vaudeville

Two of Them Reported About to Change—One Picture Theatre Raises Admission Price and Gets the Business

TWO motion picture houses in Milwaukee are said to be about to go into vaudeville—the Saxe house called the Princess, on the site of Milwaukee's early vaudeville theatre, and the Strand. The managers of these theatres do not confirm the report, which has been going the round for weeks and is not denied.

Is the vaudeville cutting into the motion picture as the motion picture some years ago cut into vaudeville? This is a question frequently asked in Milwaukee.

Weather conditions have been favorable, yet exhibitors on the whole, in motion picture houses, report poor business. There seems to be few exceptions, even among the downtown theatres. But there is one exception to the rule of poor business—the Alhambra. This house is going ahead with a bang with fifteen cents charged for seats and twenty-five cents for what are called auto boxes.

In the face of the strongest kind of competition from the vaudeville house, which are giving eight big time vaudeville acts for ten and twenty cents, the Alhambra recently remodeled, is playing to a tremendous business.

Two of the other down-town houses, both ten-cent houses, are reported to be doing a good average business, though not up to the standard of a few years ago. The five-cent houses seem to be the ones worst hit by local depression, and whether or not the success of the Alhambra prophesies the passing of the five and ten-cent houses and the coming of the fifteen-cent house as a permanent feature in the show business, is a matter that is being widely argued among Milwaukee exhibitors.

From all indications it would seem that an exceptional show was required to attract the theatregoers away from the vaudeville houses and that the only way this can be given is by raising the admission costs. Whether or not Milwaukee is to become a fifteen-cent picture town remains to be seen, though it is reported that at least one other house is contemplating a change in price and program.

Blumenthal Feature Causes Court Action

The sudden and timely descent upon the motion picture market of Russian features whose theme centers about the revolution in that country has been the cause of several small differences between the respective producers of the pictures, but the first genuine court action brought on by the similarity of the films was recorded last week. Ben Blumenthal's picture, called "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs," with Iliodor himself as the central character, was called before the bar through complaint made by a company that also used Iliodor under what was claimed to be an exclusive contract. This concern sought to have the Blumenthal feature held up, but it is possible that a satisfactory agreement favoring equally the two producers will be reached. It is not expected that the litigation period will be long.

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Keeping Up Interest in Serials

Universal Supplies Many Novelties in "The Red Ace" which the Exhibitor Can Use to Advantage in Holding Interest

UNIVERSAL, one of the companies that has regularly produced serials for years, does not do general newspaper advertising on its own account. Its newest serial is "The Red Ace," starring Marie Walcamp, and with the exception of New York and Chicago, where advertising was used in the newspapers, there has been no general campaign, though in some sections the exchanges themselves advertise the picture. This leaves the campaign up to individual exhibitors.

At the start of the serial game Universal provided for the publication of the stories of the various chapters of the serial in leading newspapers through the country, but this plan has been abandoned and Universal now takes the stand that this publication does not help the serial over. The same attitude is taken by Mutual which now makes no effort to secure the publication of the chaptered story. Vitagraph, as we have already told you, supplies the synopses of the episodes to the exhibitor and leave it to him to secure their publication if he desires.

Universal goes very strong on supplying novelties, stunts, and all sorts of advertising devices that the exhibitor can use for the general public and for the patrons of his theatre. The campaign book on "The Red Ace" is filled with pertinent suggestions, novel ideas and a full representation of the material furnished at cost prices. Not only this, but it also includes a complete advertising campaign suggestion, largely following the "teaser" idea. Universal plays on a single idea in its outline of the exploitation of each serial, a splendid idea, for it centers a particular design or a definite phrase on every one of these continued stories. In the case of "The Red Ace" the card, the ace of diamonds, is used, in all of the material.

There are six advertising cuts one column wide by four inches deep supplied, all two of which are illustrated on the opposite page and which are to be followed by a fifth advertisement, three columns wide by eight inches deep. We would suggest that these cuts may also be made into slides and that they could be used to advantage in the theatres that are to show the picture. Naturally, in using a teaser campaign in advance, you must avoid any definite announcement of the name of the picture in any of the advertising in order to get the "flash" value of the final announcement. You will have to be the first exhibitor in the town to show the picture to use this plan to advantage, for the "teaser" idea must have the mystery angle or it is worthless.

This brings up a point that is always raised by exhibitors when they are called upon to advertise serials: "Why should I advertise when my competitor is going to show the same serial three days later?" This question will come especially from houses in cities of the medium class. But it seems to us that the same question might be asked about any five-reel picture. If you have a house in a city where there are twenty other theatres you know that you are not going to be the only exhibitor to show this feature, and certainly you are not going to sacrifice your own business because of the fact that some one else is going to gain a little benefit from your exploitation a little later.

Universal's plan of exploitation will appeal especially in cities and towns where only one theatre will show the serial. Too many of the exploitation campaigns on all classes of pictures are based on the first run exhibitor in the big city. Most of these campaign designers seem to forget that the strength of the industry is in the 65 per cent of the theatres of the country. It is in these, frankly, that Universal admits it gets the biggest returns from its serials—in the large number that are using the chaptered story, and therefore it is to these that Universal makes a strong appeal in its plans.

Especial attention is called to the number of novelties that are issued with "The Red Ace," and this brings up again the question of keeping up the interest to which we referred in the preceding article. Puzzles, pincushions, a photo-stand novelty bearing the picture of Marie Walcamp, tops for the kiddies and "Red Ace" buttons are included. Exhibitors will find the souvenir idea can be well followed with the use of these novelties. Instead of distributing them all in advance, why not distribute one of them with each of the first three episodes? Advertise that you are going to give souvenirs and you will find that a great many persons who did not see the preceding one or two episodes will come into the next for one of these souvenirs, which, though inexpensive, appeal to the desire of the public for something novel and free. They will not only add to the patronage, but they will retain the attendance that you had on the first episode.

Too many distributors and exhibitors work on the principle that all that it is necessary to do is to get the crowds at the showing of the first episode and then let the strength of the serial carry the patronage. We had one of the leading exchange men in New York tell us the other day that the picture ought to carry itself. No picture, no serial, or no line of business is going to carry itself. In the first place there is the element of human frailty to be considered. There is a percentage of persons who will see the first episode and be really interested and have every intention of following the chaptered story to the end, but who will forget to attend the second, and once having missed an episode will drop out altogether. Here is the place that the souvenirs are coming in. Flash on the screen on Tuesday that the second episode of "The Red Ace" will be shown on Wednesday and that every person attending will be given a pincushion bearing the picture of Marie Walcamp.

The exhibitor immediately says: "Why should I pay for these souvenirs? Ninety per cent of the people who would attend the second episode would come anyway. Why should I go to this expense that will not pay me for the admisssions that I will get out of the other 10 per cent?" The answer to this question is also the answer to another—the difference between a live exhibitor and a "movie show manager." You are not spending this money merely to get the additional admissions on the second episode, but to get them on all of the fourteen others. A pencil and paper will immediately show you the profit. But don't be content with these figures. Calculate further and find the effect that this is going to have on boosting business for your next serial. Go still further and find out how many new patrons it is bringing to your house that will bring dimes after dimes in for the months to come.

One of the chief reasons for booking a serial is to get the public in the habit of coming to your theatre. The theory of the serial is that it is a tonic for poor business. Certainly you don't take a single dose of a tonic and expect a cure.

Here is an idea that some of the live exhibitors should try on their next serial, no matter what is the special plan of exploitation that the manufacturer has adopted. Get a list of the people who attend the first episode and send them a postcard that will arrive at their homes the day before the showing of the second and keep this up through the entire life of the serial. Try that plan once and you will be surprised that not only has this small cost of the postals paid for itself, but that it has increased the attendance at your theatre on non-serial days.

If your theatre is small, your costs are reduced proportionately and there can be no objection to this plan on this account. True, you are spending a little more than one cent out of each episode on this exploitation, but you will be amazed at the result when you stop figuring serials on the basis of exactly what the serial itself brings, but on the effect on the business.

One of the most successful exhibitors we know and one who shows at least two serials a week, has solved the problem of keeping up the interest in serials themselves by making the rest of

Universal Uses Many Novelties in Exploiting Its Serial Pictures

At the top are some of the "teaser" ads suggested for use with "The Red Ace." The one at the left is the first of the series, the center one the sixth of the series and then a reproduction of the three column "Solution." Below are illustrated the pennant, the souvenir pin cushion, button, "Red Ace" puzzle and then a photo stand novelty. Below these is a top for the children. At the bottom is the ten foot streamer. Note that the ace of diamonds is featured in every piece of exploitation.

Circle Theatre Stages Spectacle with Big Ballet in Showing "Polly of the Circus"

THE presentation of a stage spectacle of hippodromic proportions and the first successful welding of real life with the people of the shadows was the novelty created by S. Barret McCormick, managing and producing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, as a curtain raiser to the anniversary program of that colossal theatre and an embellishment to the principal screen feature, "Polly of the Circus."

The creation of the stage spectacle by Mr. McCormick was not simply to make a fitting scenic frame of unliving scenery to the play on the screen, as is so often done, but to create an atmospheric effect with color and reality carry the audience into the intimate relationship between the living and the silent players, and with the lure of life, color and reality carry the audience into the spirit of the play that was to follow on the silver sheet.

For this production the scenic artists and builders of the Circle scenic studios, which are maintained by Mr. McCormick to embellish his program, constructed a huge drop, 50 feet by 40, which was hung in the first entrance of the stage and pictured a circus rider mounted on a beautiful white horse, on either side of which were hoops bearing the legends, "1916" and "1917."

Following a majestic festival overture played by the Circle Orchestra, the curtain rose disclosing this drop beautifully illuminated, while to the strains of a "Pierrot and Pierrette" suite Mlle. Theo Hewes and ballet presented an enchanting dance conception. As they finished the dance and with pantomime invited the audience to look upon what followed, a blare of trumpet the piercing sound of calliope, the tunes from circus band and all the motley noises of circus day burst forth, and the curtain disappeared disclosing a full stage set as the exterior of a circus at the close of a parade. Here was all the glittering paraphernalia of the "big top," the animal wagons and side shows, while horses and ponies crowded the stage, with the numerous performers, clowns and acrobats, bareback riders and ring master, animal attendants and ballet—all formed the gorgeous pageantry of circus day, while the weird noises from bands and calliope, the shrill piping of snake charmer and the unintelligible words of the "Ballyho" man literally carried one back to childhood and the fascination of the "lot."

The scene lasted but a few moments, just long enough to make one forget the things of everyday and feel the spell of the sawdust ring, and as the horses and ponies and the performers were filing through the main entrance of the "big top" the first scenes of the screen play began, the stage scene disappeared and the audience found itself gazing upon the picture, barely aware of the transition from real life to the land of shadows.

So successful was this innovation that one of the newspaper critics in his review of the performance remarked: "Great as is the play on the screen, the real feature of the program is the stage spectacle produced by S. Barret McCormick, which by its daring originality and novelty creates a new epoch in motion picture presentation."

Lincoln Theatre Raises Price and Runs Film for a Week

L. Hillman of the Palace theatre, Lincoln, Neb., who was the first exhibitor in his city to increase the admission price to ten cents back in the old days, has just set another record—he has shown a regular service feature for one full week, charging twenty-five cents admission, and he crowded his house.

"It is the first time I ever tried the twenty-five-cent admission plan," he said. "I have been reading those articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS encouraging exhibitors to try for higher admission, so I decided to try it.

"The feature was 'Heroic France,' handled by the Mutual. I decorated my lobby with an eagle, a cannon and a flag. I have an automobile with a large frame for holding six-sheets. In this I drove about the streets. I did a lot of newspaper and some billboard advertising.

"This is the first picture that I ever ran for a solid week. I have been an advocate of longer runs ever since I tried my first one."

Cooper Lines Up Arizona Theatres for 4 Minute Men

Edward J. Cooper, manager of the Columbia theatre, Phœnix, has been appointed State chairman for Arizona to organize the moving picture theatres of that State for the campaign of the "four-minute men." Mr. Cooper has already started to work and expects to have the greater number of the houses lined up for this patriotic service.

George J, Stoneman is State chairman in charge of the speakers, and has written to 150 of the leading men of the State asking them to take part in this work.

"Sleeping Sickness" Is Sure Death

LAST week one of the biggest New York department stores held one of the Lockhart "Mill End" sales. Most of you all over the country are familiar with these "Mill End" sales, for Lockhart started them twenty years ago, but sometimes it takes a long time for an idea to hit New York.

Fourteen years ago the writer interviewed Mr. Lockhart when he was conducting a sale in a Southern city. We asked him his idea of merchandising in this manner. "I have only an idea," he answered, "to impress the people with bargains. These bargains might be advertised just as emphatically in the newspapers as I am advertising them, but the advertising in the newspapers lack the personal tone. And yet I use the newspapers more heavily during my sales than the stores in which I am conducting the sales normally do. But my presence, my talks on various articles offered, bring in the personal tone, convince the public that I am concerned in their satisfaction. The only secret I have is putting personality into trade."

Prices at these sales that Mr. Lockhart conducts are probably no cheaper than at hundreds of other "bargain sales," but Mr. Lockhart has established a record for every city in which he has appeared by the volume of his sales. He has visited every principal city in the country and has conducted his sales along the same lines, and always with success—for he has ever convinced his patrons that he has their satisfaction at heart and that he is working for them as well as for the store.

There's a lot of "Mill End" personality that you can put into the motion picture business, not merely for a week, for the "sale" of one picture, but for the permanent policy of your theatre.

Department store managers find one great result from Lockhart's policies aside from the amount of goods sold—it is the effect that his work has on the regular employees of the stores, the ambition that he puts in them, their personality that it develops, the service to the customers that is improved.

Up and Out of the Rut

DO you expect your employees to show enterprise if you never show any yourself?

Were you ever out on a country road and watching a team going along which the driver made no attempt to drive? Half asleep, he is sitting in the seats with the lines dangling down. And the horses are jogging along, the wagon wheels following the rut—always the rut.

Your business is in the rut, probably. That of seventy-five per cent of the exhibitors is, because the managers make no effort to guide.

In the first place you have got to wake up. THE EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU is trying to wake you up, it is trying to supply you with the ideas that you need and to help you cure the faults that are keeping your business from growing.

The disease that ails your theatre is probably the SLEEPING SICKNESS.

It's fatal unless you can come out of the sleep.

We get lots of letters telling us how good the writers think this department is and how it will benefit the industry. But it is not going to benefit you unless you take advantage of the unlimited and absolutely free offers of help that are open to you.

When you are through the day's work you probably feel tired and go off to bed right away. You've counted up the receipts for the day and find that they are not enough to pay the expenses and put an extra barrel in the flour bin. But it's no use to worry about that—sleep will make you forget your troubles.

Sacrifice a little sleep to-night. STICK A PIN IN YOURSELF; if necessary, move off the "sleeping sickness;" sit down and write us a letter about what you are doing and what your troubles are. You know that you have failed to put over a certain picture or a certain serial as you should have done. It's likely, with the experiences of thousands of exhibitors at our command and with the knowledge of what the producers and the exchanges are doing to help you, that we can throw light on the situation.

The drug which is used to cure the "sleeping sickness" has first the effect of causing an itching, irritating feeling all over the body, we are told. It makes the victim SCRATCH, and when the victim scratches he begins to restore circulation. And that is a start and he begins to get well. And in a few weeks he is as lively as anybody and is taking some interest in the world.

Bring the Dead One to Life

THAT'S one thing we are trying to do here—to make you scratch. It's not a very pleasant thing at first, but look how much better you are going to feel when you've passed the scratching stage and begin to learn that there is real life in the moving picture business—that your own house is a live, throbbing thing that means something to the community.

You probably read over the MOTION PICTURE NEWS more or less carefully. Now and then you will come across a story about how one of the larger exhibitors put on a spectacle in connection with the showing of a special picture, with choruses, etc. You read the story with interest and think that it is all very nice and that you would like to do the same thing, but then, you reason, you will show the picture one day, and, anyway, you could not afford all that expense, and, well—you think you'll go to bed and have a good sleep.

One thing has been accomplished if you don't fall off to sleep immediately—if you begin to think what you are going to do with the same picture when you show it—if some idea begins to generate.

You are beginning to put your personality in the sale of that picture already.

Possibly some of the plans that you are going to try will fail to work out. If they do, let us know about it and probably we can tell you WHY and show you what to do next time.

And if you want suggestions on what to do with any picture of any scores of individual pictures when you get them, ask us about them in advance and you'll get the information.

SOOTHING SYRUP is not going to cure "sleeping sickness."

We're not going to give it to you. We want you to put life into yourself instead.

HERE'S THE GINGER BOTTLE.

TRY IT FOR A CHANGE.

Your Idea—and Ours

BASEBALL is over almost all over the country, but here is an idea that is worth filing away for next season. In college towns it can be used for advantage with football results. The idea comes from Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, who has prepared a slide as illustrated here. It is only necessary to fill in the names of the visiting teams and the scores. You can readily arrange to get these scores from your newspaper, which is always willing to give them over the phone. While this will probably not draw any additional people to your theatre it will be taken as a sign of your interest in them and will build for permanent business.

In your advertising always try to emphasize a single idea. When you try to emphasize a number they are all lost in the crush.

THE Times-Tribune, of Waterloo, Iowa, is a live newspaper.

It not only realizes the value of newspaper advertising to the moving picture theatres, but it realizes that moving picture matter helps to build and hold circulation. The Times-Tribune has gone further than any newspaper we have known in advertising in the theatre programs.

Palace Programs Please People

If you are one of our subscribers, you will always be wise to what shows are coming to this house. They appear in the Times-Tribune

EXCLUSIVELY

All the News, Nation, State and City. 10c per week.

Some newspapers have, narrowly, opposed the house programs on the theory that these competed with their paper, but more and more that feeling is disappearing.

Note the way that the Times-Tribune couples up its advertising with the name of the theatre.

Another evidence of this sort of co-operation is the fact that the Palace theatre carried a solid page of advertising in the last Sunday issue of the newspaper, something very rare in Waterloo, and Manager W. L. Myers broke the record of his house for three days.

Get as many machines as your theatre needs, but don't be one yourself.

"POLLY OF THE CIRCUS," the first Goldwyn release, was shown for the first time in Cleveland last week at the Standard theatre, which will be the home of the Goldwyn pictures for the entire season. To create an atmosphere before seeing the picture, Manager Joseph Grossman turned his lobby into a regular circus tent. A big, white canvas completely concealed the fact that one was entering a theatre. It had the pitch of a tent, with the usual flaps all bound in bright red. A false entrance was constructed at the further end and leading into the house. Crowds gathered continuously to see the decorations, and those who entered felt all the informality and enthusiasm that the ring and the sawdust always awakens in the heart of every true American.

It's all right about "Hope springing eternal, etc.," but it's the exhibitor that does some springing eternally himself that is going to gather in the shekels.

C. A. LICK, proprietor of the Opera House, Fort Smith, Ark., is one of the exhibitors who believes that every citizen of the town is a possible patron and he is going after them. Through Vitagraph, we receive a copy of the letter which he is sending to all of the more intelligent citizens of the city.

The letter is on a boost for his theatre or exploitation of an individual film. He tells the people frankly that he wants to run a clean picture show, one that will be a credit to the city. He encloses a free ticket and invites the recipient to use it and then write him what he thinks about his theatre. He even encloses copies of his newspaper advertising and asks the citizens whether this is along the right line.

This is good stuff; it is getting close to the public. It comes very near appealing to the home town spirit, to making the theatre a civic institution. And it costs little. If Manager Lick gets five weekly patrons for the next year out of it he will pay the $25 that it cost him to sent out the letters.

Take it for granted that your citizens are interested in you; and make them feel that you are interested only in them.

A smile with each ticket will sell a lot more.

MANAGER RUFFNER, of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., has given the exhibitors of the country a lesson in how to feature their news reels, now one of the most interesting of all the bookings since the entry of this country into the war. Mr. Ruffner has created some new designs in posters, one of which is shown here and he features several of these in his lobby at each showing of the Hearst-Pathe News.

Further than that Mr. Ruffner has the right idea of making everything that he shows on his program count. The manager who fails to capitalize on the news reel is overlooking a bet. This department knows of one case where a big downtown house showed this same news reel on its release date and never advertised it. Another house that used the same reel a week later did advertise it and brought several hundred additional admissions regular thereby.

This is the combination ticket used by F. E. Osborne, manager of the Star theatre, Kitchener, Ont., in increasing the price of admission. He sold the entire ticket, good for three attractions and covering a period of nine days for 50 cents. The usual price had been 15 cents. To those who did not buy the combination ticket the charge of admissions were those stated on the ticket. This plan not only aided in gradually working up increased prices, but also aided in pulling people to three consecutive shows.

the program as varied as possible, so as to spread the appeal of the program to all classes. His recipe is not to show even other series or pictures on that day, but to make all of the other reels distinctive, complete in themselves. This not only serves the purpose of emphasizing the serial day to those who are following the chaptered story, but to bring into the theatre persons who have not seen the earlier episodes.

Another sure-fire plan for keeping up the interest was illustrated in this department several weeks ago in the case of an exhibitor who issued cards good for the entire serial, simply punching the various numbers as the cards were presented. These cards were sold at a reduced rate and were found profitable. It might be well to offer these for sale only at the time of the showing of the first episode, to those who were well pleased with it and who at that initial showing had the resolve to carry the go through with the story. There is a lot in taking advantage of the enthusiasm of the moment.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited; pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

LAST week this column called your attention to Theatre A which displayed a large number of gaudy posters evidently without the idea of centering the display on any one film, but achieving the result of plastering the front and lobby of the house. Theatre B affords a marked contrast.

This theatre, located next to the corner of two of the principal streets, has a square lobby only about four feet deep. The ticket booth is on rollers and is moved out on the edge of the sidewalk during the performances. The fornt of the theatre is very attractive in that it is formed from a series of glass doors with panels ten by twelve inches. In each of these is a photograph of a star and fit so exactly as to give a framed effect. In fact, the front was unusually attractive and gave the impression of refinement.

The announcements of the productions of the day and the following day were all framed on sheets at the sides of the theatre, the same prominence being given to the pictures for the two days. These displays included the feature and the shorter pictures, all being one sheet, and only one to each picture. In addition there was a three-sheet, pasted on cloth, hanging in front of the theatre. It was horribly dirty and in marked contrast with the remainder of the front.

But here was a theatre on one of the business streets, where thousands passed every hour, and there was not sufficient emphasis placed on the current feature production to make the bill stand out, nothing to reach out and pull the people in. The people living in the section, above the stores are working people who have no money to waste and who have to be persuaded to put out their earnings for amusement. The feature bill on this particular day happened to be a very strong, sensational sex drama, one of which we have seen many strong lobby displays and the manager would have had no trouble in making his display stand out without marring the otherwise attractive front. But the dirty banner that he did display showed that he was content to accept anything that the exchange offered him and that he simply ran a "movie show" and probably never even saw his pictures either before or after they were booked.

But otherwise the front of the house was attractive. We emphasize this with a purpose.

When we discussed Theatre A we mentioned that the young man at the door was smoking cigarettes constantly. When we approached Theatre B the ticket taker was just finishing a cigar and a few moments later threw the butt away. It fell on the sidewalk. The manager was standing by his side at the time, so the manager evidently doesn't see anything wrong about smoking at a door through which hundreds of women and children pass.

It is disagreeable to discuss personal appearances, but is it essential. The management of a theatre must realize that it is an amusement place—that he is appealing to the happier side of life. The ticket taker at Theatre B was cadaverous and his expression one of deep gloom. His entire appearance impressed one that he was terribly disgusted with his job and with life in general. One might object to this criticism because it was merely this man's misfortune, but every one who appears at the front of the house should at least have a pleasant expression. No one wants to be met at the doorway by an undertaker presiding at the last duties.

The whole air about this theatre was one of the deadliest—we started to say formality. It was worse than that. No one seemed to care anything in the world about what was going on. At first we thought that some misfortune had caused this spirit on that particular day, but in order that there might be no injustice done we passed by the house several days later and the conditions were the same.

With one exception, during the half hour that we stood in front of the theatre we did not see anyone from the manager down give any indication that they knew anyone of the scores of people who entered the house. Possibly they didn't take enough interest in their patrons to become acquainted with them.

There was one exception. The cashier, a woman of middle age, had a friend. This woman friend came up to the cashier and held long conversations with her, sticking her face close to the little glass opening, effectively enough both for her words to be heard and to bar any patron from purchasing a ticket. This would occur for periods of several minutes at a time. And the woman never entered the theatre.

Finally we got a ticket. There was no usher or any visible sign of an employee inside. The duty of the management seemed to be done once the hopper had your ticket. During the entire performance we did not observe the manager look in the house a single time, though it sadly needed it, for both men and women would come in and sit for minutes at a time with their hats on.

Before one looked at the screen, one's eyes were drawn to a huge clock at the right hand size with a changing front carrying changing advertising and such frequent warnings as "Watch this clock" with such frequent warnings that it became evident that the management evidently did not expect anyone to watch the pictures.

Paramount Announces Details of Vast Advertising Campaign on First Serial

PARAMOUNT this week made some important announcements concerning its publicity plans for the first serial ever released by that corporation, "Who Is 'Number One'?" starring Kathleen Clifford. Added to the newspaper displays and the publication of the story by Anna Katherine Green complete in more than fifty cities, Paramount has also given the exhibitor further aid through a comprehensive billboard campaign. This will cover one hundred and fifty cities, and will include sections that have a population of fifty million persons—half the people in the United States.

In addition to this, it is announced that the newspapers which will carry the Anna Katherine Green story have promised to launch big campaigns of their own. They will use wagon posters and news stand cards because they realize that the publication of this story is going to stimulate circulation. It is said that "The Filgree Ball," by the same author, proved one of the most successful stories that the leading newspapers ever carried, the Chicago Tribune, for instance, finding it to be the most talked about novel ever published in newspapers.

The publishers of Anna Katherine Green's books have also decided to add to the publicity and to take advantage of Paramount's exploitation of "Who Is 'Number One'?" which will be published in book form at the end of the run of the serial. In every city and town book stores will be urged by publishers to make special displays of Anna Katherine Green's books and to connect special sales with the motion picture dramatization of "Who Is 'Number One'?"

The billboard campaign on "Who Is 'Number One'?" will begin in a few weeks, and will carry over so as to keep hammering home the appeal of the serial and to give every exhibitor active support until "Who Is 'Number One'?" is an established box-office success. No limit has been set for the billboard advertising. The only idea is to give the exhibitor all the publicity he needs.

Frederic Dorr Steele, famous designer of mystery posters, illustrator of the Sherlock Holmes stories, made the twenty-four sheet that will open Paramount's campaign.

A full discussion of Paramount's methods in exploiting serials will be printed in the course of the series of articles now appearing in this department dealing with that particular problem.

Concentrating his whole display on the name of the star and the title of the picture Manager H. P. Caulfield broke all records with the fifth downtown showing of William S. Hart's picture, "On the Night Stage." He advertised heavily, used a stage coach through the streets of the city and used the simplest possible lobby display, knowing that all he had to do was to bring out prominently the name of the star and the title of the picture.

Triangle to Give Exhibitors Service Direct from Studios

H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of Triangle Film Corporation, has just announced a change in service that is going to be welcomed by the newspapers all over the country and by the exhibitors who are anxious to get newspaper display on their current attractions.

After making an exhaustive study of the needs of exhibitors, Mr. Davis has decided to direct this service from the studios rather than from the eastern executive offices as do the other companies. Beginning with the November releases cuts of illustrations suitable for newspaper reproduction will be supplied to all exhibitors through the various Triangle exchanges or direct from the studios to any exhibitor upon his request. Three illustrations showing the big scenes will be supplied with each release. It is planned to have these in the hands of the exchanges four weeks in advance of the release dates, so that even the first-run theatres will have the material far enough in advance to plan their newspaper campaigns on a definite line.

Is This Your Theatre?

One of the advertisements announced an eradicator of vermin. There were only two other paid ads, showing that the revenue from this source was small, but the lack of numbers was made up by the recurring "Watch this clock." It was easily the most effective annoyance that we have ever seen in our years of visiting moving picture theatres.

Otherwise the interior of the theatre was attractive and comfortable, well ventilated and lighted, but there still remained in the minds of everyone the feeling that the management was absolutely impersonal and was merely running a picture show. Here was an excellent building, one worthy of splendid patronage and the class of pictures shown, a feature and three other reels was good. But there it ended. One felt almost clammy when one left the theatre.

Every indication about the house, up to and including the clock, showed that the management was looking for the dimes of the moments, absolutely, and to the dollars of tomorrow.

Is this your view of your theatre?

THE SCREEN'S MOST REMARKABLE PRODUCTION
Goldwyn presents
MAE MARSH
in
POLLY of the CIRCUS
from The World-Famed Play by Margaret Mayo
The Picture You've Been Waiting For
AT THE STRAND
Direction of JAKE WELLS and JOHN EVINS
Admission: Adults 15c, Children 10c

Two weeks ago we printed in this department some of the advertising suggestions of Goldwyn Pictures on "Polly of the Circus." These cuts showed how three of the leading theatres of the country—the Madison theatre, Detroit, and the Trianon theatre, New Orleans, employed the picture in half-tone, but note the much better effect secured by the Madison by cutting out the unnecessary background. The Strand theatre, Atlanta, used the outline cut as it came from the Goldwyn offices. Much stronger attention could have been attracted to the theatre by having the name "Strand" prominently at the top.

"Timely Topics" Proves Big Aid to Users of Art Dramas Films

Art Dramas, Inc., reports that it has received many letters of congratulation from exhibitors on "Timely Topics," the Art Dramas house organ which is issued with each picture.

This is a weekly eight-page magazine containing suggestions to theatres showing these pictures. Attention is given to lobby display, newspaper, program and folder announcements. The salient features of each production are set forth, supplemented with suggestions for display in lobbies and outside the theatre.

Recent issues of "Timely Topics" treat the following pictures: "The Little Samaritan," an Erbograph production, starring Marian Swayne; "Unto the End," and "Blood of His Fathers," David Horsley productions, starring Crane Wilbur; "Peg o' the Sea," a Van Dyke film, starring Jean Sothern, and "Behind the Mask," a U. S. Amusement Corporation feature with Catherine Calvert as its star.

Firestone Heads Universal Service Bureau in Chicago

L. M. Firestone, a clever young artising man, has been placed in charge of the Chicago publicity service department of the Universal. W. A. Bach, of the New York office, has been spending several weeks in Chicago in looking over the situation and evolving ideas that will meet local conditions announces the appointment.

Universal announces that the object of this department is to give every possible assistance to the exhibitor in advertising, publicity and looking after all of his requirement. It promises to close a "missing link" between the exchange and the showman.

Chicago Exhibitors Overwork "Trailers"; Mental Indigestion Result of Their Zeal

[This is the second of a series of articles by W. A. Bach, who is in Chicago on the first lap of his tour installing service bureaus for the Universal. Mr. Bach bases his articles on conditions he finds them in Chicago, but apply equally well in other parts of the country.]

Bill Smith isn't his name but we'll have to call him that, principally because the truth behind this little story matters more than the people concerned in it.

Bill is in charge of one of the larger Chicago houses and is a pretty good manager. He is wide awake and always on the alert for new ideas to boost his business.

So when the new stunt of using trailers came out he was right there and made great use of them to boost his coming program. But pretty soon, every manufacturer of films, nearly, started putting out trailers, with the result that Bill found himself with just a few more than he really needed.

However, says Bill to himself, "I might as well use 'em, they're a darn good idea and one or two more, don't make any difference."

Now, I happened to be one of Bill's audience one night and I sat beside a small family, that from their conversation were evidently regular customers of Bill's.

They and I happened to come in just at the tag end of the feature and we waited patiently for it to end, so that we could begin at the beginning.

Finally, it was over and we prepared to enjoy ourselves, but one little trailer started showing Mary Onderdonk in about a hundred feet of her newest film that was to play the house next Monday—then another piece of trailer showing handsome Bob Oklahoma saving his leading lady in a new picture, to show Tuesday—and so on and on—through the entire program for the coming week.

Dandy little trailers they were individually, but taken together they made a most beautiful mess, that gave every one mental indigestion and impressed no one.

The little family by my side were disgusted and Dad was in fact forcible.

"I didn't pay to see a Irish stew of film about what's coming—I want to see the picture that showing tonight and by gum—I want to see it now—why can't the fellow that is running this show realize that. I didn't used to mind one of those half portion films, in fact I rather liked it, but six or seven of 'em gets my goat." And his wife and kiddies echoed his sentiment in their restless and dissatisfied expression and bearing.

"And," continued Dad, "these moving picture fellows always carry a good thing too far."

There is the meat of this whole story. Advertising is good and is vitally necessary, but remember the patron—he is the one that pays and he must be satisfied. Utilize all good ideas, but don't carry a good thing too far.

There is a lesson for slackers and new courage for real men in the stiring photodrama, "Her Country's Call," to be presented on the screen at ———— theatre on ———— day of ———— week. Mary Miles Minter, one of the most charming actresses for the film, takes an inspiring part.

Jess Slocum, a mountain elf, lives with her dad, Jim Slocum, in a cabin high on the mountain side. She has been reared without companions. Old Jim holds a bitter hatred of the flag and the soldiers who drill in the valley town of Flagstone. Finally Jess makes him admit that he is embittered over the fact that fifteen years before he had been drummed out of camp on the charge of being a bootlegger.

Jess meets handsome young Captain Earle Neville. She begins to show an immediate interest in pretty clothes and coaxes her dad to buy her a new dress. She is happily trying it on when a bullet enters the cabin and wounds her in the shoulder. It had been fired by a member of Captain Neville's squad of secret service men who were pursuing Jim Slocum for "moonshining."

Jess is taken to Captain Neville's home and nursed by his sister. The captain teaches her to love the flag and to sound the bugle calls. She is shunned as the daughter of a jailbird by the girls of the town.

Jess starts back of the cabin and on the way meets John Reynolds, who has been fomenting border trouble. She sees him tear down the flag and shoots him. She mounts a horse and hurries back to town sounding the "call to arms." The home guards turn out to defend the town against the outlaws.

Jim Slocum, in prison, confesses that he is not Jess' father. He had stolen the child as a baby from the home of Colonel Tremaine as revenge for being drummed out of camp. She finds a father and a sister and a handsome husband.

"Amid the Clouds" Takes Mollie King in "The Seven Pearls" on Flights

Thrill follows thrill in the fourth episode of "The Seven Pearls," which features Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. It is called "Amid the Clouds," and most of the action takes place in upper air. The feature of this chapter is the chase of an airship by an aeroplane. Ilma is being swiftly carried to her death in a balloon to which she is tied by a rope which is being eaten by acid. Harry rushes to her rescue in a dirigible. He is pursued by Perry in a swift hydroplane to prevent the rescue of his victim.

Harry makes a desperate leap from the dirigible to the balloon and reaches Ilma, but when his weight is added to that of Ilma's on the acid-eaten rope, it breaks and they fall. Harry has taken his precautions to attach a parachute to his shoulders and as they drop from the balloon it opens and the two fall into a lake below. Perry, maddened at Ilma's escape, dives in his hydroplane apparently on top of them. As he glides away on the surface of the water there is no sign of either Harry or Ilma in the churning wake he leaves behind.

This stirring serial, which all lovers of frank melodrama will not miss, is to be presented on the screen at ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week.

True Wife Under Test is Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath"

(World Picture, Brady-Made, Five-Reel Production)

One of the most laudable pictures of the wife wrongly suspected and proving true in the end is that of Ethel Clayton in "The Woman Beneath," to be on the screen at ———— theatre on ———— week of ————.

This entrancing story of an odd phase of domestic life was penned by Willard Mack, who has written some of the most gripping successes filmed by World-Pictures. This newest product of Mr. Mack's pen gives Miss Clayton one of the very best roles she has ever had. She appears as the New York society wife of a wealthy Western mine owner who has married him for his money.

When she tells her husband this he decides to make her leave him and he determines that the best way to do this is by making it appear that he has lost all his money. But when his scheme is successful, it works a most remarkable change in his wife—a change so very astonishing that the husband cannot believe it.

"The Woman Beneath" is an astonishing play and a thoroughly delightful attraction. To see it is to see a real treat.

NEWS GIVES MORE SERVICE TIPS THAN PERSONAL TOUR THRO' WEST

David McLuen of the McLuen theatre, Guthrie Center, Ia., stopped in Omaha at the World Exchange the other day, on his way home from a long automobile trip throughout the West. A copy of the Motion Picture News was lying on the table.

"I made it a point to visit at least one motion picture theatre in every city I visited," said Mr. McLuen, as he turned the pages of the NEWS. "I was looking for new ideas. I got some, too.

"But in looking through one issue of this paper I find more and better ideas for running a motion picture theatre than I could get in a trip three times as long as the one I took."

Margaret Landis in Strong Part in "The Martinache Marriage"

(General Film, Falcon Feature, Four Reels)

A strong romance in high life, compelling in its interest, is pictured in "The Martinache Marriage," to be the special feature on the program at ———— theatre on ———— week of ————.

Margaret Landis and Philo McCullough have the leading roles. Their work is high in its artistic character, fully meeting the demands of the dramatic action.

In Paris Horace Martinache, wealthy American, aids a ragged young flower girl who was knocked down by his machine. Placing her in a hospital he leaves funds to pay for her education when she recovers, and sails for home. Some years later Martinache, still a bachelor, learns that his nephew, Eric, has fallen in love with an actress abroad and is bringing her home to gain his mother's consent to their marriage.

Her beauty earns her new suitors, an English nobleman of mediocre character and Roscoe Vandercourt, a rather strong personality.

To make the cure absolute Col. Martinache consents to join the house party and pay attention to the charmer. Sara (Margaret Landis) is agrecably startled to discover in him her benefactor—she having been the flower girl of Paris. Col. Martinache is unaware of the coincidence, however, and his love, encouraged by the deeply grateful girl, becomes reality instead of pretense.

The subsequent developments add to the intensity of the story.

Harry Carey as Cheyenne Harry in Photodrama, "The Secret Man"

(Butterfly-Universal Five-Reel Production)

One of the strongest and most stirring of recent photodramas is "The Secret Man" for showing on the screen at ———— theatre on ———— day of ———— week.

Harry Carey has the principal part in this Western, that of "Cheyenne Harry," and is supported by Edith Sterling. The two make an excellent combination. It is filled with tenderness and heart interest.

Cheyenne happens to come upon the wreck of the wagon, and is astonished to find a living child under the broken mass. He picks her up and revives her, camping that night with her in the open. She is hungry, and he promises her food the next day. He sets out at dawn, but catches sight of the posse on his track. They see him and shoot his horse. Harry and the child fall together down the side of a steep cliff, and Elizabeth is hurt. Harry picks himself up and looks for water for the child. All he can find is a poisoned spring, full of the bones of dead animals. He wanders all day, and at last, seeing the posse in the distance, fires three shots to attract their attention.

"You'd never have got me, sheriff," he says, "but the kid is dyin' o' thirst."

Lew Fields in "The Corner Grocer"; Love Story in Simple Setting

(Peerless-World Five-Reel Production)

Those who like an appealing love-story in a simple setting—and who does not—may see one on the screen, "The Corner Grocer," to be shown at ———— theatre on the ———— of ———— week. It was written by Adolph Phillips and arranged for filming by Lawrence McCloskey, while George Cowl directed the production.

Lew Fields is Charles Wendel, the corner grocer, which is enough in itself. Madge Evans is the pretty girl adopted into the family, while Nick Long, Jr., plays the part of the wayward son who gets college conceit and then falls into the toils of an adventuress, winding up as forger found out.

Several days later, the bank president calls on Wendel with the forged check and Ralph confesses. At first Wendel is of a mind to let Ralph go to jail, but after listening to the pleas of Mrs. Wendel and Mary, he decides to make the check good, thereby being compelled to sell all he owns and start over again with a little pushcart carrying a little load of fruit and vegetables from house to house. He tells Ralph he must leave his house and not return until he has redeemed himself.

Wendel suggests to Mary that she leave them and let them shift for themselves, as he does not believe it right that she give them some of her hard-earned money, but Mary is firm in her resolve to stay with them in their trouble, as they stood by her in her trouble.

The days and months roll by until a year or more pass. Then to the farm where the family make their home Ralph comes one day, bronzed with hard work, his head held high, through a consciousness that he was fighting to redeem himself and succeeding.

Ralph's father is glad to see him and when Ralph asks his father where Mary is, he is told she is out under the trees in the garden.

Ralph goes to her, for he has come to a realization of his true love for her. And as the young people kiss, Wendel and his wife, watching them from the cover of nearby bushes, kiss too. And happiness comes to the Wendel family again.

Metro Releases Gripping Drama, with Mme. Petrova as the Star

(Metro Five Reel Production)

"The Silence Sellers," a typical screen drama of the gripping type, with Mme. Petrova, the well-known Russian star, in the leading role, has been completed for presentation by Metro Pictures Corporation at the ——— theatre. Mme. Petrova, already a prime favorite in dramas of the more serious kind, wherein real lessons are threshed out upon the screen, needs no word of praise in this new feature to insure her a warm reception at the hands of the lovers of good motion pictures. Her emotional acting is rated among the best in picturedom, and with the supporting cast which has been selected to appear with her in "The Silence Sellers," it is assured that a production worthy of the efforts of both Mme. Petrova and Metro will be seen. In the picture, Mme. Petrova is the daughter of a wealthy man. Mrs. Schuyler, a social butterfly, has caused her millionaire husband to become jealous of her close friendship with a foreigner. Donald Loring, played by Mahlon Hamilton, an idler and spendthrift, is attentive to Laura. She breaks off her engagement when he appears in an intoxicated condition to take her to the opera. Laura visits the Grandins and finds the foreigner there, supposedly advising Mr. Grandin about some investments. Loring, more reckless than ever, is visited by Reyburn, the district attorney, who gives him some sound advice, and tells him how to can make a man of himself. From this point the picture gains movement and interest at a rapid gait. Meanwhile, the foreigner, played by Wyndham Standing, has secured a conquest with Sue Schuyler. Situations from here on come so fast and furious that the explanation in detail is difficult, but the theme leads up to the point where the foreigner is exposed, and all ends well between the lovers. When he is sure that Laura understands all, Donald asks permission to replace the engagement ring on her finger. Laura consents, confessing that she has always loved him. She has saved her friend Sue Schuyler from scandal, and a life of happiness awaits her and the man she loves. The excellent acting and the unusual situations are the principal points of the feature.

Ethel Ritchie in Dual Role in Gripping Falcon Feature, "The Understudy"

(Four Part Falcon Production)

"Beating back" from the inevitable end facing a drug addict, and the final unraveling of complications ensuing from a daring impersonation, forms the spirited backbone of "The Understudy," a four-part Falcon feature which will be shown at the ——— on ——— of ——— week. Ethel Ritchie appears in the roles of Georgianna Lane, a country girl, and of Hope Van Alen, wife of a prominent man and a drug fiend.

Hope Van Alen, young and beautiful, is a drug addict, a fact that is becoming apparent to her friends. Her husband discovers it and they try to think a way out. At a fashionable restaurant where they have gone to talk it over Anthony suggests that she go to a sanitarium, but Hope says her friends have already begun to suspect. At this moment a young girl enters, shabbily dressed but remarkably like Hope. A sudden thought strikes the Van Alens and they ask the girl to lunch with them and unfold their plan—which is that in the eyes of society Georgianna impersonate Hope while the latter undergoes treatment. It is agreed and Georgianna enters upon her duties.

Gerald Fownes, Anthony's nephew, frequently asked by Anthony to escort his wife to various entertainments, is grown fond of her. He is indignant at Anthony's apparent neglect of his wife, and the climax comes when Dr. Mache, who had sold drugs to Hope, appears and threatens Georgianna, compelling her to come to his office. Her maid summons Gerald and Anthony to the rescue. At this moment Anthony is called to the phone by Dr. Pope at the sanitarium regarding Hope and hurries out, leaving Gerald to rescue his wife from Dr. Mache. Gerald is astounded at this conduct, and when he meets Georgianna coming out of the doctor's office he is unable to conceal his anxiety and love for her. To save her further distress there seems nothing for him to do but go away, which he prepares to do. He goes to the Van Alens to bid them good-bye. Anthony suspects and accuses Gerald of having fallen in love with his wife, which Gerald admits. To his consternation, Anthony only smiles, saying, "That is all right." Hope, who has returned and is her old self again, hears and understands. Gerald sees an unaccountable change in her when she comes forward and is bewildered—until they explain about Georgianna. He leaves at once for the farm where Georgianna has concluded she belongs, and all are happy.

Olive Thomas with Excellent Cast in Dashing Triangle Comedy-Drama

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

Another corking comedy-drama, said to be even better than Olive Thomas's recent Triangle feature, "An Even Break," has been produced for the screen under the title of "Broadway Arizona," and will star Miss Thomas in a role that gives her ample chance to use her dashing and winsome personality to the fullest extent. This picture, which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, has all the characteristics of the usual Triangle feature, in which interest is sustained from first to last. The story tells of the love affair of a Broadway musical comedy star and an Arizona ranchman, and is filled with delightful and interesting situations. Fritzi Carlyle (Olive Thomas) is the star of the musical comedy company, and her cleverness and beauty have attracted John Keyes (George Chesebro), a ranchman from Arizona, who is visiting New York. Before he came to the metropolis Keyes had been warned against the "wimmin" by his ranch foreman and friend, who distrusts the gentle sex and enjoys reading the "Vampire."

The manager of the show selects Keyes as a desirable personality for a press agent story. He arranges a meeting between the people. A sharp flirtation ends in Fritzi promising to marry Keyes. The story was given to the papers. Late editions that day contained a denial of the engagement by Miss Carlyle. Keyes, humiliated, leaves for his ranch, telling her some day she will be glad to come to him. Eight months later her health fails. She was ordered to rest, but refused. Keyes kept informed of her condition. One night she is kidnapped by two men who are disguised. They are Keyes and Uncle Isaacs, and they take Fritzi to the Arizona ranch. The sensational kidnapping is followed by orders and offers of reward for her return. Finally detectives trace her. A posse starts for the Keyes ranch. Fritzi has repeatedly declared she would send Keyes to prison for the deed. He is convinced his arrest and imprisonment will occur when the posse arrives, but he has the satisfaction of seeing his patient greatly improved. When the officers come to the ranch they start to arrest Keyes. Fritzi asks on what charge. Kidnapping, they said. But she told them she was going to marry Keyes and arranged the kidnapping for a publicity story.

Loew Signs Contract for Select Releases

The New York offices of the Select Pictures Corporation has closed contracts with Marcus Loew, whereby the Loew theatres will get a number of the Select releases for about seventy days' run each in Loew's Greater New York chain of theatres. Among the features included in the new contract is the Norma Talmadge picture, "The Moth," which, it is announced, is scheduled for an early showing in the Loew theatres. This picture was made from the novel of the same name by William Dana Orcutt, and is said to be an unusual "society" picture. Miss Talmadge, in this feature, was directed by Edward Jose.

Other features secured by the Loew theatres in this booking include Hobart Henley's picture, "Parentage"; Herbert Brenon's "The Lone Wolf"; "The Whip" and "On Trial."

George Walsh Fights and Smiles in Typical Feature, "The Yankee Way"

(Fox Five Reel Production)

George Walsh, he of the winning smile, and Enid Markey, known favorably to all picture fans, occupy the leading roles in the Fox production "The Yankee Way." Literally as well as figuratively the picture starts with a "punch," Dick Mason putting a forcible end to the annoyances a girl is having in a restaurant, through the flirtation of a hoodlum.

As a result, Mason spends a night in jail, and his father, in anger, exiles him to the Balkan kingdom of Lithunia. On shipboard Dick discovers the girl of his adventure and his interest in the trip mounts.

When Dick arrives in far-off Lithunia he goes immediately to see Count Vortsky, the Minister of Finance, who has been carrying on a plot with the Bulgarian Ambassador. Vortsky only awaits word from Col. Masons' representative—his son—that he will sell. Dick agrees to give his final decision in the council room next day in the presence of the Princess Alexia, ruler of Lithunia.

Dick discovers that the Princess is no other than the girl of the cabaret, and when she signifies that she does not wish him to dispose of his holdings he changes his decision and announces he will keep the concession.

Vortsky, to whom the Princess is engaged, stirs up a revolution, but Dick and a few able Chicago assistants commence a counter movement which wins the day—and the Princess—for himself.

Edna Goodrich in "Queen X," a Story of the Fight Against Opium Smugglers

(Mutual Five Reel Production)

Centering around the efforts of a courageous district attorney's drive against smugglers in a notorious Chinese district in an American city, Mutual has provided Edna Goodrich with a tense and powerful vehicle. From the capture of "Queen X," known as the Queen of Chinatown, recognized as formerly a woman of prominence though now a drug addict, to the time when the assistant district attorney falls in love with her and becomes her protector for life, the story moves smoothly and rapidly. An excellent supporting cast includes Hugh Thompson, Lucille Taft, Miss Dora Adams and William Wolcott.

During trial of "Queen X" for complicity in a plot to defraud the Government, she is seen and recognized by Mary Stone, sister of John Stone, the assistant district attorney, as a former schoolmate who saved her life in a convent fire. Mary is successful in having sentence suspended in the case and she takes "Queen X" to her brother's summer home up state in an effort to restore her to health.

Stone's purpose in assenting to this arrangement is to secure information of the opium ring from his visitor. During the process he is much attracted by the girl's beauty and it is apparent that she is attracted by him.

On suggestion of his chief, Stone makes love to the young woman, believing she will reveal secrets desired, but he soon discovers the love he is simpulating is no longer make believe. He confesses his affection and together they face life and the fight to rid her of the drug habit.

The ——— theatre will show "Queen X" on ——— of ——— week.

Exotic Madame Petrova Brings Spirit of Asia to Lasky Feature, "Exile"

(Lasky-Paramount Five Part Production)

The name of Madame Petrova alone is guarantee of a dramatic, holding story. With the setting placed in faraway "Exile" a Portugese colony, a crisis through plot and counterplot is led up to, until the moment when Claudia offers herself to Harvey, an American, to save her husband from ruin, and it develops that she really loves Harvey.

Harvey, working for the Government has made great changes in desolate "Exile." Vincente Perez, Lord Chief Justice of the colony, unscrupulous and brutal, holds power of life or death over thousands of Arabs. Furthering his plans Perez tries to force silk dealers out of business, but reveals things to Harvey in a letter. The American threatens to expose the plot, and Perez, facing ruin and death, sends his wife, Claudia, to Harvey to offer him anything in her power to get the letter. In the gift of herself only, she is told, lies hope for her husband. Twenty-four hours later Claudia goes to Harvey; they have a sumptuous dinner. The woman is calm, goes to her room, and hands Harvey the key.

It is only then he sees she is genuinely in love with him, and he refuses to take advantage of the situation. He returns her husband's letter to her, and she returns it to Perez only to meet with humiliation. The Arabs rise against the cruel governor, and he is lynched. Claudia's life is barely saved, but at the last moment Harvey arrives, and together they listen to the diminishing sounds of the Arabs as the mob disperses, and remain safe in the knowledge of their inseparable happiness.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Lina Cavalieri Is at Work as a Screen Star

Filming "The Eternal Temptress" at Fort Lee, in Setting Reproducing Most Historic Parts of Venice and Rome

LINA CAVALIERI has started work on her first Paramount picture under the direction of Emile Chautard.

"The Eternal Temptress" was written expressly for Mme. Cavalieri by Mme. Fred de Gressac, and is a modern tale of Venice and Rome, with dramatic situations, human appeal and opportunities for scenic investiture. Director Chautard says it will afford the star opportunity for the exercise of her talents. He believes the picture will be an artistic triumph.

Mme. de Gressac has caught the temperament of the actress, so to speak, in "The Eternal Temptress." The addition of Lina Cavalieri to the great Paramount roster of Famous stars of stage and screen, is announced as an event of the season. Through the medium of this picture, Cavalieri will be brought before the photoplaygoers of the world. Director Chautard has a supporting cast that will be in every way adequate.

Parts of two most famous old world cities—Venice and Rome—will be reproduced at Fort Lee. The Grand Canal, with the Bridge of Sighs; the Church of San Marco, the quays of Rome—all will rise there. Interiors reproducing hovels and palazzos, quaint streets and dark passages have been constructed. The production is to be lavish. The least detail will be carefully looked after.

Mme. Cavalieri arrived at the studio, in brown velvet, all smiles, and filled with interest for the settings already provided for her. She seemed pleased with everything—and wonderfully alive.

If enthusiasm, care, skill and experience can combine to make a great picture then "The Eternal Temptress" should be really a triumph.

Louise Glaum Is to Remain a Triangle Star

She Says It Is Not Good Business to Jump from Company to Company—Contract Still Has More Than Year to Run

LOUISE GLAUM set at rest all rumors concerning her departure from Triangle last week by stating emphatically that she is under contract for more than a year and is glad to remain with the organization of which she has been a member since its inception. She has returned to Los Angeles.

The nature of Miss Glaum's next picture has not yet been revealed, but it is understood that she will essay a character of a different type than any which she has recently done. It is her wish to avoid the so-called "vampire" roles in favor of the more realistic emotional parts such as Duse and Bernhardt have brought to the stage.

"I have been long enough in pictures to know that poor productions mean death to a star. I do not care to see my name emblazoned in large type or to be the only advertised member of the company," Miss Glaum said.

Miss Glaum has been affiliated with Triangle longer than any other player. For some time she was featured with William S. Hart in western dramas; then came "The Wolf Woman," and with it her tremendous success as a personality and an actress. Since then she has appeared in a variety of characterizations, including those of "Somewhere in France," "Sweetheart of the Doomed," "A Strange Transgressor," "Love or Justice?" "Golden Rule Kate," "Idolaters" and others.

Miss Glaum is one of the few actresses who is a shrewd business woman. She has made a study of all phases of production and is interested in all that pertains to the motion picture industry. Speaking of the business side, she remarked:

"I have noticed that it is dangerous for a star to switch from company to company and from a line of exhibitors to another. A manager does not care to advertise a star who is liable to change over to his competitor the next day. That is why I prefer to remain among tried and true friends. I consider it not only a matter of sentiment but a matter of good business."

Charles Ray's First Paramount Directed by Ince

If you were given five thousand dollars and told to turn it into a hundred thousand dollars in six months, how would you go about it? This in a sentence, is the basis of Charles Ray's first Paramount Picture, produced by Thomas H. Ince, "The Son of His Father" which will be released the latter part of October.

Ridgwell Cullum wrote the novel from which the picture was made. Victor L. Schertzinger directed the production under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Schertzinger has directed many of Charles Ray's greatest hits. In the cast supporting the star are Vola Vale, who has the distinction of being the only woman in the cast, Robert McKim, Geo. Nicholls, John P. Lockney, Charles K. French and Geo. Hoffman.

Arthur Hopkins Astonished by Woodenhead Censorship

The censor board in Pennsylvania and in the city of Chicago, in holding up "The Eternal Magdalene," Goldwyn picture, gave Arthur Hopkins the startling surprise of his life.

Mr. Hopkins, venturing into films for the first time as a director, planned and made a great morality play of "The Eternal Magdalene" for the screen. It was his deliberate intention to produce a picture which would appeal to and stimulate the moral sentiment of the nation.

Goldwyn to avoid inconveniencing their exhibitor customers through delays in delivery of film, have rearranged their releases and offer Maxine Elliott in her second Goldwyn picture, "Fighting Odds," by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb on the date when the big screen morality play had been scheduled for presentation.

Mme. Petrova, Between Screenings, Will Try Legitimate

Madame Olga Petrova is planning to make a brief appearance on the legitimate stage this season at one of the smaller and more intimate type of metropolitan theatres like the Princess or the Booth. These recitals will be held on afternoons other than regular matinee days and will not in any way interfere with Petrova's activities in producing Petrova Pictures.

By the arrangement existing between Petrova and Frederick L. Collins, president of Petrova Picture Company, the distinguished actress will be unhampered in these stage pursuits, in view of her agreement to devote herself primarily to the production of her own personally supervised films.

No Eliminations by Censors in "The Warrior"

Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., 1,600 Broadway, New York, owners of the United States territorial privileges of "The Warrior" feel highly elated at the fact that the feature offering has passed the careful scrutiny of the National Board of Review without the necessity of a single elimination.

It is said there is not the slightest suggestion of the usual nauseating sex interest which forms an important part of many film productions and every reel of the seven part picture has a clean wholesome atmosphere.

Julian Eltinge's Next Production About Complete

Julian Eltinge is about through with his second Paramount production under Donald Crisp's direction. Marion Fairfax is working on his third scenario which Wm. C. De Mille will probably direct.

Universal Lines Up Newspapers to Animate Famous Cartoons

Foremost Publishers in Country Induced by Laemmle to Furnish Cartoons for Universal Screens—Feature Will Be Used in "Current Events"—Laemmle Considers Cartoons Great Implement for Propaganda

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., has in the past few weeks been in consultation with leading newspaper publishers throughout the country to reproduce in motion pictures the nation's most famous cartoons.

President Carl Laemmle and the Rev. Sunday, Surrounded by Universal City Buckaroos

"The bare announcement of that fact," Mr. Laemmle said, "may not at first strike one with its full importance. But, when you stop to consider that the cartoon is perhaps the most effective instrument of influence the press of today possesses, and that its reproduction on the screen will multiply that influence many thousandfold its importance looms up bigger. And the cartoon on the screen will, in my opinion, be far more effective than it is in the newspaper. When it appears on the screen it will come as a thing of life, growing line by line as the artist's brain conceives it, as the artist's hand creates it. The spectator will take part in that creation, and the completed picture will strike him with a force tenfold greater than that of the picture on the printed page.

"Newspaper cartoons on the screen will be, in fact," continued Mr. Laemmle, "the first great step in a union of forces between the press and the screen. We will speak of the 'power of the press.' People ar just beginning to perceive the power of the screen.

"In reproducing the cartoons of the influential papers of the country, the representative papers of every section of it, we of the Universal are coupling those powers together for the first time. I regard it as the greatest achievement of its kind in the history of the motion picture. There is no measuring the influence for good press and screen can wield when working together. Good cartoons, striking cartoons, cartoons that reflects as in a mirror the thoughts and opinion of the people of every section of the country are more eloquent than any editorials pens can write. They cannot fail to bring enlightenment and breadth of view to the millions who see them. Light on every public question of interest will be thrown from every angle."

Among the newspapers participating are: New York Herald, New York Tribune, New York Evening Sun, New York Evening Mail, Brooklyn Eagle, Chicago Daily News, Baltimore Sun, Baltimore American, Philadelphia Ledger, Philadelphia Record, Philadelphia Inquirer, Buffalo News, Pittsburgh Dispatch, Pittsburgh Press, Pittsburgh Leader, Boston Post, Boston Herald, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, St. Louis Republic, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Atlanta Constitution, Philadelphia Telegraph, Newark News, Albany Journal, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Cleveland News, Philadelphia Press and Atlanta Journal.

In fact every big newspaper in the United States not tied up by syndicate contracts with other newspapers, and therefore not in a position to grant screen rights, was quietly lined up by the Universal before public announcement of its purpose was made.

Raymond B. West Is Now a Paralta Director

He Participated in Production of "Civilization" for Eight Months, Directing Scenes and Constructing Many Settings

RAYMOND B. WEST, whose greatest work was participation in the production of "Civilization," has joined the Paralta organization as a director. For eight months West not only directed great situations and incidents in "Civilization," but also devoted his attention to camera work and the construction of scenes.

Negotiations which have been going on between Mr. West and Paralta for several months were brought to a head during the recent visit of Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, to the studios of his company in Hollywood. Contracts were then signed, under which the young director entered into a long-term connection with Paralta producing interest.

Raymond B. West, Who Will Now Direct Paralta Plays

Since Mr. West's contract with Triangle expired in August, he has been spending much of his time in the California mountains and joins Paralta in fine condition for a season of hard work truly assured him.

The engagement of Mr. West marks an important step in the determination of Mr. Anderson, president of Paralta, and Robert T. Kane, vice-president, to retain the services of a battery of directors, who, in talent, versatility, experience and reputation will enjoy the entire confidence of exhibitors throughout the country. In annexing Mr. West, Reginald Barker and Oscar Apfel, they have tried to attain their purpose.

West joined the staff of a Los Angeles daily as a cartoonist. He made a hit in this work, and through it became interested in motion picture production.

Beginning as a property man at the old Edendale Studio of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, he was promoted to assistant cameraman. He soon became a full-fledged cameraman, and in a short time thereafter was intrusted with the responsibility of directing a two-reel comedy, which made a hit and at the same time led to his promotion to a full-fledged director.

"Germans Are Coming" Is Cry in "Arms and the Girl"

The Fort Lee Paramount Studio looked like real war when "Arms and the Girl," Paramount play for October 8th release, was being put on. The studio lot was packed with "military" in the gray-green German uniforms. A quaint Belgian street had arisen. Down its center came a flying peasant crying, "the Germans are coming!" There followed an excited rabble and finally the army of the enemy.

The plot depicts the adventures of a beautiful American girl, Ruth Sherwood, played by Billie Burke, who is stranded in Belgium at the beginning of the war. Ruth, to save a friend's life, declares he is her affianced for whom she has been waiting.

The German general, to test the truth of her story, orders them to be married at once. Discovering she does not love her real fiance Ruth joyfully accepts the marriage which was forced upon her and all ends happily.

Farrar Likes Aztec Role in "The Woman God Forgot"

"THE WOMAN GOD GORGOT," from the pen of Jeanie Macpherson, is Geraldine Farar's first motion picture since "Joan the Woman," to be released shortly by Artcraft Pictures.

In speaking of her new characterization, which is said to be the greatest of her entire career, Miss Farrar said:

"You will like 'The Woman God Forgot,' I believe. Her unusual appeal lies in the romantic mysteries of the Aztec race. We all know they represented the highest form of civilization among the natives of the American continent at that period.

"Careful research into the many and sometimes mythical, chronicles of this ancient people revealed in Tezca, the daughter of Montezuma, a personality peculiarly adaptable to a unique characterization.

"Such a close study of this character was required for a historically correct portrayal that I was put on my mettle to actually live the life of this woman of a dead race in her conflicting loves for Alvarado, the Spanish captain, and her own people."

Some of the features in this photo-spectacle will be absolutely original. The great battle between the Spaniards under Cortez and the Aztecs takes place on a pyramid which is 200 feet high. More than 1,000 gorgeous costumes are carefully preserved in the Lasky wardrobe department. Rarely has a play given the opportunity for such vividly colorful costumes.

Miss Farar's supportingl cast includes Raymond Hatton as Montezuma; Wallace Reid as Alvarado; Hobart Bosworth as Cortez; Theodore Kosloff as Guatemoc; Walter Long as Taloc; Olga Gray as Marina; James Neill as a priest, and Charles B. Rogers as Cacamo.

"The Fighting Trail" Stars Appear at First Showing

WILLIAM DUNCAN and Carol Holloway, in leading roles in "The Fighting Trail," Vitagraph's fifteen episode serial, started the big outdoors film novel on its way by personally appearing at Pantages theatre in Los Angeles Sept. 17.

The serial, described by Pantages as "One of the very best features it ever has offered to a discriminating public," had been booked solid on the Pantages circuit.

At a showing arranged for the musicians of one of the New York theatres which had booked the serial. The music cues had been arranged by S. M. Berg, whose interpretation of the drama ran to agitatos, furiosos and other highly emotional music.

The leader took his entire orchestra to try the musicians as they watched the picture. Things went well for a time, but suddenly, during one of the most thrilling scenes, the music seemed to stutter. The leader had stopped leading and was looking at th picture and most of his men were doing the same.

"I'm glad it happened now," the director afterwards told Mr. Berg, "instead of in our theatre. We shall see all of these chapters before we try to play to them, because then the men will be able to keep their minds on their music."

Mary Garden at Home—Director a Secret

Announcement will be made shortly of the name of Mary Garden's director engaged by Goldwyn to produce "Thais." He is a well known figure in the industry. There has been no hint given out as to the likelihood of his being engaged by Goldwyn for this task.

The return of the Scotch diva to her American home was attended by many characteristic incidents. Reports were quick to herald that Mary Garden is no longer—er—plump, using the word as a substitute for the less pleasing word fat. Miss Garden returns fifteen pounds lighter than when she sailed for France via Spain in June.

Good Stories in Metro-Yorke Productions

Of all George Gibbs's books "Paradise Garden," now on the bookstands, is reported to be the best seller. It is pictured in the Metro-Yorke play for release October 1, under the same title. Harold Lockwood stars. The following authors are credited with their most recent productions:

Harold McGrath, "Pidgin Island"; Clarence B. Kelland, "The Hidden Spring"; Robert W. Chambers, "The Hidden Children"; Jackson Gregory, "Under Handicap"; James B. Hendryx, "The Promise"; Francis Perry Elliott, "The Haunted Pajamas"; Marie Van Vorst, "Big Tremaine"; E. J. Rath, "Mister 44," and "The River of Romance."

Vitagraph Fire in Producing "The Bottom of the Well"

A midnight fire destroyed the laboratory setting used in one of the scenes of "The Bottom of the Well," a Vitagraph production. This was at the studio near Sea Gate. In the laboratory scene were employed a score of policemen and as many citizens, all of whom got busy as soon as the flames were discovered. In fact, everybody was too busy to think of the regular police or firemen.

Director John Robertson was figuring on a new laboratory before "all out" was sounded for the fire. There was scarcely 48 hours delay in the making of the big feature.

Difficult Work for Marie Shotwell in Ivan Play

Exceptional demands from an artistic standpoint are made upon Marie Shotwell, one of the trio presented in Ivan Film Productions' eugenic drama, "Married in Name Only."

In part of the picture she is presented in a stage of insanity. The transition scene depicting the overpowering burden preying upon her mind that drives her into raving is powerful.

Mme. Petrova Casts Water-Colorist for Artist Part

Anders Randolf, who is a water-colorist of ability, was selected by Mme. Petrova for the part of Franz Jorn in her first production. Jorn is a characterization of a portrait artist.

Mme. Petrova knew only of Randolf's achievements in acting for the screen. She did not know his fame in the art world. He has been playing heavy leads and character parts four years and will be remembered in "The Suspect," "From Headquarters," "The Girl Phillippa" and "413."

Randolf modestly explained to Petrova that he was quite at ease with a brush or crayon in his hand, and that a studio "set" would be like home to him, but he did not go into any details as to the pronounced success he has won in both color work and black-and-white as a magazine cover artist and a portrait painter.

This is why Madame Petrova, Director George Irving, and all the members of the company registered unusual surprise one day last week, while rehearsing an important scene where Mr. Randolf is supposed to make a full length charcoal drawing of Petrova, when they saw a wonderful likeness of Madame in her graceful flowing draperies which she wears in this scene, quickly develop under the skillful fingers of Mr. Randolf. The half-finished picture has met with so much approval that Mr. Randolf has invited Mme. Petrova to sit for a water color portrait.

Harry Beaumont to Direct "Brown of Harvard"

Harry Beaumont has joined the forces of William N. Selig and is to direct "Brown of Harvard." The company has gone on to Cambridge to film screens.

Beaumont was three years an actor and later a director for the Edison Company and recently has been with Essanay. He directed Henry Walthall in "The Truant Soul" and Bryant Washburn in the "Skinner" series. Two of the "Skinner" stories Beaumont wrote.

"Vengeance and the Woman" Is Vitagraph's New Serial

"THE Fighting Trail," Vitagraph's outdoor serial, will not be lengthened beyond fifteen episodes. Instead, a new serial will be produced, to be titled "Vengeance and the Woman." Albert E. Smith, president, makes this official announcement:

"Through misinformation there have recently appeared in the trade press items declaring that the Vitagraph company had begun work on additional episodes of 'The Fighting Trail,' our latest serial, and that these episodes would extend the serial to thirty episodes. This statement is incorrect.

"It is true that 'The Fighting Trail' has exceeded even our estimates as an attraction, but even so we would not feel justified in carrying the picture out to a greater length than was contemplated in our original plans. 'The Fighting Trail' was made in fifteen episodes, all but the first being in two reels. The first, because of the vast amount of material required to set the story in full motion, was made in three reels. The serial was made and ready for the market long before the release date. Our contracts were made on a basis of fifteen episodes and we could not, if we desired, add any more to it.

"However, for the benefit of those who may have been misled, I wish to say that the success of 'The Fighting Trail' has been so unprecedented that we have been encouraged to plan another serial which we shall make just as stirring and entertaining as its predecessor. Work has been started on it, and it will be released before the end of December and its run concluded during the Spring months. It will be in fifteen episodes, to be known as 'Vengeance and the Woman.'"

Turkish Harem Subject Is First of "Three C's" Comedies

FRANK P. DONOVAN, director-general of the Commonwealth Comedy Co., Inc., producers of the Lou Marks-Pearl Shepard Comedies for the General Film Programme, this week completed a Turkish harem picture at the Thanhouser Studios. The play employs a hundred girls and seventy men as "extras." It took Director Donovan two weeks to cast the picture.

These comedies feature a former Keystone comedian, Lou Marks, with Pearl Shepard, winner of certain beauty contests. In the company are O. M. Paul, Jack Tanner, Tillie Forbes, Phillis Dawson, Leon Miller, Harry Pettibone, Laurie Mackin and Florence McLaughlin.

F. P. Donovan was a "movie" editor of the New York Star, New York Journal and the Photoplayers Weekly. He has produced "Billy" Quirk-Pathe Comedies, Milo, Vim, Monitor and the Frank P. Donovan Productions.

Some of Director Donovan's comedies are "His Watery Waterloo," "His Winning Way," "Fat and Foolish" and with Hughy Mack, "A Harem Romance" and "The Pet of the Place." They are released by General Film.

No Star in This New Brenon Production

"Empty Pockets," the mystery story by Rupert Hughes which Herbert Brenon has chosen for his next picture, is composed mainly of types. For this production there will be no star, but a typical Brenon cast will be headed by Bert Lytell, Barbara Castleton, Galanta and Susanne Willa.

Mr. Brenon has had considerable difficulty with his types. His casting director presented to him one character after another, till in desperation he went to the East Side District. The scenes in the sweatshops are acted by people from the sweatshop district and Mr. Brenon is satisfied.

Triangle's Seven-Reelers a Special Bonus

To Be Placed on the Program and at No Extra Charge for Rental—To Equal "The Flame of the Yukon" in Merit

COMMENCING December 1, Triangle will release a multiple reel feature once a month at the regular program price to all Triangle exhibitors who have contracts or run the program regularly.

Some time ago it was announced that Triangle would release one big states right feature a month, which could be booked either by the Triangle exhibitors or by others. This would have been offered at a price considerably in advance of the regular program number. It has been decided, however, that everything will be placed on the program at the standard program rental.

During the past month H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation, has quietly purchased several big and widely advertised novels and plays for these special productions. The first to be produced is "The Alley of Flashing Spears," a story by Donn Byrne, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Davis says:

"We are paying particular attention to the selection of our stories, and will furnish the exhibitor with a diversified program of society drama, comedy-drama with a punch, heavy dramas with comedy relief, strong heart interest plays, and dramas of the outdoors. Emphasis is being placed upon the importance of titles—titles which will excite interest and a desire to buy on the part of those who see them in advertisements or posters.

"All October releases are now finished, and the November productions will be completed within ten days, so we are now ready to guarantee not only prompt deliveries, but will have prints in exchanges at least two weeks ahead of the November release dates.

"October and November releases are as follows: 'Ashes of Hope,' 'A Phantom Husband,' 'One-Shot Ross,' 'Wild Sumac,' 'Firefly of Tough Luck,' 'The Stainless Barrier,' 'Doing Her Bit,' 'Up or Down,' 'Indiscreet Corinne,' 'Fighting Back,' 'The Fuel of Life,' 'Easy Money' and 'Blue Blood.'

"We are willing to stake the future of Triangle on the quality of these October and November productions from every standpoint—story, cast, lavishness of production and box-office value."

The special monthly releases for the program will be seven-reelers of the quality of "The Flame of the Yukon," which holds the record for being one of the best specials of the year, although it was released on the program at a price much lower than any of the states right features.

War Department Given Preparedness Essays by Vita

Following the award of one thousand dollars in cash to Henry H. Bliss, of 932 Calvart street, Baltimore, as the prize winner in its preparedness essay contest, Greater Vitagraph last week selected 600 of the articles submitted and forwarded them to the War Department at Washington.

The contest was inaugurated at the time "Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," Vitagraph's patriotic spectacle, was released and closed on July 4.

In the opinion of military and naval experts, the suggestions of Mr. Bliss and the six hundred others whose essays were included in list of honorable mention were so worthy, it was decided to send them to the authorities at Washington as possibly containing ideas of value to the experts now dealing with the war problems that confront America and her allies.

Girl Is Kidnapped in "Secret of Black Mountain"

"The Secret of Black Mountain," ready for immediate release as a Falcon Feature for General Film, has Viola Vale as a star and opposite her Philo McCullough. The drama is from a magazine story by Jackson Gregory, and the plot is laid in California, with a mountain background. Production was supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The most vital part of the story concerns a girl's experiences when she is kidnapped by a handsome young mountaineer and conducted upon an enforced mission of mercy. During her thrilling dangers the secret of a fortune becomes gradually disclosed, making a combination of romance, detective story and a love affair.

Conservation Slides to Be Shown in New England States

Hon. D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, is the second member of the Cabinet to take advantage of the offer made to the Government by the War Co-operation Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for utilizing the screen to disseminate information during the period of the war.

The Department of Agriculture, acting in conjunction with the Motion Picture Committee of the National Association, has arranged for the display, during the next three or four weeks, at motion picture theatres in Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Rhode Island of lantern slides dealing with the canning, preserving, drying and pickling of perishable food products. This action was taken as a result of reports received by the Department that a large surplus of perishable fruits and vegetables was accumulating in the big population centers, and that there was great danger that large quantities would go to waste.

Woman's Photoplay Shown at Broadway Theatre

Lois Weber, woman producer, is said to establish a new grade of distinction in "The Price of a Good Time," which Jewel Productions, Inc., brings into Broadway theatre, October 7.

Some of her previous plays are "Shoes," "Where Are My Children?," "Hypocrites," "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle" and "Even As You and I."

Henry Krause Well Fitted for "Les Miserables"

Henry Kraus, premier actor of France, who stars in Pathe's eight-reel production, "Les Miserables," is said by Pathe to be the only actor in the world who could give an absolutely true-to-life interpretation of Victor Hugo's wonderful character, Jean Valjean.

"Victor Hugo was a Frenchman, his story about France and French people, therefore, the Pathe production made in France, with the best known actor, leading woman and child actress of France can be considered almost an ideal interpretation of Hugo's story," says one critic.

Clara Kimball Young at Work on "Shirley Kaye"

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, who has just completed "Magda," her first production by her own organization under the management of Harry I. Garson, has already started work on "Shirley Kaye," which will be her second release.

Joseph Kaufman, who has just completed Billie Burke's new picture, "Arms and the Girl," will direct Miss Young in this production instead of Emile Chautard, who is busily engaged on the picture now being made by Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

Corliss Giles has been engaged to play the lead. This will be his first appearance on any screen.

The play is well known for its successful run and as the vehicle in which Elsie Ferguson made a tremendous success. The screen version is particularly adapted to Miss Young's talents and there is no question but that she will duplicate her former screen successes in "Shirley Kaye."

The picture is to be released some time next month.

"The Princess of Park Row" an October Release

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has selected "The Princess of Park Row," a swift-moving international romance from the pen of Paul West, as the vehicle to head the "Blue Ribbon" October releases.

"The Princess of Park Row," picturized by A. Van Buren Powell and produced under the supervision of Ashley Miller, will mark the debut of Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald as a feature combination.

The opening scenes of "The Princess of Park Row" are laid in the palace grounds of the king in the principality of Bellaria where is revealed a plot in which the baron has succeeded literally in stealing from the people mining properties of vast value.

Ince Leases Race Track for Hart Production

Thomas H. Ince, in his initial William S. Hart-Artcraft Picture, leased a race track and staged the entire affair especially for his film.

The race track scenes in "The Narrow Trail," in which Hart makes his debut at an Artcraft star, play a very important part in the story and present a thrilling climax to the play.

In these scenes "Big Bill" saves his life by winning the race astride his famous pinto "Fritz." To fill the grand stand three thousand extras were engaged for this photoplay, and several spectacular mob effects are disclosed when the crowds discover the "dark horse" in the race.

Anita King Says Directors Should Get in Touch

"Every director ought to make it his business to come in contact with the exhibitors as often as possible," said Anita King, the new Horkheimer-Mutual star, whose first production, "The Girl Angle," is to be released October 8.

Olga Petrova, Appearing in Petrova Picture Co. Productions

"Big Ben," London Clock, in "A Little Princess"

Director Marshal Neilan succeeded in bringing a touch of real London life to Mary Pickford's new Artcraft picture, "A Little Princess," when he obtained actual motion pictures of the world-celebrated clock, Big Ben.

The scenario of Miss Pickford's picture called for several views of the clock, to be flashed on the screen as Miss Pickford, in the role of Sara Crewe, drives through the streets of London with her father, Captain Crewe.

Little Friend of Mary Pickford Corrects an Error

Mary Pickford some time ago received a letter from a little girl in Alabama saying that the little girl's particular hen had hatched a brood of chickens, all of them black except one, which was pure white, and that the writer had named the pure white one after "America's Sweetheart."

Recently Miss Pickford received another letter from the same little girl saying that she was very sorry but that she had to change the name of the white chicken from Mary Pickford to Douglas Fairbanks, as it was that kind of a chicken.

Emile Chautard to Direct Clara Kimball Young

The French director, Emile Chautard, who directed Clara Kimball Young in her first picture, "Magda," and who is now directing Mme. Lina Cavalieri in her forthcoming release, will direct Miss Young in "The Marionettes," which is to follow "Shirley Kaye."

Nine out of ten chances, Vivian Martin is in love, and "somebody" has just made a cruel remark. Vivian, overalls and all, is centered in a new Paramount film, "The Sunset Trail."

New York Is Permanent Home for Metro-Yorke Plays

FUTURE Metro-Yorke plays starring Harold Lockwood will be made at the Metro Super-Feature Studio at 645 West Forty-third street, New York. This was decided by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, soon after his arrival from California a week ago. Mr. Balshofer has abandoned his California headquarters, and hereafter will direct all his activities from New York.

The past week has been a very busy one, indeed, for Mr. Balshofer. He has established business headquarters in the Metro offices. These are in charge of Wiley Gibson, as business manager. Mr. Gibson came from California with Mr. Balshofer, and Mr. Lockwood along with Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; Lester Cuneo, the Yorke "heavy;" William Clifford, character actor; John Schronberg, violinist, and Antonio Gaudio, cameraman. Harry H. Poppe, whose duties will be to look after the publicity for the Yorke Company's activities, was also with the party.

Alterations are being made at the studio to suit the demands of Mr. Balshofer's next picture. It is to be made from a story by a well-known author and Mr. Balshofer expects with it to equal, if not excel, his current effort, "Paradise Garden," which he regards as one of the biggest productions he has ever handled.

Two Extremes of Continent in "The Paradise Garden"

"Paradise Garden" is remarkable for the beauty of its locations and of such general excellence that it is regarded by Metro as one of Fred J. Balshofer's most ambitious efforts.

Mr. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer set the picture in two extreme locales—a vast estate tucked away in the wilds of the country and a big metropolis where society seeks its pleasure.

The scenes transpiring upon the vast estate were filmed on one of the show places of California, special permission having been obtained by Mr. Balshofer for its use. These scenes completed Mr. Balshofer, Harold Lockwood and their entire company journeyed to New York, where the required scenes of the great metropolis were photographed.

Walter E. Greene, Artcraft, to Give Soldiers Delicacies

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, returned to his desk at the New York headquarters yesterday following a well-deserved vacation. Two weeks ago Mr. Greene, after an extremely active year during which he piloted his organization to its present magnitude, left his affairs in the hands of his associates to take up the life of a gentleman farmer on his rural home at South Weymouth, Mass.

The most fertile portion of Mr. Greene's farm was set aside as a war garden last spring by the Artcraft executive and during his two weeks received his personal attention.

Wonderful Mine in O. Henry's Great Stories

To date twenty-three two-reel and three four-reel O. Henry film stories havs been completed, and the work of preparing others for film immortality is being carried on as rapidly as is consistent with obtaining of the best results. Tentatively fourteen other O. Henry subjects have been chosen, five of which will be released shortly, according to General Film.

The current O. Henry films are "The Duplicity of Hargraves" and "The Lonesome Road." Announcement is made by General Film that the following O. Henry stories will be ready for distribution shortly as Broadway Star Features:

"Dry Valley Johnson," "The Enchanted Kiss," "A Night in New Arabia," "Law and Order" and "A Ruler of Men." Selected at random from among the many stories which O. Henry penned during his later years, these new screen adaptations are expected to surpass the high standard set in the others that have gone before. As rapidly as good workmanship permits still other O. Henry stories will be added to the long list of screen versions.

Among those which probably will be under way soon in the producers studios are "One Dollar's Worth," "Renaissance of Charleroi," "Hygeia at Solito," "Buried Treasure," "Two Renegades," "A Technical Error," "Cabbages and Kings" and "Telemachus, Friend."

The two-reel O. Henry stories, which are in the majority, have been and are being filmed on the Pacific Coast, while the four-reel stories, of which there will be a half-dozen or more shortly, are being staged and filmed in New York amid the scenes and settings about which the short story laureate loved to write.

"The Heart of Ezra Greer," Frederick Warde Play

Frederick Warde, Shakespearean actor, is again the star of a Pathe feature. He is announced in the five-part "Gold Rooster" play, "The Heart of Ezra Greer," for release October 7. This picture was produced by Thanhouser from a scenario by Lloyd Lonergan, and was directed by Emile Chautard. Assisting Mr. Warde in the cast are Leila Frost, George Forth, Lillian Mueller, and Baby Gerald Badgley.

Pathe says: "The Heart of Ezra Greer" is a picture full of human interest of the best type, and that Mr. Warde's characterization of Ezra is one of the best things he has done.

Pretty Girl and Flirts in Vita's "Big V" Comedy

Vitagraph starts its October "Big V." releases with "Plagues and Puppylove," written by Graham Baker and directed by Lawrence Semon, also the chief comedian. The Vitagraph riot squad, composed of Joe Simberg, Earle Montgomery, Joe Basil and Pietro Aramondo, contributes to the fun, this time as cops with penchants for flirting.

"Plagues and Puppylove" revolves around Florence Curtis, petite "Big V." comedienne. The girl, who is strolling in the park with her dog, is beset on all sides by flirts.

Vitagraph Uses Billboards for New Serial

Greater Vitagraph announces a record billboard advertising campaign which will be launched in September in connection with the new serial, "The Fighting Trail." The campaign will cover eight weeks and will be divided into periods of four weeks each. One style of 24 sheets will be posted for the first four weeks and will be followed by a second.

The campaign will be started at the same time in more than 750 cities and towns, and it is estimated to cost $100,000.

Double Star System Is a Success in Motion Pictures

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne, co-stars in Metro Super-Features, demonstrate the fact that co-operation wins in motion picture work as it does in all other walks of life.

The Bushman-Bayne picture, produced under the Metro banner, is a staple in the motion picture market. Patrons know what to expect. They know they will see a play full of action and romance, the leading parts played with equal ability. This is simply the result of intelligent teamwork, of good-natured give-and-take, of the association of two persons who are used to each other's methods and know how to obtain the best results in working together.

"I am a firm believer in the double-star system," says Mr. Bushman himself. "Perhaps I am somewhat prejudiced in favor of it on account of the success Miss Bayne and I have had in working together, both in the old Essanay days, and in our present happy association with Metro. Actually, our experience has been such as to make the single-star system look to me almost lopsided."

Miss Bayne further illustrates the value of team-work by agreeing with Mr. Bushman. She says:

"In our next production, 'God's Outlaw,' as well as in previous productions such as 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'Man and His Soul,' and 'The Wall Between,' sometimes one part has stood out, and sometimes another, but on the whole I think neither of us has anything to worry about in this regard, and I agree with Mr. Bushman as to the value of the twin-star system."

No Cold Weather for "Fatty" Arbuckle

"Fatty" Arbuckle has decided that the sunshine of California is more becoming to his peculiar style of beauty than the white lights of Broadway, and is returning to the Coast studios at the completion of his present picture.

The high cost of living and the famine in wool hastened his departure. "Fatty" asserts he has an innate distaste for furlined B. V. D.'s, hence he is hurrying away before the first cold spell.

"Zit" Promises International Will Get Busy

Mr. Hearst's Film Service, Under Famous Vaudeville Reviewer of New York Evening Journal, Is to Soon Commence Production

WITH the advent of "Zit" as general manager of the International Film Service, Inc., last week, great things are promised for that organization. "Zit" is a theatrical writer on the New York Evening Journal and so well known by that nom de plume that his real name of C. F. Zittel is scarcely known at all.

"Zit" was found on the sixteenth floor of the Godfrey Building to which he has moved the theatrical department of the ournal. It is also his office as executive manager of the film service. He said:

"The International expects to begin producing within a short time. The Heart organization controls the output of the foremost writers of today. Their works, which originally appear in the eight magazines owned by Mr. Hearst, will be utilized in motion pictures, prepared for the screen by foremost scenario writers. Other plans are being worked out, the details of which will be announced later on."

Scores of vaudeville headliners give "Zit" the credit of their success, while every big manager in the country admits that his influence has been most beneficial to the profession. Such motion picture magnates as Adolph Zukor, Hiram Abrams, Marcus Loew, and others, acknowledge the benefit they have derived from "Zit's" advice.

It was because of his wonderful ability of recognizing talent and his keen executive sense that Mr. Hearst appointed him to the position he will now occupy.

"Zit's" vaudeville reviews in the course of years became a standard and are recognized as such widely over the country. They reduced to parlance the results of close scrutiny and splendid understanding.

In February, 1913, Mr. Zittel, foreseeing the remarkable future of the motion picture industry, established a motion picture department in the New York Evening Journal which has been as successful as the theatrical department.

In assuming the general management of the International, Mr. Zittel will divide his time between that organization and the theatrical department of the New York Evening ournal surrounding himself with a corps of able assistants in both these organizations.

King-Bee Players Will Go to the Coast

On October 10 President Burstein of the King-Bee Film Corporation, New York, will move his entire company of King-Bee players to Los Angeles. The demand for this original brand of comedies is so great that the facilities at Bayonne, their present home, is inadequate to meet their requirements.

In the King-Bee company are Billy West, Ellen Cassity, Babe Hardy, Leo White, Bud Ross, Ethel Gibson, Harry Cooper, Jackie Jackson, Martha Dean and Sam LeRose.

While on the Pacific Coast, in addition to the two-reel two-a-month releases, a special five-reel comedy entitled "King Soloman," with Billy West in the title role, will be made and ready for release on January 1.

Colored "Fans" to Have Two New Theatres in Memphis

Two new theatres for colored patrons have been opened in Memphis, Tenn., the Grand and the Daisy. Both of these houses are said to compare favorably in structure and equipment with the theatres which admit whites only.

Sam Zerilla owns the Grand which cost $26,000 and Joe Maceri is manager and partner in the Daisy, costing fully as much.

Party in Honor of Child Actress's New Contract

Mary McAllister's parents have put their signatures to a long term contract with Essanay. Little Mary gave a studio party in honor of the event to a number of her young girl and boy friends at the Essanay plant last week. One of the treats of the occasion included a trip through the studio departments.

Town of 754 Take Paramount-Artcraft Output

Paramount announces that the Liberty theatre at Canaseraga, N. Y., a town with only 754 population, has signed for the entire output of Paramount and Artcraft during the coming year. The contract is with William L. Sherry Feature Film Company at Buffalo. The statement says:

"Thus it is that Paramount and Artcraft pictures have become so popular with exhibitors in the smaller towns as well as in the great cities. They are so consistently good that they are dependable every day in the year."

"Parentage," House Organ Brings Inquiries

More than one hundred direct-by-mail inquiries from exhibitors desirous of booking "Parentage" have been received by the editor of "The Parentage Messenger," the first film house organ to be launched in the independent field. These requests for first run have come from all over the country following the issuance of the first four numbers.

As rapidly as these letters have come in they have been sorted and forwarded to the various exchanges handling "Parentage," to be followed up by personal calls and the actual booking contracts secured.

The fifth issue of the "Parentage Messenger" contains an article on "Campaigning by Telephone," in which a way is pointed out to work up a large personal following by a consistent use of the telephone.

There is also a discussion of Publicity and How to "Plant" It, and the method of a successful small-town exhibitor for obtaining increased admissions is amply set forth.

Goldwyn's First Contract in Canada

In the Dominion, Goldwyn has gained high favor with exhibitors, it is said, largely because of the exploitation work conducted by N. A. Nathanson and his associates. Following are Goldwyn contracts from the date of the first release "Polly of the Circus," September 9:

News Notes of Philadelphia Motion Picture Houses

The Tioga Theatre Holding Company has transferred its property, the Tioga theatre, Philadelphia, to William F. Boogar. The assessed value of the property is $50,000, but there is a mortgage of $65,000.

War has helped the Family and Savoy theatres, in the Market Street block, close to the City Hall and the railroad terminals. One reason is that the houses are handy to the navy yard and get the trade of the jackies.

Ben Shindler, of the Ridge Avenue theatre, has secured the first showing of Paramount and Fox pictures in his neighborhood. The opening of the Autumn season, on Labor Day, was marked by the introduction of a six-piece orchestra under the direction of the well known leader Warren Simpkins. Patrons are showing appreciation by increased attendance.

Universal Takes Frazee as Comedy Director

The latest addition to the directing force at Universal City is Edwin Frazee, well-known producer of comedies, who will direct two-reel subjects.

Frazee is the director of a number of successful Keystone comedies, including "Crooked to the End," "The Village Vampire," "An Oily Scoundrel," "Bathtub Perils," "Love Will Conquer" and "A Favorite Fool," in which Eddie Foy and the Seven Little Foys were starred.

He also produced "Social Pirates" and other comedies for the Fox Company.

A new company of players has been organized by Production Manager McRae for Director Frazee. The principal comedian is Stanley Laurel, who recently was one of the featured players at the New York Hippodrome. Rena Rogers, who has been appearing in Vogue Comedies, will play the leading feminine role, and Neal Burns, who is well known through his work in Christie Comedies, will be the juvenile man.

Walter Belasco and Lydia Yeamans Titus, both popular Universal players, complete the cast of Frazee's first picture, which is being produced under the working title of "Skidding Hearts."

Italian Saves Girl from His Own Bomb—in Picture

In "The Penny Philanthropist," Wholesome Films production, there is an intensely dramatic incident founded on an actual experience of William J. Burns, the internationally famous detective.

An Italian laborer has been bribed to light a fuse-bomb in the basement of a rich man's home. The Italian had no grievance against the rich man but he needed money with which to bring his wife and family from Italy.

In the picture the Italian lights the fuse but as he is stealing away he discovers Peggy, "The Penny Philanthropist," who had been so kind to him, entering the doomed house. Knowing it means certain death the Italian pleads with her not to enter.

Miss Peggy O'Neill, in the title role of Clara E. Laughlin's master story, offers a remarkable portrayal bringing to her interpretation a wealth of talent and charm.

Slant-Eyed Orientals in Edna Goodrich's "Queen X"

EDNA GOODRICH'S new Mutual photo-drama, "Queen X," released October 1, is an attractive production, it is said. Director John B. O'Brien selected the scenes.

Miss Goodrich entered into the adventurous spirit of the play quite as though she were used to underground passageways, smuggler's dens, villainous looking and slant-eyed Orientals and all the elements that go to make up this quick action drama.

Miss Goodrich is at her best when she has plenty of chance for action as in "Paprika." In "The Runaway" she used the cayenne instead of the paprika and as a result this dashing little bit was one of the sensations of the New York stage.

Director O'Brien has caught the spirit of "Queen X" admirably. It is the atmosphere of mystery—the subterranean element, the waterfront tank with the big ships in the offing, that stimulates imagination in Mr. Stanton's drama. The smuggling band is made up of Oriental plotters whose determined efforts to circumvent the government in importation and distribution of prohibited drugs is so persistent that the revenue department finds its hands full in running the schemers to earth and ultimately into prison.

Brady Screens International Stage Play

The old drama, "Shall We Forgive Her?" which toured this country season after season for several years, and which was also more or less popular in parts of Europe, has been adopted for the screen as a World-Picture, Brady-Made feature, and is next in notation upon the regular list of releases. In the picture version June Elvidge and Arthur Ashley appear in the principal roles. The scene is laid partly on the frontier and partly in New York.

More beautiful than ever, Clara Kimball Young and Valkyrien lend charm and vitality to the Select Picture Corporation's "Magda"

"Denver Dixon," Cowboy Actor, Returns from Antipodes

"DENVER DIXON," the cowboy actor, formerly with the Selig Polyscope Company, has returned from a tour of New Zealand and a visit to every leading city and town in Australia. He went to New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, South and West Australia. Dixon is in Chicago calling on friends and later expects to visit eastern cities after his two years abroad. He says:

"I visited 600 theatres while absent from the United States. I had with me two Selig prints, 'The Days of the Thundering Herd,' and 'The Diamond S Roundup.' With their showing I also delivered a lecture on 'What an American Cowboy Really Is.'

"I found New Zealand and Australia great countries for motion pictures. The theatres in Australia are, many of them, finer than those in this country and the pictures are presented with care and to the accompaniment of good music. They run new prints, first releases.

"American motion picture manufacturers have great opportunities in New Zealand and Australia. The pictures manufactured in Australia are not the best, for there are no high-class producers. They prefer American made pictures, particularly western subjects. They bill just as we do in this country and as elaborately as possible.

"While delivering my lecture and showing films at Adelaide, Australia, the Governor of South Australia was present and praised the Selig pictures. The Governor's wife, Lady Galloway, said she had always wondered why American cowboys wore fringed pants."

Dixon states that business was fine throughout Australia and that the Antipodes is virtually overwrought with motion picture enthusiasm.

B. S. Moss Sees Box Office Hit in "The Seven Pearls"

"THE SEVEN PEARLS," Pathe serial featuring Mollie King and Creighton Hale, is getting off to a flying start.

B. S. Moss, who booked the serial for his circuit of vaudeville theatres in New York City, and released it a week in advance of the general release date, is, according to the motion picture editor of the New York American, wearing an air of self-satisfaction for the way the picture has been taken by the audiences of his theatres. In discussing this serial, Mr. Moss said:

"The running start that 'The Seven Pearls' made last week with Mollie King and Creighton Hale in the leading roles, gives assurance that for the next fifteen weeks I will not have to look over the box-office statements with an anxious eye, for its success seems practically assured.

Pathe is conducting a big national newspaper campaign to help the exhibitor put over "The Seven Pearls" in the proper fashion. Full-page, half-page and quarter-page ads are being used in about 75 of the big newspapers throughout the country, and in each section the list of theatres showing "The Seven Pearls" is given good display in these ads.

Mollie King who scored such a big hit in the Pathe serial, "The Mystery of the Double Cross" and Creighton Hale, whose work as the Laughing Mask in "The Iron Claw" made him a popular matinee idol, are adding to their reputation by their excellent work in "The Seven Pearls."

Burnstein Ready to Launch "Shame"

Jules Burnstein is rapidly greasing the ways for the launching of the recently completed John W. Noble picture, "Shame," which will be distributed on a state rights basis.

Mr. Burnstein, whose record as a motion picture distributing export, includes long terms as manager of the Mutual and the Pathe exchanges, respectively, has been devoting his time exclusively to the E. K. Lincoln Grey Seal Serial since the starting of that series early last spring. While his duties as vice-president and general manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation have made him a familiar figure on Broad-Jimmy Dale has called him out of town, at frequent intervals, and he recently completed a hurried trip through New England while announcing at the same time, coming of the Noble feature.

Few men have made a deeper study of Jules Burnstein. Equipped with a valuable business training, he has kept in intimate touch with the many problems of film distribution during the constantly changing condition of the industry. As the manager of two of the largest of exchanges, his wide acquaintance included active motion picture men in every city of the country, and his frequent trips to the large film centres are always signals for impromptu reunions.

Eight Triangle Companies Busy at Culver City

Eight productions are in progress, seven have just been completed, and the scenario department is working on scripts for a score of others at the Culver City plant of the Triangle Film Corporation.

The most elaborate production of those now occupying the seven big glass and concrete stages at the Culver City plant and the 1,800-acre ranch at Hartville, in the Santa Monica Mountains, is "Doing Her Bit," in which Ruth Stonehouse plays the leading role and Jack Conway wields the megaphone.

Texas Guinan shares stellar honors with Belle Bennett in a new type of "vampire" piece which Walter Edwards is preparing for the screen. It is entitled "The Fuel of Life" and throbs with the emotions of a wife who turns siren to win her husband away from the wiles of a modern vampire whose rare business acumen and spectacular beauty have stolen his love.

Allan Sears in Triangle's "Blue Blood" Company

Allan Sears is the most recent acquisition to the large force of players engaged at the Triangle Studio in Culver City, Cal. His first appearance under the Triangle colors will be in "Blue Blood," a production just begun by Director E. Mason Hopper, in which Alma Ruebens will be starred.

An unusually elaborate set, covering an entire stage 50 by 150 feet has been erected for the production. The furniture includes some of the finest antiques in the huge Triangle art collection and is valued at $30,000.

Three Roles in One Picture for Crane Wilbur

"Blood of His Fathers," a David Horsley production, for release on the Art Dramas program, is said to be a tense drama of big situations, treating of hereditary influence in a distinctly new and interesting way.

Crane Wilbur portrays three widely divergent roles—an unusual feat. In the early scenes, laid in the Civil War period, he is seen as a daredevil captain of a band of guerillas. Later he plays the part of an old man, a helpless paralytic, and in the latter part of the story, he is seen as a dissipated wastrel of modern times.

Stanley King

Stanley King, Juvenile, on Trip to Coast

Stanley King, juvenile star, has left for the Pacific Coast, where he has been engaged to appear in a picture. He will be through in time to finish an engagement with the Humphrey production which is now in preparation.

Ince Can Shoot a Little Bit Himself

Thomas H. Ince, with the opening of the hunting season in California, September 1, set about to capture a record for himself. Taking his favorite shotgun to the mountains, he bagged the limit of doves in exactly half an hour of hunting.

What is more, he shot the majority of them while speeding through the fields in his auto. Bill Hart says he will have to shoot the legs off a centipede, one by one, to retrieve his lost laurels.

Hiller and Wilk Address Is 912 Longacre

Pretty Girls and Queer Oddities in Sennett Comedies

THE first Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "A Bedroom Blunder," will be released Oct. 7. It is described as a combination of beauty, uproarious humor and film novelty. Mr. Sennett recently stated he had seen it in the rough and that it was "a knock-out."

Mack Sennett is giving personal attention to every one of the new comedies. He has retained the cream of the companies over which he previously held sway and has seen to it that every cast is an all-star cast.

In "A Bedroom Blunder" beautiful Mary Thurman has the role of a young wife who has the misfortune to lose a diamond necklace, which, by a train of excruciatingly funny circumstances comes into the possession of Charley Murray, who has a volcanic wife in the person of Eva Thatcher.

Wayland Trask is Mary's husband, and his jealousy is aroused over the necklace episode. There are funny scenes in a hotel, due to the switching of rooms by a hotel clerk. Charley, who is a flirt, gets into no end of trouble and is in one series of harrowing and hilarious predicaments from start to finish, which culminate in amazing climaxes. There are bathing girls galore in costumes that exceedingly chic. Miss Thurman's costumes are said to be absolutely novel. Murray introduces "stunts."

"The Pullman Bride" and "Roping Her Romeo" are to follow "A Bedroom Blunder," but the date of their release has not yet been announced.

Mack Sennett expresses himself as entirely satisfied with progress at the studio. As may be expected beautiful girls will form one of the attractive features of all the productions, girls costumed in the most fetching manner, but likewise gifted with the intelligence to enact the roles assigned to them. The leading roles will be in the hands of stars throughout. Innumerable new ideas in the way of surprises and comedy "stunts" are promised.

Clara Williams Launches a Bark on Sea of Production

CLARA WILLIAMS is the latest independent producer. Her screen successes will be recalled in "The Bargain," "The Corner," "Hell's Hinges," "The Criminal" and "Three of Many."

A company headed by her will produce pictures in the Paralta Studios in Hollywood. Distribution will be under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc. Work will begin at once, all papers having been signed by Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, on his recent visit to the West Coast.

Miss Williams' first appearance on the stage was in the role of "Lady Isabel" in "East Lynn," with the Santa Barbara Stock Company. She made a good impression at her debut and remained with that organization for the entire season. Leaving the Santa Barbara organization, Miss Williams joined Richard Jose, on tour, in "Don't Tell My Wife," and then went into vaudeville with True Boardman in a sketch called "The Way of the West."

In Denver, G. M. Anderson was attracted and persuaded her to forsake the stage for the screen. So she made her debut in pictures with the Essanay Company, playing leads in one-reelers and has been a decided success.

Deciding at the end of a year and a half to go back on the stage, she went to Chicago. Here she accepted an engagement to go on the road in another playlet called "The Awakening." Then she joined Lubin in Philadelphia where she remained for a year. Going with the Lubin Company to the Pacific Coast, she was approached by the New York Motion Picture Corporation. She accepted the offer. Her first role with this company was in "The Witch of Salem."

Wm. A. Brady Has High Praise for "The Burglar"

WILLIAM A. BRADY has high praise for one of his forthcoming productions—"The Burglar." He does not hesitate to say he considers it the best motion picture ever made. In talking of it he first referred to the recent whirlwind run of "Rasputin," at the Park theatre, where the S. R. O. sign was up every day. Mr. Brady said:

"I cannot be mistaken in expressing the view that exhibitors of program features will benefit greatly, not alone from the New York reception of the big Russian photoplay, but from other immediate offerings which we are supplying.

"We shall presently follow 'Rasputin,' carrying its all-star cast and metropolitan endorsement, with the publication of 'The Burglar,' which I consider the finest motion picture, long or short, that I have ever seen.

"Carlyle Blackwell plays the name part in this production, departing abruptly from his good clothes line of heroes to the rough-and-ready garb of a desperate night prowler.

"Little Madge Evans and Evelyn Greeley are featured with Mr. Blackwell, Madge as the little girl who surprises the marauder at his work, but must never learn that he is her father, and Miss Greeley as the young mother who deserved a happier life than the ill-starred father was able to bestow.

"Many persons consider the stage play from which this screen drama was made the best product of all Augustus Thomas's long and highly successful career as a dramatist. In any case, I will guarantee its complete effectiveness as a photoplay.

"These and other World-Pictures might readily have been marketed on the state rights plan at greatly increased profit if we had chosen to form a fake corporation for that purpose or to 'bunk' the exhibitors in any of several other known ways. Instead, we are challenging comparisons as to the merit and drawing power of World fair price features of the length demanded by their contents, with the special price features sometimes extensively heralded, of which length is the principal ingredient."

Blackton Works Day and Night on "The Judgment House"

WORK is being rushed day and night on "The Judgment House," picture adaptation of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel on Paramount's November program. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton wants to get the production ready on time and also insist on the quality.

One of the scenes shows a lawn party. This was filmed on the Blackton estate in Long Island. Interiors were made in the Blackton town-house in Brooklyn.

The story includes portions of the Boer war and these scenes were taken at Staten Island where the configuration of the landscape is said to be virtually a replica of the actuality. In these battle scenes a small army of extra people portrayed the opposing troops and residents of Staten Island hastened to the location wondering if there had been an invasion of their peaceful domain.

The role of Jasmine, heroine, is taken by Violet Heming, English actress, who is not only a type for the role but possesses a magnetic personality as well.

Rudyard Bynge is portrayed by Wilfred Lucas. He is expected to depict the role in realistic manner.

Conway Tearle, whose many characterizations have been marked for their artistry, depicts Ivan Stafford.

High Praise for Ince in Salt Lake Paper

"The Ince stamp of approval to anything in pictures is as good as 'sterling' on a piece of fine silver. It stands for merit in the —nth degree, for who has ever seen an Ince photoplay that even smacked of the mediocre?"

The foregoing is an excerpt from an article by Arthur S. Winton, in the Herald-Republican of Salt Lake City, Utah, of which he is Dramatic Editor.

Mabel Normand at Plattsburg for Martial Scenes

The thousands of body-weary student officers in the second training camp at Plattsburg, who know little but reveille, beans, drill, beans, drill, beans and taps, were treated to a palatable morsel of diversion this week. Mabel Normand is in camp.

Mabel Normand's first comedy for Goldwyn Pictures, "Joan of Flatbush," by Porter Emerson Browne, calls for many martial scenes.

In company with Director Charles T. Horan, Mr. Browne, Lawrence McCloskey, of the scenario staff, George Bertholon, Mr. Horan's assistant, and a headquarters staff, the famous comedienne will spend two weeks on the shores of Lake Champlain.

Maciste Feats Excite Wonder

The feats of strength displayed by Maciste, the giant of "Cabiria," who is now being starred in "The Warrior," controlled by the General Enterprises, Inc., and recently showed at the Criterion in New York, have excited the interest of many people who have heard about them, but were unable to see the picture during its New York run.

Picked at random from the variety of stunts which the herculean picture player treats as child's play during his work in the film are the carrying of three good sized men with one hand, knocked down a full sized horse with one blow, uprooting a sturdy oak tree by the roots with his bare hands, leaping high over a parapet on horseback into the turbulent river below, and carrying upon his shoulders over the slippery crags of the Alps a gun carriage weighing five hundred pounds.

Camera Mission in Northern Canadian Wilds

The Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach., Cal., has sent a camera mission into the northern wilds of Canada under the guidance of E. J. Chinlund. They will not return until driven back by the extreme cold weather of the north.

"The Co-Respondent" Bought in Record Time by Jewel

Records for quick buying were all broken this week when Jewel Productions, Inc., bought "The Co-respondent," a production by Ralph Ince, in precisely four minutes. The picture, owned by Lee Shubert, Oscar Hammerstein and Ralph Ince, was started on private showing at the Jewel projection room—but the showing was stopped while the check passed.

The price agreed to is said to be larger than was ever paid for a similar feature. The production will be shown at the Broadway theatre beginning October 7.

In the screen adaptation Elaine Hammerstein stars and is supported by Wilfred Lucas and a large cast.

Irene Fenwick brought "The Co-respondent," by Rita Weiman and Alice Leal Pollack, to the Booth theatre two years ago. It is a story of a New England girl who is wooed and brought to a small town hotel by the millionaire husband of a New York society woman, who has him followed and trapped, as a mock ceremony is about to be performed.

A year later, the girl having won distinction and the heart of the managing editor of a metropolitan newspaper, faces two charges when sent out on the famous Van Kreel divorce case to obtain the name of the co-respondent.

Wild Mountain Scenery in "The Flaming Omen"

William Wolbert, director at the Hollywood studio of the Vitagraph Company, last week completed and shipped "The Flaming Omen," a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature in which Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman play the leading roles.

The Wolbert Company halted in some of the wildest and most unfrequented parts of California in searching for Peruvian locations.

The director and his two stars have already commenced work on another Blue Ribbon feature, the title of which will be announced later.

Walthall as Trickster Lawyer Who Makes Upright Judge

CARPENTERS, scenic artists and art directors have been busy for some time erecting the settings which will be used in "His Robe of Honor," in which Henry B. Walthall will make his debût as an independent star manager.

Mr. Walthall has been in Los Angeles personally supervising the necessary arrangements before starting the filming of the production to be made under the personal direction of Oscar C. Apfel.

"His Robe of Honor" will be a visualization of the book written by E. S. and J. F. Dorrance. It is a romantic story concerning the intrigues of politics and the wiles of political bosses. Mr. Walthall will appear as the young district attorney, who has been appointed judge of the Supreme Court through the influence of a graft-permeated political machine which anticipates using him for a tool to serve their ends.

The story is a graphic expose of the methods used in many of the larger cities, where the bench is controlled by politics, and offers a remarkable opportunity for Mr. Walthall in the role of the trickster lawyer who becomes an upright judge by the cultivation of those forces of his character which are trained and nurtured by a woman of society.

This production will be the first of a series of seven-reel productions in which Mr. Walthall will appear at the head of his own independent producing company under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc.

Whirlwind Run for "Rasputin" at Park Theatre

THE New York run of "Rasputin," the World-Picture Brady-Made, at the Park theatre, has been extended for the present, due to the insistent demand for tickets of admission.

The only unoccupied time on the books of the Park when it was decided to place "Rasputin" before the public immediately, covered twelve days beginning September 12. Another attraction had already arranged for a fortnight following the limited "open time" available for the World Picture, which in consequence, was announced for twelve days only.

On the opening night William A. Brady says there was very nearly a riot in Columbus Circle, caused by the great crowd that smashed down the doors of the theatre in its eagerness to get in, and it required the help of the police reserves to reopen street traffic.

From that beginning the pressure upon the seating space of the Park theatre has been in excess of the capacity, and efforts to secure an extension of time have been constant. The management, holding the key to this situation, had figured upon securing a New York showing for its own use, and did not take kindly to suggestions of an indefinite postponement, so that it was not until four days before the termination of the World's first lease that monetary and other inducements proved sufficiently alluring to open the way for a renewal.

This gives "Rasputin" an extra fortnight in its present quarters and provides the producing company with a chance to look about for another theatre thereafter.

Pathe Scores Record Booking on Official War Films

After the showing of the first episode of "The Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras," the official Government picture showing war in Europe as it really is, A. Paul Keith and D. F. Albee decided that instead of 5,400 days for the showing of these pictures, at their allied theatres, they would take them for 7,500 days.

The rental paid by Keith and Albee for these pictures amounts to $40 a day, and as a result of this booking the greater part of the $300,000 they will pay, will go to war charities.

This 7,500-day booking is, without doubt, one of the biggest contracts ever put over in the motion picture business. It will set new records for some time to come.

This is said to be a distinctly different Moore comedy and the fans who liked "Camping" and "The Cinderella Husband" will more than like this one.

Left: One of the Supporting Characters in Edna Goodrich's Next Mutual, "Queen X." The Other Views Give Some Idea of Miss Goodrich's Versatility

Four Girl Stars in Mutual's Releases

Edna Goodrich "Queen X," Mary Miles Minter "Her Country's Call," Helen Holmes "The Lost Express" and Billie Rhodes

EDNA GOODRICH, Mary Miles Minter, Helen Holmes, Billie Rhodes, and George Ovey are on Mutual's release schedule for the week of October 1. Miss Goodrich appears in "Queen X," the second of her Mutuals, and Miss Minter in "Her Country's Call." Billie Rhodes appears in "Some Nurse," the first of a new series of Mutual-Strand comedies.

"Queen X" is a five-reel drama built around the crusade of the federal authorities against a gang of Oriental smugglers. It was written by Edwin M. Stanton, assistant district attorney of New York, who conducted the government's fight on the Orientals.

Miss Goodrich's first Mutual production, "Reputation," was a revelation of the star's popularity from the box office angle. It swept aside all doubt as to the value, at the ticket window of the motion picture theatre, of a star of the speaking stage.

"Her Country's Call" is the second of the new series of Minter Mutuals starring the pretty little star. Miss Minter is now working under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. "Her Country's Call" follows "Charity Castle," which was pronounced a Minter masterpiece. Miss Minter is cast in "Her Country's Call" as a girl of the moonshine mountains, the daughter of a civil war colonel.

"Some Nurse" is the first release of a new series of Strand-Mutual comedies starring Billie Rhodes, the pretty little comedienne. She is supported in the pictures by Jay Belasco, who appeared with her in a series of successful one-reel productions a few months ago. The release date is October 2. The second comedy on the week's schedule is "Jerry in Yodel Land," a side-splitting one-reeler featuring George Ovey. The release date is October 4.

The third chapter of the new Mutual serial, "The Lost Express," is released on Monday, October 1. Helen Holmes does some thrilling stunts in "The Wreck at the Crossing," which is the title of the chapter. "The Lost Express" is a fifteen-chapter photonovel from the pen of Frederick B. Bennett, noted traveler and writer. It was directed by J. P. McGowan and produced by the Signal Film Corporation.

The topical releases for the week include Reel Life No. 75, scheduled for October 1, and Mutual Weekly No. 144, scheduled for October 3. The weekly contains the current news up to the hour that the film is made up. Reel Life covers the following subjects: "Dogs of War," "The Sign of a City," "Making Army Rifles," "Japanese Dwarf Plants," and an animated cartoon from life, entitled "The Chorus Girl Who Hesitates is Lost."

Releases of "Three C's" Comedies Begin Sept. 23

President Jos. S. Klein of the Commonwealth Comedy Company, Inc., has now decided upon the first three releases of "Three C Comedies," which begin distribution through General Film Company one week beginning September 28.

They are, in the order named, "His Winning Way," with Lou Marks; "Fat and Foolish," with Hughey Mack, and "A Harem Romance," with Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard and Oom Paul. The last named trio is to be featured in all future Lou Marks' subjects.

Production is going on regularly in the vicinity of New York by the Commonwealth Comedy Company, Inc., with F. P. Donovan as director. Lou Marks, the star, former Keystoner, is putting in hard work.

The staging of the comedies is unstinted in its scenery, costumes and casts. This company is making a careful and determined effort to provide all that is best in comedy pictures.

"Cur-r-r-r-ses!" These are the Fox Kidlets in That Everlasting Story of Aladdin and The Wonderful Lamp

Pathe Heads Its Program with Harold Warde

Mollie King in Airship Thrill; Pearl White in Paddle-Wheel of Ferryboat, and Harold Lloyd Are on the List

FREDERICK WARDE, Shakespearean actor; Mollie King, one of the beautiful girls of the screen; Pearl White, a serial drawing card, and Harold Lloyd as Lonesome Luke, popular comedian, are box-office stars on the Pathe Program for the week of October 7.

Frederick Warde appears in "The Heart of Ezra Greer," a five-reel Gold Rooster play produced by Thanhouser, written by Phillip Lonergan and directed by Emile Chautard. The cast includes the following: Leila Frost, George Froth, Carey Hastings, Thomas A. Curran, Lillian Mueller, Helen Badgley and Gerald Badgley.

Mollie King stars in the fourth episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial, entitled "Amid the Clouds," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary. It is in two reels, and was produced by the Astra Film Corporation. The most thrilling feature of this chapter in which thrills abound is the chase of an airship by an aeroplane. Ilma (Mollie King) is being swiftly carried to her death in the balloon. Harry (Creighton Hale) rushes to her rescue in a dirigible, but Perry (Leon Bary) reaches her first in his swifter hydroplane.

Pearl White is seen in the fourteenth chapter of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Painted Safe," two-reel serial episode, produced by Astra Film Corporation under the direction of George B. Seitz, scenario by Bertram Milhauser and story by Fred Jackson. Pearl is thrown inside the paddle wheel of a ferryboat, while Tom (Henry Gsell) and the Spider are pitched into the water. Pearl is saved by Tom's quick thinking and rapid acting.

Harold Lloyd is seen as Lonesome Luke in "Birds of a Feather," a two-reel comedy produced by Robin. Harold Lloyd is Lonesome Luke, heir to a cool million.

"Big Bear Lake" is a split-reel scenic produced by B. E. Loper, Jr. This subtitle gives a good idea as to the kind of picture it is: "For whatever ails you; fish, one basketful; contentment, one soulful; scenery, two eyesful."

"St. Mary's Lake," Glacier National Park, is the other half of this split reel produced by Ralph Earle. This is another scenic of the series showing our National Parks.

An International cartoon and scenic split-reel subject, and Hearst-Pathe News, No. 82 and No. 83, complete the program.

Billie West Snapped During a Crucial Moment in a King-Bee Comedy

Two Dramas and Two Comedies for Triangle, Sept. 30

A modernized variation of the cactus-bandit theme and a very human drama of Southern aristocracy are the features of the Triangle program for September 30, with Olive Thomas and Walt Whitman as the headliners.

The first release, "Broadway, Arizona," blazes a trail from the Gay White Way to the western desert, along which Olive Thomas travels as a New York musical comedy star abducted by a wealthy cattleman whose pride has been injured by her press agent a year previous, when he was doing the town.

Walt Whitman portrays the dignity and honor of a true gentleman of the South in the second Triangle release, "The Tar Hell Warrior." The story carries Col. Dabney Mills, an old Southern planter whose estate is burdened with debt, to New York in search of urgently needed funds.

An Oriental comedy, featuring Bobby Vernon, Gloria Swanson, Joe Callahan and the Keystone beauties, is the new Keystone offering. It is called "The Sultan's Wife."

Film Plays Big Part in Hoover Celebration

Moving pictures played a big role in the Hoover food celebration which was held in Madison, Wis., in August when the World Film Corporations' imported drama, "Mothers of France," starring Sarah Bernhardt, was shown on the lawn of the state capitol. Skirting the lawn were various booths with Red Cross, food conservation and other patriotic displays and an address was delivered by President Charles Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin.

So great has been the success of this Hoover day that other cities are to follow suit and the World reports great demand for "Mothers of France" to be used in these celebrations.

Charlie Chaplin's Last Mutual Is Delayed

The date of the release of the forthcoming Mutual-Chaplin special, "The Adventurer," has not yet been set despite the fact that the production was expected to be ready for exhibitors by September 1.

The final scenes have been delayed, first by the illness of Mr. Chaplin and then by an attack of sickness which kept his leading woman, Edna Purviance, from the studio for more than two weeks.

The release date will be announced by the Mutual Film Corporation as soon as it is certain, but no announcement will be made until that time to prevent the possibility of postponement.

Helen Holmes in Stunts on Speeding Passenger

Helen Holmes puts fast action—fast even for Helen—into "The Wreck at the Crossing," Chapter III of "The Lost Express," her latest Mutual-Signal photo-novel.

The chapter opens with Helen aboard the roof of a speeding passenger train. She is pursued over the tops of the cars by a gang of ruffians. There is a fight with the leader of the gang. Helen is outnumbered but not outgeneraled. She grabs a bridge warning cable stretched across the track and climbs, hand over hand, to the telegraph pole at the side of the tracks.

Fox Technical Men Perfect Anti-U Boat Device

William Bach, technical director of the William Fox motion picture studios, and John D. Braddon, an assistant technical man, say they have perfected an anti-U-boat device to protect merchant vessels.

The principle of the invention, as described by Mr. Bach, is a heavy wooden screen suspended twelve feet from the hull of the vessel on steel girders. This screen completely encloses the hull, making it impossible for a torpedo to reach the ship without hitting and being exploded by the screen.

William Fox's Giant Sees "Kiddie" Show in St. Louis

On Monday night, September 10, the patrons of the Shubert-Garrick theatre in St. Louis who expected to see Jack of the Beanstalk destroy the giant Blunderbore on the screen, did not expect to see the same giant, after he had fallen down the beanstalk, walk out on the stage and give a nice little talk to the audience—but that's just what he did.

James G. Tarver, who played the giant in the picture, now traveling with the Barnum and Bailey circus, happened to be in East St. Louis with the show and A. D. Thomas, manager of the St. Louis Fox Exchange learned of it.

George Gibbs's romantic novel, "Paradise Garden," has been picturized by the Yorke Film Corporation. It serves as a starring vehicle for Harold Lockwood for his next appearance in a Metro play. The picture bears the same title as the book, and will be released October 1.

In the adaptation of the novel for the screen by Fred J. Balshofer and Richard V. Spencer, the charm of the tale has been carefully preserved.

Director Fred J. Balshofer has made the story into a seven-reel picture. Mr. Lockwood is cast as Jerry Benham, and his support includes Vera Sisson, Virginia Rappe, Lester Cuneo, William Clifford, G. Sprotto and Catherine Henry.

Goatsmilk Farming in Paramount-Bray Pictograph

He gets five dollars from a fat lady for teaching her to be an Annette Kellermann. Then he forgets her, pursues a juvenile vampire, and wrecks a submarine with a brick.

New methods of goat raising in the West, this time for the goat's milk as infant's food, are illustrated. Nubian goats that give four quarts of milk a day are used.

Marguerite Lahey's bookbinding and tooling of book covers for the luxurious rich are pictured in the industrial section of the film.

Bryant Washburn will make his first appearance on the Perfection Pictures program in a five-part comedy-drama, entitled "The Fibbers," Oct. 15. The story, written by James W. She also essayed the leading feminine role for Taylor Holmes in his first Essanay production, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," and won favorable comment on her work.

New Mutual Railroad Serial, "The Lost Express," Sept. 17

THE Mutual Film Corporation will release "The Lost Express," a fifteen chapter, thirty-reel photo-dramma, starring Helen Holmes, on September 17. "The Lost Express" was produced by the Signal Film Corporation under direction of J. P. McGowan, famous director of screen melodrama. The production will be released a chapter a week for fifteen weeks.

Helen Holmes's name as a star in photo-drama extends far. She has won repute by the thrilling escapades in which she has figured before the camera in a series of successful chapter dramas.

Her successes have all been staged by McGowan. In staging "The Lost Express" he had the active assistance and co-operation of the author, Frederick R. Bennett, a newspaperman of note and the author of many short stories and novels.

"The Lost Express" is built around a scientific mystery. An express train, carrying a carload of highly valuable documents, leaves its terminal under armed guard. It never reaches the next station. Members of the crew are found, bound and gagged, in the bottom of a lumber wagon.

Fairbanks, Hart and Farrar on Oct. Artcraft List

Three Releases Finished Simultaneously—Opera Diva in "The Woman God Forgot"—Doug. in "Man from Painted Post"—Hart in "The Narrow Trail"

BY strange coincidence the production of all three Artcraft releases for October were completed simultaneously, and the work of cutting and assembling the respective films is now under way in the Fort Lee and Hollywood plants of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. The final preparation of all the October offerings is expected to be completed within the course of a week, allowing plenty of time for the distribution of the prints to the Artcraft exchanges throughout the country.

At the Fort Lee plant the Douglas Fairbanks picture, "The Man from Painted Post," is receiving its final touches. Proclaimed by every one connected with its production to be the best Fairbanks offering yet, this photoplay discloses him in a typical Fairbanks, and includes many athletic stunts, including a record long distance saddle mount, in which Douglas leaps from the porch of a house on to the back of his pony fourteen feet away. "The Man from Painted Post" will be the first Artcraft release in October.

Under the personal supervision of Cecil B. De Mille, "The Woman God Forgot," starring Geraldine Farrar, is now being cut and assembled at the Hollywood plant. Another cinema spectacle disclosing the combined arts of Geraldine Farrar, Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie Macpherson, this production will, it is believed by the producers, create a greater sensation than even "Joan the Woman," the last film offering of this trio. Among its other features, this photoplay boasts of the highest set ever built for a motion picture in this country in its presentation of the Aztec temple on the top of which a thrilling battle was staged.

As its final release for October, Artcraft will offer Thomas H. Ince's initial William S. Hart production, "The Narrow Trail," now also receiving its final treatment in California. Produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince, this film is considered the most spectacular Hart picture ever staged, thousands of people taking part in various scenes. In addition to its many features this picture will mark three events in annals of the screen—namely, the introduction of "Big Bill" as an Artcraft star, his debut as an author and the final appearance on the screen of his popular horse "Fritz," whose narrow escape in one of the thrilling scenes of this production promoted the actor to retire his pony.

Army Veteran to Direct Rhea Mitchell

Wallace Worsley, who had army experience with the mounted signal corps in Cuba and Porto Rica in 1898 and was wounded at Abomita Pass and lost in a swamp with eleven others, is to direct Rhea Mitchell's first star picture.

Miss Mitchell's pictures are to be made at Paralta Studios for release under executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc.

Lehrmann-Fox Comedy Is Given a Try-Out

"A Milk Fed Vamp," one of the Sunshine comedies Henry Lehrmann is producing for William Fox, was shown as a curtain raiser for "Jack and the Beanstalk," and, according to Fox, "youthful delight made the rafters wabble and the grownups laughed until they shook."

It is said Mr. Fox, in making these two-reel pictures, is spending as much money as is usually put into a five-reel drama.

Universal Offerings Headed by "Storm Woman"

Several Comedies and a Star Featurette Among Lighter Subjects— "The Lion's Lair," Two-Reel Animal Drama, and Others Programmed

UNIVERSAL'S schedule for the week of Oct. 1 is headed by a Gold Seal drama, "The Storm Woman," featuring Claire McDowell. E. Magnus Ingleton is the author and Ruth Ann Baldwin prepared the scenario and directed the production. The major part of the production consists of a fanciful tale of the tragic life of an Italian woman who is seen every day sitting at a conspicuous post in a big city with a cage of fortune-telling parrakeets before her. The mysterious figure shrouded in a black shawl, has aroused the curiosity of a cub reporter who wishes he knew her life story. For a plate of beans and a cup of coffee a broken-down writer agrees to tell him the tale. It proves to be a recital of gripping interest, rehearsing the wrongs suffered by the young Italian girl at the hands of an adventurous tourist, her pursuit of him to America and her final infliction of vengeance. The denouement, when the cub seeks further particulars from the parrakeet woman, is highly amusing and a complete surprise. A Nestor comedy, "Pete the Prowler," is another release for the same day. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts are the featured players.

For Wednesday, Oct. 3, an L-Ko two-reel comedy, "Counting Out the Count," featuring Bill Bevan and Lucille Hutton, is provided. It's all about a Count who wanted to marry Lucille but whom Lucille didn't want to marry. After much clothes-changing which entails many ludicrous machinations on the part of Lucille and her true lover, the Count is undone and Lucille marries the man of her choice. On the same date Universal Animated Weekly, No. 92, is released.

A two-reel star featurette, "A Prairie Romeo," with George Hernandez, is scheduled for release Thursday, Oct. 4. This is a Western comedy-drama which was both written and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds. Hernandez takes the part of a banjo-playing Romeo. His serenade meets with a reception decidedly unpleasant at the hands of the boss of the ranch where his Juliet is employed, so he proceeds to drown his sorrows in the time-honored fashion. Another comedy, this one a Joker, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey and titled "Her Naughty Choice," is released the same day.

Universal Screen Magazine, No. 39, with its picturization of timely educational topics, is scheduled for Friday, Oct. 5, and in addition the popular trio, Max Asher, Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson, will be seen in "Kicked in the Kitchen," a Victor comedy by C. B. Hoadley and produced under the direction of Craig Hutchinson.

"The Lion's Lair," a Bison two-reel animal drama, featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church, is listed for Saturday, Oct. 6. On the same date Universal Current Events, No. 21, is scheduled for release, as is also "The Masked Marvels," a Joker comedy with Gale Henry and Milton Sims.

Bluebird Alters Its Schedule for October and November

IN the schedule of Bluebirds previously announced there have been made some changes that will affect the dates and titles of late October and early November. The Franklyn Farnum picture, previously referred to as "A Fool for Luck," now bears the permanent title, "Anything Once," bringing Mr. Farnum out as a lone star on Oct. 8. Dorothy Phillips, in "Bondage," will be the Oct. 15 attraction, and that is to be followed on Oct. 22 by Ruth Clifford in "The Desire of the Moth."

Herbert Rawlinson, with Madeline MacDonald, his leading lady, will furnish the Oct. 29 Bluebird, under the tentative title of "The Dragnet." The permanent caption for this feature will be supplied later. This is announced as a "crook" drama, and serves to exploit the hero of "Come Through" in a part similar to the one lately done by Rawlinson.

Carmel Myers, in her debut as a Bluebird star, has been definitely assigned to Nov. 5, her introductory featuring being "The Lash of Power," the play referred to in process of production as "The Dynast." Kenneth Harlan will be featured as Miss Myers's leading man and Charles Hill Mailes will be prominent in the supporting organization..

Mae Murray's introduction to the Bluebird flock of stars comes Nov. 11 in "The Princess Virtue," a screen version by Fred Myton, of Louise Winter's novel of the same title. Robert Leonard, who is introducing Miss Murray to the series, having completed "The Princess Virtue," is now directing his own story, under the title of "Face Value," as Miss Murray's second release. Wheeler Oakman is her leading man, and her support will be drawn from Bluebird's stock forces.

Goldwyn Issues Music Cues in Book Form

Goldwyn Pictures are issuing their music cues in a form which will appeal to orchestra leaders and musicians. The first of these is on "Polly of the Circus" and the same form will be followed in future issues.

The first page of the eight page booklet is devoted to the title with a picture of Mae Marsh as "Polly." Then follows a page of remarks on conducting an orchestra and then the score of "Love Theme." Before the various cues are given there are some cautions and special directions for orchestra leaders calling their attention to important points.

These music cues are prepared by M. Winkler and contain no advertising of music firms, but are devoted directly to the picture being covered.

Essanay Engages Mary MacLane, the Girl from Butte

Mary MacLane, the Butte, Mont., girl whose book, "The Story of Mary MacLane," startled and almost shocked the country several years ago, has become a film star.

Miss MacLane has been engaged by Essanay and will be featured in a super-feature entitled, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," by that company.

Miss MacLane is now writing her own scenario at the Essanay studios.

Audiences Look for Hearst-Pathe News

Recently the Los Angeles Examiner published an interview with M. A. Mayerfield, President of the Orpheum Theatre Company, controlling the Orpheum vaudeville circuit. He said:

"Our theatres run a moving picture, the Hearst-Pathe News, and we find that it is looked forward to by our audiences to such an extent that we shall continue to run it as long as it is issued."

Ditmar Animal Pictures a Hit at the Strand Theatre

HAROLD EDEL, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, considered one of the best judges of box-office values of motion pictures, has written as follows to E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America:

"Regarding your inquiry relative to how the Ditmar animal pictures are taking here at the Strand theatre, it affords me great pleasure to say that judging from the comments of our audiences, which as you know, are considered to be the most critical in the world, they are unquestionably the finest pictures of their kind, and possess great and rare value, that is to say, the happy combination of being just as entertaining as educational.

"Mr. Ditmar has a keen sense of humor, and always has a laugh at the conclusion of each reel where it is possible, which adds great value to these pictures. We have been running them now consistently for the past year, and still find them indispensable.

"I wish you continued success which unquestionably you deserve with such high grade pictures."

Ditmar's animal pictures, "The Living Book of Nature," have been shown at the Strand theatre, as Mr. Edel says, for more than a year. The discriminating audience that patronizes this high grade theatre has not tired of the pictures, and on the contrary shows the same enthusiasm as when the showings began.

Pathe Films Practical Food Drying Processes

Early in October, the International, through the Pathe Exchanges, will release an educational feature entitled "Saving the Food of a Nation," which presents unusual and striking features of national importance.

The pictures were taken in the Municipal Evaporating Plant of the City of Hartford, Conn., where the Chamber of Commerce established a system of drying surplus food products of the Connecticut farmers that would otherwise be wasted.

So far tons of corn, squash, cabbage, spinach, apples and other vegetables and fruit that would otherwise have been wasted, have been saved for future consumption. The city authorities retain ten per cent. of the products brought in by each farmer, and this percentage is given to the poor of the city and state.

War Pictures Up-to-the-Minute by Gaumont

Current issues of Gaumont Weekly are largely devoted to war, but other important events are not neglected. A capable and enthusiastic staff of cameramen all over the world insure a regular supply of war pictures. The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly is released every Wednesday and is up-to-the-minute.

Reel Life, Issue No. 76, released October 11, contains "A Dam Across the Mississippi," which makes Minneapolis a river port; "Acrobatic Cyclists," a clever stunt from the vaudeville stage; "Cantaloupes of the Imperial Valley," showing the gathering, packing and shipping of these luscious melons from below sea level.

This week's animated drawing from "Life" is entitled "Coming Home from the Club in 1950," and shows what the jolly clubman may expect when he reaches his home-roof in the early morning hours a few years hence.

Pictures of Chinese Telephone Exchange, San Francisco

Hearst Pathe News, current issue, has pictures of the Chinese telephone exchange in San Francisco. Six girls—all Chinese—are at this exchange constantly in busy hours. Numbers are not used so the operators must know the name of each of eleven hundred subscribers, not an easy task when some of the names are like One Lung Shi and Ling Quong Hi.

The advent of the Hearst-Pathe movie men in Chinatown to take pictures of the exchange was greeted with great excitement. One by one the little Chinese operators would ask for relief from their posts and slip away to powder their noses and come back resplendent in pretty, bright new silk jackets and more jewelry, much of it jade.

The Chinese girl operators all wear neat jackets and pantaloons of silk, made Chinese fashion; but no more the tiny dandaged feet. Instead the very nearly-as-bad American high-heel boot.

Some very proud Chinese girls displayed buttons in rows on their jackets made from bright five dollar gold pieces. All wore heavy gold bracelets, the eternal feminine being always in evidence. These bright young Chinese girls are all American born.

Scenic Comedy Educationals for October Release

Educational Films Corporation of America will release on October 8 and 15 their scenic comedy picture, "A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands." It got a showing at the Rialto theatre in Broadway, where Mr. Rothapfel featured it in the electric light signs in front of the theatre. E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, says:

"It is our ambition to make these one-reel features of such an extraordinary character, and such a combination of interest and of such importance to a program, that a theatre manager will realize the importance of giving them the proper setting and place on his program.

"The old dry, tiresome scenic-educational is now a thing of the past, and the new scenic-educationals have come into their own, and will compel a place on the best program."

Schumann-Heink's Son Enlists—Family Divided

Henry Schumann-Heink, son of the prima donna, has been released from Triangle's playing forces, at Culver City, to sign a contract with the Naval Reserves. In 1916, too, he served in the Naval Reserves.

No little pathos is connected with the story of Henry Schumann-Heink's enlistment. It was postponed until he could learn the outcome of an operation which his wife underwent. Besides the wife, a two-year-old daughter will say good-bye.

The Schumann-Heink family is divided on the war question. One son is serving in the German army and another in the French forces.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

WHERE BOUNDARIES VANISH

Whatever the geographical and political differences, in spirit France and Belgium are now one nation, united in desperate need against a common foe. So it seems entirely natural and fitting that the French War Pictures (Universal Animated Weekly No. 90) should contain both Petain of France and Albert of Belgium, a hero general greeting the men whose stubborn courage made the Verdun victory possible; a king who, looking down from an aeroplane's height on his conquered land, still keeps faith in the right that will triumph.

An alliance newer and less familiar is symbolized by the crossed flags at the midpoint of Niagara Bridge. Here Sammy, walking his beat from one end, and Tommy, his from the other, meet and greet as brothers in arms. The picture affords fine views of the falls taken at various points.

These are not the only barriers that have disappeared. Miss Great Britain, taking her brother's place in the railway lines, indulges in the sports that were his at holiday time. Two dozen, perhaps, of these buxom lasses engage in a jolly tug-of-war; their little sisters indulge in foot races, and distribute "treats" to the watching boys in kahki.

Out in our Far West, where men are not yet few, broncho busters literally dare the devils of horses that rear and plunge under them to do their worst. One rider, seemingly fallen from the saddle, plants one foot against his horse and clings to the reins while the beast whirls around; another, tossed to the ground, falls just clear of the stamping hoofs.

WHERE SPARKS FLY

What one of our great industries has not felt the quickening breath of war? The United States Steel Corporation has just announced a ten per cent increase in salaries, and we can understand how this is possible when we see the huge plant where 10,000 men are "Making Steel Rails for the Allies" (Pathe-International). A splendidly taken picture is this, without the seeming repetitions seen so often in films of this class. We wonder where the cameraman stood as he caught the molten river flowing from the furnace, the blast that changes the iron to steel, the shower of sparks that flew from the wheel as it cuts into the soft rail as easily as would a buttered knife into hot caramels. Just as fascinating is the process of rolling the short, thick lengths of steel into long, thin rails, to be picked up later like jackstraws by the great electric magnets and sent on the first lap of their journey to foreign lands.

Abe Kabibble outwits his rival in the auto selling line by methods ethically dubious but certainly original, and, to all but the victims, amusing.

WHEN BOBBY BROKE HIS ARM

When little boys are naughty, they may get hurt, but if there are grandmas there are compensations. Bobby would jump, so "Bobby Broke His Arm" (Greater Vitagraph) and was packed off to grandma's farm for recuperation. There he makes the acquaintance of friendly little Aida and country joys. The pet particular possession and pleasure of the children is Gladys, the tiny calf, belonging to a humble neighbor. Imagine their grief then when they discover that Gladys has been sold to supply the butcher with veal. Gladys at all cost must be recovered, so with a note of farewell to grandma they start off in the search. Gladys is found, and would undoubtedly have been brought home in triumph had not the Sandman been hovering near to interfere with plans. But mother, coming to visit Bobby, finds culprits and captive asleep on a roadside bank. Her purse is as ready as her understanding, and Gladys escapes a shameful and premature death. Thereafter, clover and daisies are to be her portion, and for Bobby, no forbidden jumps.

TRAIL HITTERS

Weeklies come and go, Coney's beach crowd gives way to Coney's Mardi Gras, but still down the screen march the boys in khaki, hitting the trail for France. In Universal Current Events No. 19 we see them arriving at Upton and Bartlett, working at Wadsworth, driving muleteams and making roads at Spartanburg. The reverse of the picture is seen at Quebec, where 1,500 men who had served return. Hurt or crippled they may be, but plucky and happy.

But the original trail hitter is still on the job. Out in Los Angeles 20,000 friends welcome Billy Sunday to the city and his new gospel tent. The strenuous months in New York do not seem to have sapped Mr. Sunday's vitality nor lesened his quick smile.

A picture of great charm and one of happy augury shows Alsace celebrating the third anniversary of the entrance of French troops into the province. The quaint dresses of the women and the views of a lovely village street and square are in pleasant contrast to what the cameraman abroad usually discloses.

SOME WORK, SOME PLAY, AND "SOME NUTS"

When we were young, bread making was the test of culinary skill. Any tyro could make candy or cake, but bread was a matter of mysterious mixing, kneading, rising; it involved skill and experience, to say nothing of time. Well, it looks as though that were all changed now. In Universal Screen Magazine No. 41 we are shown how to make bread without kneading. Mix, set to rise, remove, wave a few times in the air, and bake. That seems to do the trick. if the shapely loaves that ensue are as good as they look. We may have forgotten one or two steps, but certainly the process seemed simple and quick, and one which a really observant cook, which we are not, would be able to duplicate in her own kitchen.

Chores done, we turn to the ever-delightful dance, and watch with interest and pleasure the new steps evolved by the National Association of Masters of Dancing. One clever combination of waltz and one-step is graceful and would seem easy, and the fox trot, which is not a trot at all, seems destined for years of popularity.

Pot Holes may be of great interest to the scientist, but to the small boy they are simply ideal swimming holes. Here is an instance of the superiority of screen over book, for the interest inhering in the topic itself is enhanced by the beauty of rocks and swirling water.

Clever Willie Hopkins shows the close kinship existing betwen nuts and—other "nuts."

HELD BY THE CENSOR

Germans are thrifty. If a loyal German residing in another land is willing to pay seven dollars in postage to send a few pounds of meat to Germany, Germany must be badly in need (Selig World Library, No. 19). Meat is only one of many articles that the army of clerks in the office of the censors in England and France intercept. Bacon, oil, rubber in many forms, and valuable jewelry are some of the things destined for Germany or by Germany for her foreign customers. With all the work entailed in reading letters and opening packages, no less than 350 bags of mail are examined and dispatched by the censor's office in twenty-four hours.

Children on the screen are always sure of a warm welcome by the spectators. When they are such as the little deaf mutes being educated in the Government school in Manila, there is an added appeal. These babies cannot sing, but in a group on the lawn, under the guidance of a native teacher, they "recite" the "Star Spangled Banner," faces intent, tiny arms and hands moving in the rhythmic motions of the only language they know.

Trying to Settle Wage Differences in Cleveland

Exhibitors in Cleveland, Ohio, consider the wage demands made by the operators unreasonable, and have appointed committees to classify the theatres and arrange a sliding scale that shall be fair. Representing the first-class house Messrs. Downs, Adler and Greenbaum were named; the smaller houses, Messrs. Nolan, Aubley and Kalafat, and the places that have a Saturday matinee, Messrs. Simpson, Deutch and Bullock.

A special meeting of the League has been called for Friday at 2 p. m. to hear the reports of these committees, and to decide upon a course of action to be taken by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League as a body.

The operators demand $40 a week in theatres where they work matinees and nights; $25 if there are two shifts and ten-hour run; $35 if fourteen hours a day, and $40 if sixteen hours a day. Extra matinees are to be $3.50, and if matinees hold late, allowance for supper, $1.

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS INC.

¶ We have purchased from Messrs. Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph Ince a remarkably fine picture—"The Corespondent." It is in the best sense a "production," such as discriminating lovers of photoplays have reason to expect from the direction of Mr. Ince.

¶ Elaine Hammerstein, skilled interpreter of sympathetic roles carries the honors of the name part, supported by Mr. Wilfred Lucas and a typical Ince cast. The settings are on a plane with the somewhat remarkable personnel of the cast, and the play abounds in dramatic moments.

¶ As a gently bred small town girl who becomes a newspaper woman in the metropolis, and unwittingly the corespondent in a famous divorce case, Miss Hammerstein adds an unusually beautiful portrait to the growing JEWEL gallery.

¶ JEWEL Productions already released include: "Come Through," George Bronson Howard's greatest melodrama; "Sirens of the Sea," the picture magnificent; "Pay Me," the big drama of the West. These three were produced by the Universal. The fourth is "The Man Without a Country," now playing to capacity at the Broadway Theatre, New York. It was produced by Thanhouser. A fifth soon to be released is "The Price of a Good Time," produced by Lois Weber.

¶ With such offerings progressive managers can achieve and maintain the lead for their theatre. Book thru the nearest JEWEL Exchange, or direct from the home office.

Quirk Plans Trade Showing in Principal Cities

James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, who is shortly to issue twelve single-reel motion picture subjects under the title, "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement," announces that in the near future special trade showings will be held in New York City, Chicago, and other cities for the purpose of demonstrating to interested territorial buyers and exhibitors who control chains of theatres the attraction he has prepared.

Already, it is stated, Mr. Quirk has received hundreds of applications for territorial rights on these twelve de luxe single-reel motion pictures. That all may judge the immense box office value of subjects in which such film celebrities as Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Bessie Love, Mary Miles Minter, Warren Kerrigan, Charlie Ray, Louise Glaum, Dorothy Dalton, William Russell, the Sidney Drews, Mabel Taliaferro, Viola Dana, and a host of other stars appear. Mr. Quirk is now arranging for these special trade showings.

Spitzer Sells West Comedies to Sandford

F. M. Sanford, general manager of the Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., has contracted with Nat. H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Film Corporation, for the state rights on Billy West two-reel releases for one year starting September 15 for the following states: Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

The contracts call for ten prints on each release, starting with the first production, "Back Stage."

Mr. Sanford states that after looking over the market for comedies he chose the King-Bee brand exclusively.

"Mothers of Men" Shown to Trade

Willis Robards, who recently brought East the suffragist propaganda picture, "Mothers of Men," produced by the Robards Players and featuring Dorothy Davenport, held a private showing of the picture last week at Loew's New York Roof for the benefit of several prominent members of the suffrage party.

Mr. Robards is represented by Harry J. Shepard, of Shepard and Van Loan, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

The A. Kay Company, New York, announces the closing of a deal with Bob Bakker, a celebrated Western hunter, for the distribution of his pictures "Hunting Lions in Montana." The subjects are said to be a distinct novelty and depict the hunting of lions in the more inaccessible regions of the Rockies.

This Southerner Emits Cry of Real Anguish

D. C. Randolph Surveys Southern Field and Indites Observations to Industry at Large—Greed Is the Keynote, Says He

Author's Note: A recent 2,600 mile automobile trip through a large section of the country in which the writer has been operating for the past several years inspired this article, personal contact which permitted me to feel the "exhibitor's pulse," and I have seen with my own eyes the class and character of his populace, discussed local conditions with his townspeople, rode in the town, around and out of it, making a notation of what he had to draw from. I thus gained invaluable information concerning these towns in my territory, and I am going to make another trip and gather up some more.

By D. C. Randolph.

THE motion picture industry contains many men with brains, backed by unlimited financial resources and can be placed on a business basis—but, from recent personal observation the writer is led to believe that these men are not surrounded by practical showmen with brains enough to do the necessary things to stabilize the business.

Just review the situation, first the producer might be very capable of turning out subjects at far less cost, but with unlimited capital (which always seems easy to promote) he goes the limit, spends $75,000 on a subject which could have been made for $40,000, and in the next issue of the trade papers distributors and exhibitors are startled with the news that another "million dollar spectacle" is ready for release—and, right here is where the "big show" starts.

Producers have their manager of distribution (usually one who has made a short trip to Buffalo, Boston and Philadelphia at some time during his life), place a valuation on the "production" for the United States, or the value is based on "what we did on Broadway," and right here let me say, if some of the productions that I have in mind were sold on the Broadway basis, the producers would have to give the distributors a bonus for buying them. However, the producer's manager of distribution as a rule places a valuation on the production (that cost seventy-five, and worth forty thousand, or somewhere in the neighborhood of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and tells you that he is a public benefactor. If enough "regular" distributors cannot be found to purchase this product and pay their pro rata share, a "live one" can usually be found who will, with the result that another "distributor" is born, and the shoe shop loses another cobbler. Much more could be said but it would be a long story.

Now the new "distributor" (who as a rule knows just about as much concerning his own territory, as the producer's manager of distribution), supplies himself with a brand new map, and the latest census reports, and starts in to see how much he can trim the exhibitor for. Prices are fixed according to the population, regardless of the class and character of the populace, local conditions, number and class of theatres, never stopping for a moment to consider whether the box-office value justifies his prices, or giving the exhibitors in his territory a chance. No, he is in the "game" for the last dime, and he is not interested in whether the exhibitor stays in business or not, just as long as he gets his—today.

As a result of the greed, or ignorance, of the distributor, the exhibitor is offered the majority of subjects at prohibitive prices, in fact the exhibitor could not do a gross business equal to the rental price fixed by the distributor for the following reasons: The theatre-going population of his town is too small, and his seating capacity would not permit if his theatre-going population was larger, and last but not least he could not in the face of strong opposition increase his admission prices to over a certain limit, if he did his gross receipts would not pay for the juice consumed.

Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Alma Hanlon Take Part in Harry Raver's New Production, "The Public Defender"

"Public Defender," from Raver, Is Ready

The Picture, Directed by Burton King from the Book by Goldman and Harris, Deals with Equal Rights for the Poor Before the Law

"The Public Defender," the first of a new series of special productions dealing with problems close to the minds of the masses, announced for presentation by Harry Raver, has been completed and is now ready for release. The theme of the book from which the plot has been taken is equal right before the law. Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson are in the cast. The screen story was written by Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, and the scenario was prepared by Frederick Rath. The picture was directed by Burton King.

The creation of the office of a "Public Defender" as outlined in the visual story presented by Harry Raver, is held by many eminent jurists to be absolutely essential to the proper and fair administration of justice. The idea also has the unqualified endorsement of over 2,000 newspapers and magazines throughout the country, having been editorially commended by such influential metropolitan dailies as the New York Tribune, the Mail, the Globe, and the Herald.

Among the prominent magazines who have placed themselves on record as strongly favorable to the idea of a "Public Defender" are The Fra, The Outlook, The New Republic, and The American Review of Reviews. In fact almost every publication of any importance in the United States has been outspoken in its advocacy of the plan looking to the institution of the "Public Defender," as presented so concretely in Mr. Goldman's book.

Harry Raver, responsible for "The Public Defender" as a screen attraction, has been identified with pictures practically since their inception as a form of popular amusement. Mr. Raver, active in every movement wherein the standards of production have been advanced during the past fifteen years, will be best remembered as the man who introduced the two dollar photoplay to Broadway, D'Annunzio's immortal "Cabiria."

"The Warrior," starring the famous "Maciste," the giant of "Cabiria," Mr. Raver's latest importation in the way of spectacular productions, recently finished a successful run at the Criterion theatre, New York, and bids fair to rival in point of drawing power its marvelous predecessor, "Cabiria." Further announcements regarding the method of distribution and initial showing to the trade of "The Public Defender" will be made in the very near future.

Foursquare Policy Finds Favor, Says Hoffman

The Hoffman-Foursquare policy of simultaneous distribution of all its features is meeting with favor among exhibitors. Upon learning that first-run bookings for all pictures now ready to be distributed through the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges, exhibitors, it is reported, in every section of the country commended the newly established policy.

"Contracts received from the St. Louis, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Detroit exchanges have in practically every instance included not less than seven Hoffman-Foursquare features," says an official of the company. "The fact that the newest of these pictures is not being held back in order to advance those less new appears to be a policy of liberality that is appreciated."

"Redemption" Packs Loew House

The Loew Circuit announces large patronage for "Redemption," featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw, at its theatres last week. The business done was the largest for any week at the Loew houses this season.

Thirty theatres in New York played the picture simultaneously, some for three or four days, and the business in each case was exceptionally large, the company states.

President Cohen of the Globe Films, Ltd., states that twenty-four theatres in Canada have played the picture to big crowds.

The Dawn Masterplay Company has bought the rights to "Redemption" for Michigan.

"Ambition" Completed

"Sins of Ambition," featuring Wilfred Lucas, Leah Baird, Barbara Castleton and James Morrison, and directed by Ivan Abramson, has been completed. The picture will be released in October.

Picker and Krellbery Successful Exhibitors as Well as State Righters

David V. Picker, manager of the New Russian Film Corporation, New York, which controls the official pictures of the "Russian Revolution and Battlefronts," brought to this country a few weeks ago by the representative of the Skobeleff committee, was formerly an exhibitor. He invested in a theatre in the Bronx, which had been managed with ill success until he took it over. Since that time he has increased his ventures in the exhibiting field, until today he owns a chain of theatres, said to have a weekly attendance of about 100,000 patrons.

Mr. Picker was among the men who selected the Russian pictures and feels that they will prove successful with American audiences.

Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, distributing the Russian pictures for the New Russian Film Company, was also an exhibitor. Five years ago he operated with his father a chain of theatres in New York and New Jersey. From this Mr. Krellberg gradually drifted into the export and territorial field. He is applying modern efficiency methods to the distribution of the pictures.

Coles, of Inter-Allied Films, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, now has ready for the consideration of independent buyers a series of short subjects photographed by the cinematograph division of the French army, which show the scientific and industrial side of the war. The first three releases are:

"The Eyes of the Artillery," illustrating the use of observation balloons and how the observer escapes in a parachute when attacked by an enemy aviator; "Falcons of the Sea," showing the use of hydroplanes for coast patrol; "Aerial Photography," illustrating the use of box kites and small captive balloons for carrying cameras into the air, which are electrically operated from the ground, and the development of the exposed negative on the spot in a truck especially equipped with dark room and developing tanks.

"Romanoffs" for Showing at Broadway Theatre

"THE Fall of the Romanoffs," the Herbert Brenon picture, made for the Iliodor Picture Corporation and released through Goldwyn Pictures, will have its metropolitan presentation at the Broadway theatre.

Mr. Brenon took full charge of the arrangements for the showing of the subject. Obtaining the theatre after the decision had been reached suddenly, he advertised on a large scale in the New York dailies, personally supervised all the details and management of the public exhibition, contracted billboard space throughout the city and even aided in the arrangement of the musical score for his drama. Since the showing of the picture at the Ritz-Carlton Mr. Brenon has partially rearranged the negative, in accordance with the changing events in the Russian republic.

The Iliodor Pictures Corporation is now ready to sell the territorial rights of the subject.

Reed and Thompson Handle Ivan Films

Dave Reed and True T. Thompson of The True Film Company, Dallas, Texas, recently closed a contract with the Ivan Film Corporation to distribute "Babbling Tongues" in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

Mr. Thompson declares that he is confident that this production will be welcomed by the exhibitors in his territory and be well patronized by the picture-going public there.

Popular Novels for Peggy Hyland

The Mayfield Film Corporation, New York, has picked from novels recently published a number suitable for picturization with Peggy Hyland as the star.

The stories selected are free from morbid plots and none are based on the war. The stellar roles are said to offer Miss Hyland opportunities for the display of her charm and personality.

"Sirens of the Sea" Popular

A. J. Mentz, of the Jewell Productions, says that their first release in the Cleveland territory will probably be "Sirens of the Sea" instead of "Come Through," as was originally announced. The pictures of water sports have proven such winners that Mr. Mentz feels that he is giving the public just what it wants when he releases "Sirens of the Sea."

King Bee Plans Newspaper Aid to Its Buyers With These Merle Johnson Cartoons

Ryan Congratulates Spitzer on West Advertising

PHIL. L. RYAN, the sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, with headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., writes Nat. H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corporation, as follows:

"I have long delayed complimenting you on the advertising which is appearing in the trade journals on the King-Bee Comedies. I do not know whether you are responsible for this or not, but it is certainly helping our exchanges in the campaign out here. It is fortunate that you realize how necessary it is to back up local advertising with a national campaign, and you are also to be congratulated upon the amount of publicity that we are getting in all the important trade papers in the East and West.

"We are putting over Billy West quite successfully in this territory and also in our other exchanges, and I can now say that we have the best representation in every metropolitan city within our territorial limits. Just recently I closed up Cella and Tate in St. Louis, who control the new million dollar Orpheum theatre, the Strand, Columbia, Kings, Park and Shenandoah, and with Mr. Stombaugh, manager of the Minneapolis office, we were successful in getting Ruben and Finkelstein to sign up in Minneapolis and St. Paul on the West Comedies.

"These people are going to put a lot of money into newspaper advertising in establishing your inimitable star in the Twin Cities, and I want to be the first to congratulate you on this deal."

"Star Boarder" Is "Chief Cook"

Owing to the fact that some time ago a two-reel comedy had been made with the title "The Star Boarder," King-Bee's latest two-reeler has been changed from the above title to "The Chief Cook.' Billy West plays the title role. The September 15 release of King-Bee is "The Fly Cop." On October 1, "The Chief Cook" will be released.

Schwerin in Exchange End Since 1915

Charles F. Schwerin, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Select Pictures Corporation, entered the exchange end of the industry in that city in Nov., 1915.

When the office of the World Film Corporation was destroyed by fire with all its pictures, Mr. Schwerin was sent from New York by Lewis J. Selznick, then head of the World Film. Through Schwerin's alertness every booking made in the office was served without any trouble, although every print belonging to Pittsburgh was destroyed.

When Mr. Selznick left the World to start his own company, Schwerin was the third man hired by Mr. Selznick in the United States, and today he ranks as one of the best managers in the country.

Since the establishment of the Select Pictures Corporation's new policy, the contracts closed by Mr. Schwerin have been increasing until the volume is great.

Mr. Schwerin was formerly with Fox as special representative, and before that conducted theatres in New York.

40 Papers Run "Romany" Novel

Forty newspapers are running a novelization of "Runaway Romany," the Marion Davies' picture just completed.

Among the papers are the Minneapolis Tribune, Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, Syracuse Post-Standard, Memphis Commercial Appeal, Louisville Courier-Journal, St. Louis Republic, Columbus Dispatch, Buffalo Times, Toledo Blade, Worcester Telegram, Philadelphia Record, Boston Herald, Newark Star-Eagle, Milwaukee Sentinel, Des Moines Register and Leader, Dayton News, Detroit Journal and Providence Tribune.

Marion Davies has begun work on her second subject. The name will be announced later. She has signed a contract with the Ardsley Art Film Corporation for two additional pictures.

Changes in Wolfberg Organization

The Harris P. Wolfberg attractions of Pittsburgh, announce several changes following the acquisition of "The Deemster" for Missouri and Kansas.

Edgar H. Wolfberg, who has been in charge of the Pittsburgh office, recently left for the Middle West, where he will open offices in Kansas City and St. Louis. His place will be filled by H. E. Stahler, a man of wide acquaintance in the Pittsburgh territory. He has had signal success with "The Crisis" and "The Deemster" since his connection with the Wolfberg organization. Mr. Stahler was formerly connected with V-L-S-E in St. Louis, and later represented Essanay.

Another addition to the Wolfberg forces is J. L. Ellman, an advertising man of St. Louis, who has developed a plan of exhibitor co-operation which is being introduced in Ohio with "On Trial," and other pictures of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Correction for American Standard

An error was made last week announcing in the trade papers the release date of the "Blackmailer," a five-part picture featuring Vera Sisson and Sidney Mason, released by the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation. This picture will be released October 15, instead of October 1, as previously announced.

Southern Ohio Likes Netter Subjects

Leon D. Netter of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, has just returned from Cincinnati and Dayton, where he closed contracts for an early showing of "The Garden of Allah." This attraction has never been shown in the southern part of the state, and great interest is attached to its release. Cincinnati will run it for two weeks and Dayton for one.

"Redemption," the picture featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son Russell Thaw, opened at the Walnut theatre in Cincinnati last week, and they wired the Masterpiece office in Cleveland that they had to turn people away at every performance. "Redemption" will play at the Stillman, Cleveland, all next week. Sol Lesser passed through Cleveland on his way to San Francisco from New York, where he has been ill with typhoid fever.

Iowa Public Ready for Increased Prices

Every exhibitor in Iowa and Nebraska showing "The Unwritten Law" and "The Witching Hour," two Fontenelle Feature Film Company pictures circulated from Omaha, Neb., charges twenty-five cents admission and learns a lesson. Manager Wintroub of the Fontenelle says there is not a theatre in his territory that could not make more money and show better pictures if they would charge twenty-five instead of ten cents.

Ten King-Bees for 7 Days Each

The King-Bee Films Corporation were notified on Monday that King-Bee Billy West Comedies are now featured in Denver's largest theatre, the Paris. This means that the ten releases to date will be played for a run of seven days each. L. G. Goldstein, general manager of Supreme Photoplays Corporation, made the sale.

Shipman Launches Extensive Film Plans

He Will Buy and Sell Pictures, from Eight-Reel Subjects to Short Comedy, Pass on Scenarios and Operate Laboratories, Besides Conducting Foreign Market Business

ERNEST SHIPMAN, who since 1914 has a record of over 900,000 dollars worth of pictures sold through him, the operations covering the entire open market field from Broadway runs to small deals in remote parts of the country, has perfected plans for co-operation between the producer of pictures and the man who buys them.

The plan, far reaching in its scope, includes the buying of all kinds of desirable film, from the seven or eight-reel spectacular drama to the short comedy, and is said to insure the producer against the risk of making pictures by guesswork. It is stated that three prominent film organizations and nearly all of the independent exchanges have agreed upon Mr. Shipman's plan, which has for its purpose the placing of an O. K. upon a story or scenario before it is made, thus insuring the production of a picture likely to come up to the best picture making requiremetns of the day.

"An an advertising move, it is unsurpassed, as it interests in a most attractive manner, the very men who will later be bidding for a picture, and the producer is enabled to profit by their practical suggestions in advance," says Mr. Shipman.

"The market practically assured, the next pressing need of the producer is effective New York representation. When acting individually this involves a considerable expense. Backed by an experienced office and selling force, I am prepared to undertake all business angles in connection with the selling and exploiting end of pictures.

"The foreign situation is at present a most complex one, and the utmost skill and knowledge are required in dealing with this market. After a thorough investigation of the men and companies now engaged in the work, no less an expert than Chester Beecroft has been affiliated with for the export trade.

"Mr. Beecroft has just returned from a four months' tour of England, France, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Russia, where he made a critical survey of conditions, and established connections with the strongest and most reliable buyers and distributors in each country. His knowledge is accurate, fresh, and thorough; his standing and associates so irreproachable as to remove all fear of possible dangerous governmental difficulties, and his organization is quite unique in system and efficiency.

"In order to properly care for the studio and laboratory requirements of certain producers and prominent directors who are already under co-operative contracts, I have executed a five years' lease for an extensive plant in the very heart of the city, where the highest art in negative development, positive printing, art titles and tests will be in vogue. This plant which has been improved and enlarged since coming into my possession, will be known as the Art Studios, and one of the best known laboratory men in the business and staff of assistants, is already in charge.

"The increased capacity of this plant will enable its superintendent to accept orders for laboratory work, and there will also be ample studio space for rental, private projection, assembling and test work, with night and day service to responsible parties.

"Capital is available for the making of unusual features, on a basis which will benefit producers of repute and standing.

Drama in Natural Colors Pleasing to Trade

Technicolor Company's "The Gulf Between" Frequently Holds Mirror to Nature—Color Lens Gives Best Results on Primitive Emotions

THE Technicolor Motion Picture Company, after a ten months' sojourn in Florida, has brought up North the first results of a color camera at work on a dramatic narrative. A nine reel picture, containing approximately seven thousand feet, called "The Gulf Between," was shown to the trade at Aeolian Hall last Friday morning.

To a non-technical observer, the Technicolor product has many admirable points. The process seems to do its best when dealing with primitive human emotions, anger, love and such. True love, when you can see the color of her lips and eyes, is far more stirring than the same girl done in blacks and whites. A good actor can become as mad as he feels like, shutting his eyes, twisting his mouth into a grimace of fury and otherwise giving vent to his inner feelings in black and white; but when that same actor becomes visibly red in the face, his contortions really carry weight.

In the same proportion, the blushings and palings of young lovers, provided that they have not outgrown the blushing and paling stage because of too frequent dramatic appearance, quicken the pulse far more than an ordinary screening. Trees, flowers, sea and sky do likewise.

Judged by the reception given "The Gulf Between," the "hardened New York critics" found much to admire in Technicolor's first attempt. The non-technical portions of the audience liked the coloring immensely, applauding at short intervals.

One unbiased color photography expert was overheard remarking that no natural color films had given such accuracy to facial tints. Some of these experts criticized the predominance of blues; others had words to say regarding the lack of sharp definition. Personally, we regretted the lack of close-ups.

All of nature's colors seemed to be delivered to the screen without undue manhandling. Considered as a dramatic production, "The Gulf Between" is reviewed competently in the Screen Examinations department. A complete technical analysis will be published in The Camera department two weeks from date.

It is understood that C. A. Willat, supervisor of the production, has not as yet made arrangements for distribution of "The Gulf Between." A statement from the Technicolor concern contains the following information:

"The Technicolor Process is the work of a Boston firm of engineers and scientists, Kalmus, Comstock & Westcott, Inc., their work extending over a period of five years.

"The members of the firm and many of their co-workers and employees are Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduates. Dr. Daniel F. Comstock is at present a professor in the department of physics; Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus was formerly a member of the institute staff and later professor at Queen's University, Canada, and in charge of the technical research department for the Canadian government, while Mr. W. Murton Westcott has been engaged in the design of technical apparatus for some years.

"This firm has focused on this development the constant attention and energy of a large staff of its highly trained experts, usually 15 or 20, over a period of years, the outcome of which is a long list of patent rights, 30 odd in number, covering all phases of the process and its equipment, and running into many hundreds of thousands of dollars of preliminary expenditure."

Violet Mersereau, almost out of sight in her new Bluebird, "The Girl at the Roadside"

A Voice from the South

In the event that the distributor succeeds in selling his product, through competition, good salesmanship, personality, or "steam roller" methods to the exhibitor, he is simply helping the sheriff serve the disposess notice on his best friend, and personal observations of some recent transactions lead me to believe that the object of many distributors is to "snatch" all they can, and put the exhibitor out of his misery by breaking him just as quickly as possible, at the same time fervently praying that they will see the familiar sign over the theatre on their next raid, "Under New Management."

The exhibitor (who is not without fault) can, in most instances be given credit for knowing what the producer manager of distribution and the distributor himself does not know, and that is: Just how much "real money" he can take in on a program subject, "special feature" or "million dollar" spectacle, and if he will inject a little business principal and some real showmanship into his business this unit of the business could stabilize itself quickly—but, he has little opportunity to improve his condition under the present policies of production and distribution as it seems that the only interest taken in his welfare by the other units of the business is to separate him from all the coin they can and leave him to work out his own salvation.

Personally, I believe that if every producer would secure competent men to visit twenty-five towns in each state, talk to the exhibitors, investigate local conditions and report their findings to the manager of distribution, that the fair producers would set a price on their products that would be somewhere near right, and at the same time give them a reasonable profit on their investment.

Then let the distributor employ competent salesmen who are showmen, men who know local conditions in their territory, salesmen with a conscience capable of offering suggestions to exhibitors that will help them, get men that will not oversell a subject. Very often a good man is handicapped, prices are too high and he knows it, but his hands have been tied by the exchange manager, who also knows that what the salesman reports is the truth, but he must "obey" orders, and sell his subjects at the prices fixed by the "man who does not know" who usually sits on his throne on Broadway.

Exchange managers must know their territory, know every exhibitor personally and the conditions which surround him; he must help him, be fair with him and sell him subjects on the box-office value basis in his town, don't try to grind the last "dime" out of him, but be satisfied with a reasonable profit.

Exhibitors with a few exceptions are fair minded, and there are very few instances where a compromise cannot be effected when they want some unreasonable concession. Exhibitors are at loggerheads with the distributors principally because they are continually being oversold. I have seen the books of many exhibitors and know that they did not do a gross business on many subjects equal to the rental price. This condition was not due to any fault of the exhibitor, but to local conditions. I know of one town of 10,000 inhabitants where the exhibitor can put on a "special" at increased admission prices and do a "whale" of a business; just about forty miles away is another town of practically the same population, and if the exhibitor there plays the same subject at the same prices, and pays the same rental, he will lose money—local conditions and class of inhabitants is the cause.

If the exhibitor is permitted to earn a fair return on his investment he will improve the conditions of his theatre by employing competent help and installing new equipment. This will save the distributors thousands of dollars yearly; it will eliminate film destruction, misshipments and other evils charged against the exhibitor.

Harold Bolster to Tour World for Goldwyn

Harold Bolster, who recently resigned the vice-presidency and general management of the General Film Company to join Goldwyn as general manager, leaves next week for a trip around the world to begin the extension of Goldwyn activities into the far parts of the globe.

Sailing from San Francisco on October 4, Mr. Bolster goes first to Sydney, Australia, where he will establish headquarters in that Commonwealth.

THE WORLD MARKET

Several Inter-Ocean Deals

Louis Brock, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, reports the sale of "Parentage" for South Africa.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" has also been sold through the Inter-Ocean offices several months ago for South Africa, and the latest advices from there state that this subject has taken that country by storm, and is considered by exhibitors as a great box office attraction.

Inter-Ocean also reports the sale of four prints of "The Russian Revolution of 1917," with the Man of the Hour, Kerensky, as the feature for Australia. The shipment went forward Monday, Sept. 17.

London Director of Inter-Ocean in New York

John H. Taylor, managing director of the London office of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, arrived in New York City Monday on the S. S. Lapland to confer with the home office.

Upon Mr. Taylor's arrival he was greatly grieved to learn of the sudden death of Henry J. Brock, president, not being acquainted with the fact due to his having sailed a day prior to the accident.

It is Mr. Taylor's intention to return to London the end of the coming week.

Rev. Harris, Kingston, N. Y., Uses Screen as Pulpit

The Rev. Charles J. Harris, of Kingston, N. Y., uses the screen as a far-reaching pulpit. He is one of the few clergymen to see the possibilities of the screen in enabling the preacher to reach a larger congregation.

In "The Little Samaritan," a photoplay by Rev. Harris, an Erbograph production, released on Art Dramas program, the moral side is brought out without making a "preachy" picture.

"The Little Samaritan" was founded on the story in the New Testament of the Good Samaritan. The story of the film parallels this narrative to a certain extent, in that the girl, Lindy, is the only one of the whole village who is capable of self-sacrifice, although the others pretend to be Christians, and despise her as an outcast.

Exhibitor to Release His Own Illustrated Song

F. D. Allison, manager of the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J., and former president of the Allison Amusement Company of Pittsburgh, announced this week that he is about to release his illustrated song, "Stand for the Country That Stood For You," of which he is the author. Six hundred feet of film accompany the song.

Mr. Allison came to Newark a few months ago from Pittsburgh where he was the residential manager of a chain of picture houses in Pittsburgh, Erie, Monaca and neighboring cities.

General Enterprises Open Foreign Department

M. R. Fink in Charge of New Branch—At Present Disposing of "Deadly Sins," and Has Sale Rights to "Robinson Crusoe"

ATTESTING to the rapidly increasing scope of their newly-formed General Enterprises, Inc., Messrs. A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announced this week that a department especially devoted to the handling of films for foreign sale has been added to their organization. At its head has been placed, M. R. Fink, a film executive of several years' experience, who brings to his new duties a mass of facts and figures covering the foreign market situation, the result of five years' intensive study of the subject.

Mr. Fink at present is busily engaged in disposing of the foreign rights to the McClure Series, "The Seven Deadly Sins," which were recently acquired by General Enterprises, Inc. He states an extraordinary number of inquiries, both written and of a personal nature, have been received from over-seas buyers regarding the McClure productions, which contain many elements especially calculated to appeal to foreign audiences. Up to date, several contracts have been closed, whereby the "Seven Deadly Sins" will be shown in countries outside of the United States and Canada, and it appears that a record may be made in the disposition of foreign rights to visiting buyers, in the matter of time consumed.

General Enterprises, Inc., has also secured the selling privileges for the entire world of Henry W. Savage's production, "Robinson Crusoe," an adaptation of the immortal novel which has been translated into every language on the globe. A deal is now pending for the acquisition of three film successes of the past year starring well-known screen players, and Mr. Fink contemplates the removal of his offices from 1600 Broadway to larger quarters in the near future, owing to the volume of business which General Enterprises, Inc., is handling in the recently established foreign department.

Blumenthal Takes Over Foreign Rights to Metro

Export and Import Film Company to Distribute Pictures to Wide Audience—Exchanges Opened in Countries Where Rights Are Not Sold

A DEAL of interest to the trade was consummated about two months ago, and has only just come to public knowledge through Frank Garrett, the President of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc. Ben Blumenthal, President of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has taken over the entire foreign rights to the Metro Pictures.

As is usual with all Mr. Blumenthal's undertakings, the affair was kept particularly quiet. It seems that Madame Schuepbach, representative of the Mundusfilm Corporation of Paris, who was recently here to buy material for the foreign market, and whose personal representative is Mr. Garrett, delayed her departure until she was able to close a deal with Mr. Blumenthal for the rights to these pictures for Spain, France, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, and the Balkans. It was Mr. Garrett's announcement of this fact that led to the discovery of the story.

Mr. Blumenthal has but lately come to this country, having received practically all his training in the foreign market. It is said he is recognized in Europe as one of the keenest business men in the film world. Having spent seven years in the active study of foreign exchange conditions, his knowledge of European territories will be of invaluable assistance.

Mr. Blumenthal, on his part, is most enthusiastic over the proposition, and feels that the Metro Pictures will be sure of immediate success with European audiences. Such stars as Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Harold Lockwood, and the Sidney Drews have attained popularity in this country, and their following will doubtless be increased wherever they are shown abroad. Mr. Blumenthal believes that the European market is coming more and more to demand the American productions, with their elaboration of detail and expensive settings, and that it is a matter of simply bringing the pictures before the audiences in the proper manner to result in the ultimate triumph of American releases over the foreign products.

In accordance with his present plans, Mr. Blumenthal is opening exchanges in the other foreign countries, where he cannot sell the territory to some reputable foreign distributor, so that all of Europe will be covered in the shortest possible space of time.

Harry Siegal, manager of the Globe Feature Film Company, of Boston, has already bought the rights to this feature for all New England. The rights to New York and New Jersey have been bought by I. E. Chadwick.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

NEWSPAPER men and trade paper representatives — the two classifications are always employed in justice to members of both parties—were the guests of William Fox at one of his Fort Lee studios on an afternoon last week. The occasion was the shooting of a number of mob scenes for a forthcoming production of "Les Miserables," which Frank Lloyd is directing with William Farnum as his star. Two or three entire street sets representing certain quarters of Paris in the latter part of the eighteenth century were peopled by actors and actresses, extras and extresses in costumes of varying hue, cut and weave.

ONE frenzied guest exclaimed, "So this is Paris!" as he stubbed a toe on a protruding cobblestone of the Rue de Something or Something Else, a street the pavement of which bore a close resemblance to the surfaces of Broadway and Seventh avenue in their present state of construction. There was a gentleman parading about among all those present clothed in a long black coat and wearing a cane almost as long, who looked as if he might be the mayor of the place on a tour of inspection or attempting to find a drink. There were a number of cafes with tables out in front. Seated around them were all the gentry of the Paris, but they never drank the brownish stuff in their glasses. We asked one fellow why, and his reply was "ginger ale." We thought at first that he was a picture reviewer in disguise.

THEN there was a squad or so of soldiers from the 71st Regiment, all dressed up in ancient uniforms, getting their first taste of European warfare by charging the populace every now and then. There were plenty of ladies in Juliet poses on balconies. One of them became tired after roosting romantically for three hours in a space four feet square and squalked loudly in French as follows, "For the love o' Mike, Jim, bring me a ladder; I want to get out of this joint for a minute and stretch." Whereupon Jim Romeo produced a ladder and his Juliet descended in the view of many upturned eyes. Everyone was watching to see when the sun would come out, hence the upturned eyes.

MR. LLOYD didn't seem to be having an easy time of it, what with the constant winking of the sun and the job of making a few hundred extras act like the former, very former, inhabitants of Paris. However, judging from glimpses of the action, "Les Miserables" stands a fine chance of being a good picture, 'specially as all the guests were carefully kept without camera range.

THE original and only K. C. B. of "I Thank You" fame was a member of the party. We thought of making the suggestion that he do the story for us and vice versa, just for an experiment, but then the thought that both Mr. Hearst and Mr. Johnston might object kept us silent on the subject.

MARRY MOREY has made an offer, before witness, to make the fellow who gets a page story mentioning his name at least once and using his picture at least once in the Saturday Evening Post, a present of a thousand dollars. Harry, we opine, is in his wishes modesty itself.

THE lady who told the management of the Langley theatre, Chicago, that Charlie Chaplin was the "best imitation of Billy West she ever saw" must be a Mrs. Rip Van Winkle.

BEN GRIMM and the U. S. Army are responsible for a most important piece of news which we have the honor of announcing. Ben has made good his long promised threat and is now enrolled with "Uncle Sam's fighting men" as they say in the dailies. He is going to do photographing for the Signal Corps and so that he might make suitable time exposures "the boys" made him a present of a wrist watch with a face as illuminated as his own. Jim Hoff made the presentation before a large gathering of press agents, waiters and reviewers at Keen's, at which place Ben partook of a farewell luncheon of beans in order to become acclimated, as it were. The new recruit will be located, for the time being, at Little Silver, New Jersey. As yet we are unable to give a more detailed address owing to Ben's well known bashfulness. But we will endeavor to acquaint our readers with his identical tent next week in order that all cigarettes, magazines, checks and money may reach him safely.

THE Grimm person is not the only one who claims attention for an heroic act. Horace Fuld, noted as the only reviewer who ever became a film salesman—and that successfully—is just now at Spartanburg, S. C., although a little later he says, his address will be "Somewhere in France." It is rather useless to add that the best of luck goes with both boys from everyone in the trade.

MARIE DRESSLER, of Goldwyn, who left for Los Angeles recently in the center of a private car accompanied by a Japanese butler, a French maid, a parrot, a canary bird and fourteen trunks has issued a cry, like unto that emitted by a maiden in distress. It follows:

S O S:—SOMEWHERE IN KANSAS CITY

After crossing desert took inventory of baggage and crew before embarking for Los Angeles. In going over crew and animal contingent, find myself mixed up with Ringling Bros. Circus. In the mix-up of checks instead of a canary and a parrot I drew a wild cow and an elephant. Having fourteen trunks of my own, I do not know what to do with the elephant. Please advise. On top of it all I find I am minus a perfectly good secretary. Should be found in Grand Central Station with a waiting expression on her face. Kindly find and express her to Los Angeles, C. O. D.

The National Red Cross Rosemary Pageant to be presented at Rosemary Farm, Huntington, Long Island, on Friday, October 5, by what is described as a "historic cast," has nothing particular to do with the film trade but it is worth mentioning any way.

Daniel Frohman and a large staff of assistants have been directing rehearsals for a long time and the affair promises to be a big one, well worth going all the way to Huntington to see.

A large number of stage and screen stars have volunteered to participate in the pageant. Space does not permit the mentioning of all the names, but those prominent on the screen follow:

Ethel Barrymore, Jack Barrymore, Hazel Dawn, Jeanne Eagels, Irene Fenwick, Kitty Gordon, Rita Jolivet, Marjorie Rambeau, Robert Edeson and Lumsden Hare.

The rest of the list includes practically all the actors and actresses of importance now in New York.

Suspect Railroad Connivance with Exhibitor

An Omaha exchange last week received a film box back from an express company after an exhibitor had refused to accept it c. o. d. But in the film box was advertising paper the exhibitor had used on another film.

That the express agent had allowed the exhibitor to take the film and show it, later returning it as refused, is the claim of the exchange.

Burton Garrett, Former Exchange Manager, a Suicide

No motives can be assigned for the suicide of Burton Garrett, a Cleveland man and former manager of the Mutual local office, who shot himself last week in Indianapolis.

Mrs. Frances Garrett, his wife, living at 2026 Cornell road, left immediately for Indianapolis upon hearing the news and brought the body to Cleveland for interment. Mr. Garrett, who was thirty-six years of age, was a salesman for the Fox Film Corporation. He served through the Spanish-American war, and later served in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Gibbons has been four years in K-E-S-E employ. His place in Cleveland will be taken by J. H. Norwood.

NEWSY REPORTS FROM ALL SECTIONS

Fire Ends and Consolidated Film Gets Busy at Once

The Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of New Orleans, had all of its merchandise, part of its office fixtures and half of its paper department destroyed in a fire recently, and was still able to get films to every exhibitor for the night's performance.

"We got every out-of-town shipment off in tin, so that there was not a single show disappointed in any way in spite of the fact that there were no lights in the building," the company says in a letter of explanation. The letter adds:

"We had a cable stretched from the light plant which is about a block from our exchange, and as soon as we were permitted to enter the building immediately started business as usual. We had a temporary office open at 920 Gravier street one hour after the fire started. Plans for the new office are now being drawn up by Architects Favrot and Livandais, and we intend to put in everything new, and will have one of the nicest exchanges in the South when all is completed."

Not a single film was burned in the fire because stored in one of the best film vaults and inspection rooms in the country. Twenty reels of film—only—were destroyed by water.

Rapid Rise in Canada for Claire Hague

Claire Hague, of Canadian Universal, who has been appointed a member of the Motion Picture Distribution Committee of the Food Controller's office at Ottawa, to have jurisdiction over all films, was with Allen Brothers Company in Canada for three years.

Mr. Hague then became associated with the George Kleine Feature Company, where he filled an important position for two years. The old Canadian Film Company was the next to claim his services, and when this company became the Canadian Universal Film Company, Mr. Hague remained as local manager. In April, 1915, when a reorganization of Universal interests took place, Mr. Hague was appointed general manager for the Universal Film Company in Canada.

Mobilizing Movies of Canada for War Service

Claire Hague, Jule and J. J. Allen and W. A. Willison on Special Committee Named to Have Charge of All Films for the Government

THE Dominion of Canada, through its national Government at Ottawa, and the various provincial governments, is making elaborate plans to use the Canadian film

The Dominion of Canada, through its national government at Ottawa, and the various provincial governments, is making elaborate plans to use the Canadian film industry for war measures. A body known as the Moving Picture Distribution Committee has just been appointed to work in conjunction with Food Controller Hanna.

Claire Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Co., Limited, Jule and J. J. Allen and W. A. Willison, chief of the educational department of the Food Controller's office, are on the committee.

It is planned that this committee will take charge of all films which are to be made relative to food conservation in Canada. The committee will look after the proper distributing of these films, and see that they are used to the greatest advantage of Canada.

The Canadian government has at last realized that in the moving picture it has at its disposal a force second to none but the daily press. President Wilson in the United States awoke many months ago to the great opportunity offered by the moving picture industry for the dissemination of public intelligence. The American President has declared that the film is a close rival of the daily newspaper when it comes to giving the people of America facts about the war.

Claire Hague addressed the exhibitors' convention of the Maritime Provinces at St. John, N. B., and pointed out how the exhibitor could perform a patriotic duty by showing the films which are about to be issued. His remarks were listened to with a great deal of attention and he was accorded a splendid reception.

H. M. Crandall, Washington, Ready for Busiest Season

HARRY M. CRANDALL, head of the Crandall string of houses in Washington, D. C., has just returned from New York after booking a number of star pictures to be shown at his houses during the coming season. In speaking of his trip to New York, Mr. Crandall told the MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent that the contracts he has just closed call for photoplays featuring the following well-known stars:

Mary Pickford, George M. Cohan, Marguerite Clark, Douglas Fairbanks, Clara Kimball Young, Julian Eltinge, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart, Geraldine Farrar, Francis X. Bushman, Billie Burke, Mme. Olga Petrova, Earle Williams, Edith Storey, Charles Ray, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid, Norma Talmadge, Carlyle Blackwell, Madge Kennedy, Harold Lockwood, Anita Stewart, Jack Pickford, Mary Garden, Robert Harron, Maxine Elliott, Alice Brady, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh and many others.

Mr. Crandall went to New York for the purpose of attending a meeting of the National Committee of the War Co-operation Commission. He says: "I feel safe in predicting that the coming season will be the busiest in the history of the film business in the National Capital. I am prepared for a heavy fall and winter season and have made my plans accordingly.

"Speaking of censorship," continued Mr. Crandall, "there will be no need of any such restriction as far as we are concerned. There is a tendency all along the line to put out better pictures. I think the people are getting tired of sex problem plays."

Special Performances for Children at Newark, N. J.

Clean and better pictures for the children of Newark, N. J., will be a part of the new policy of the Strand theatre as outlined by its manager, F. D. Allison. Mr. Allison declares that it is his conviction that special pictures for boys and girls will meet a long felt need in this vicinity.

It is his plan to hold special performances for children at the Strand, showing only such films as are particularly adapted to the entertainment and enlightenment of the younger folks. The pictures will be selected for both their entertainment and educational qualities.

The private showing was given last Saturday and was attended by more than 1,500.

Mutual Pleased with New Goodrich Feature

Mutual is expecting great things of Edna Goodrich's new photodrama, "Queen X," which will be released October 1, and upon which Director John B. O'Brien is said to have lavished much genius in his selection of the scenes and in which Miss Goodrich is said to have exhibited some of her most winning screen capabilities. Realizing that Miss Goodrich is at her best when she has plenty of action, this fact was not overlooked in choosing the story, which is chock full of underground passageways, smugglers' dens, and other things which are counted upon to lend an adventurous turn to the story. Mystery is said to be the keynote of the feature, and Mutual seems satisfied that Miss Goodrich will make good.

Slow in Joining Nebraska Branch M. P. E. L. of A.

Nebraska's branch of the M. P. E. L. of A., organized shortly before the Chicago convention, following a visit of Mr. Ochs, is not accomplishing the work it might, according to its president, H. M. Thomas, manager of the Strand, Omaha, Neb.

"There are 350 exhibitors in the state and only 100 are members of our organization," said Mr. Thomas. "When there is something big in the wind they join readily enough, but when there are just ordinary affairs to attend to and legislative and other battles are in the future, they pay little or no attention to the organization."

Mr. Thomas said the Nebraska league will welcome a visit soon by David G. Rodgers, national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. Mr. Rodgers has been in Chicago, and an invitation has been sent him to come to Nebraska. It is understood he has accepted.

The Nebraska league will hold its quarterly meeting in Lincoln next month, said Mr. Thomas. The exact date has not been set.

Composer's First Efforts Welcome at the Strand

Manager Edel, of the Strand theatre, announces that he will be glad to receive musical compositions from American composers for rendition by the Strand Symphony Orchestra. Signor Adriano Ariani, the conductor, and Carl Edouarde will, with Mr. Edel and two well-known music critics, pass on all compositions submitted.

It is Mr. Edel's intention to embody in the Symphony program a composition by an American composer, which has not hitherto been heard in public.

By inviting American composers to submit their works, Mr. Edel and Signor Adriano Ariani believe that they will encourage unknown writers to produce work of merit. All compositions submitted will receive serious consideration.

Patriotic Organizations Use Motion Picture Campaign

In the campaign for stimulating patriotism conducted with the showing of "The Man Without a Country" at the Broadway theatre the following organizations took part:

The National Security League, United States Junior Naval Reserve, American Women's League for Self-Defense, Junior American Marine and Naval Scouts, Boy Scouts of America, Elton Boys' Brigade and Girls' Hospital Corps.

The play was taken to the theatre by Jewel Productions, Inc. The run ended September 22.

Wounded Soldiers When Convalescent Trained as Operators

In connection with the vocation training of the returned convalescent soldiers, the Military Hospitals Commission has opened a class for moving picture operators at the Central Technical School, Toronto.

The class has attracted much interest among the returned soldiers.

Frank Reicher Joins Metro Directing Force

His Initial Assignment Will Be Direction of Ethel Barrymore in Screen Version of "Red Horse Hill"—Has Strong Stage Record

FRANK REICHER is the latest addition to the directing staff of Metro Pictures Corporation, announcement of which move was made by the company last week immediately following the signing of the contract whereby the former stage manager will throw his wide experience and skill into motion picture dramas for Metro. At the same time it was announced that his first work under the new connection will be the direction of Ethel Barrymore in a picture version of Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," which has been prepared for the screen by Mary Murillo.

Although Mr. Reicher's expereince in motion pictures has been brief, he brings to Metro years of expert direction of legitimate productions, augmented by actual acting experience with Julia Marlowe and others. Under Charles Dillingham's management he turned from acting to stage managing, in the companies of Frank Daniels and Lulu Glaser. Later he was a member of the Sothern and Marlowe company which toured England, and still later took up directing again, finally becoming stage manager for Henry B. Harris. Several notable productions are credited to his supervision.

Mr. Reicher's entrance into motion pictures was made with the Lasky Company, after thoroughly studying the work of the motion picture camera in its relation to the art of acting. For Lasky he directed several productions that were accorded prominent places on the Paramount program, among them "The Case of Becky," "The Black Wolf" and "For the Defense."

With Miss Barrymore as his star, Mr. Reicher is entering upon his work for Metro with an unusual degree of optimism.

Laemmle Announces Important Coast Plans

New Efficiency System Affects Business and Art of Making Screen Productions—Plan for New Players

AFTER a month's business visit at Universal City Carl Laemmle has returned to New York with several important plans which he perfected during his stay on the West Coast, and which he has announced for use in the filming of the most important productions undertaken by Universal. The final details of the new efficiency system, which Mr. Laemmle points to as one of his most recent achievements while on the Coast, affect both the business and art of manufacturing screen dramas, and were tried out for the first time under Mr. Laemmle's supervision.

In addition to the improvement in system, a large number of new, but well known, players were put under contract, increasing the Universal acting staff considerably.

"We are now going full steam ahead," Mr. Laemmle said last week, "and, despite war conditions, expect to do our full share in keeping business in a healthy and growing state.

"One of the chief things that occupied my attention on the Coast was the arrangement of working schedules so that the superproductions I have had in mind for some time can be gotten well under way before the rainy season sets in, as spectacular outdoor effects figure in them prominently. We have decided to keep the stories secret for the present, until all details have been perfected."

Mr. Laemmle stated, however, that Mae Murray, Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers, Franklyn Farnum and other newcomers would be featured in fitting roles.

"I was also much interested," Mr. Laemmle went on, "in observing the final experience in lighting that has been perfected at Universal City. The results in many respects we consider revolutionary, and now put effects at the command of our directors that we thought impossible even a year ago. Night photography has now been solved, and many of the best scenes that, in my judgment, we have ever filmed, have recently been done by the application of the new electrical technique.

"In the final test, however, it is the story that provides the actual foundation upon which screen reputations are built and patronage is attracted.

"To meet this need for fresh material, we are putting several fiction writers under contract to submit all of their new work to us for possible adoption to the screen. The man or woman with a story that has novelty of theme and the right vein of action has my sincere asurance that he or she will receive conscientious and courteous attention on any manuscripts submitted either to Colonel Brady, scenario chief at Universal City, California, or to our Eastern editor at 1600 Broadway, New York."

Kitty Gordon's Next Feature Is Named

The next World-Picture Brady-Made in which Kitty Gordon will appear as star, and which is one of three prepared in advance starring the former musical comedy favorite, is called "Her Hour." The remaining two are "The Divine Sacrifice," to be released at the end of the year, and another which has not yet been giving a title. The company is enthusiastic over the prospect of business with these pictures.

Films Construction Work

Manager H. M. Thomas of the Strand, whose company is building the big new Rialto, at Fifteenth and Douglas, Omaha, Neb., is taking motion pictures of the building week by week as it is being erected. On the opening program of the new theatre one of the features will be these pictures, combined in a reel, the company states.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

MARGUERITE CLARK arrived at the studio for the filming of the Paramount "Sub Deb" story, "Bab's Diary," and immediately Director J. Searle Dawley told her it would be necessary for her to fall into a bathtub full of water once or twice.

"Oh, all right," sighed Miss Clark, never displaying the slightest sign of annoyance, though it must have been trying. She was attired in a dainty little evening frock just made to be spoiled in the water. Then she tried the stunt a few times with the tub empty. Rehearsals over, they filled the tub with fairly warm water and the little star took the plunge. She went in over her head and her only complaint afterward was that she got water in her ears.

HUGO BALLIN, artist, provided the snow needed at the Goldwyn studios, Fort Lee, for the production of "The Cinderella Man." The script calls for a dozen or more outdoor winter scenes—scenes with snow, frosted window panes and howling winds.

Under the art director's skilled hand there arose on the floor in a commodious corner of the studio a vista of rooftops, chimneys, rain pipes and shutters. And presently the snowfall began. Carelessly yet carefully spread over the roofs lies a coating of what appears to be snow, three inches deep.

Through this snow, from the window of her luxurious home to the window of the cheap boarding house at the corner of the street where lives the "Cinderella Man," played by Tom Moore, tramps Mae Marsh, in the play his fairy godmother.

IT is violating no confidence to reveal that one of the principal roles in "Joan of Flatbush" falls to a goose. In Mr. Browne's story the goose is called Herbert. Director Horan and his assistants need a good actor to play the part.

Without wishing to be captious, Mr. Horan feels that he must insist on an intelligent goose—on a goose with brains.

At the same time the accepted goose must have a sense of humor, because some of the things he will be called upon to do are calculated to balk a bird unendowed with this rarest of nature's gifts.

JANE AND KATHARINE LEE, William Fox's "Baby Grands," are now masters of the Ramble, the Chinese Toddle, and the Jazz Fox Trot, all of which belong to the coming crop of ballroom dances.

The Lee children were guided through the intricacies of the steps by members of the Inner Circle of the American National College of Dancing, which met in New York City recently.

Jewel Carmen, Who Appears in Fox Films

WHEN Director Dillon was putting on the school room scene in Ann Pennington's new Paramount picture the other day, he discovered that he was short several girls. That is to say, there were several vacant seats which rather spoiled the composition. Being a stickler for detail in such matters, he demanded girls at once, two of them.

"I'll go on," cried Fannie Brice, of the Follies, who was present to watch Miss Pennington work.

"So will I," said Helen Barnes, also among those present.

"Fine!" answered Dillon joyfully, "please take your hair down and look as much like schoolgirls of sweet fourteen or thereabouts as possible."

See if you can pick them out!

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE, at Metro Studios, is absent-minded and when engrossed in production forgets all about the dinner-hour. Just as a reminder the company presented him a watch the other day. Cabanne thanked the players and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, this is the eleventh watch I have been presented with, which leads me to believe that time is money. Only late last night when I arrived at my home at Forest Hills, I found a package awaiting me and found it contained a watch that chimed the hours. I don't quite catch the big idea, but I thank you."

Next day when the director arrived at the studio he was minus the timepiece. After the arduous day's toil was ended the performers decided to give Director Cabanne an hour glass as a more emphatic hint of the passing of time.

LAWRENCE SEMON, director and comedian of Vitagraph's "Big V." comedies, has bought three automobiles in succession. One was struck by a train, another too small and the third still works.

The rage for new cars seems to have affected the studio. Others who have bought cars are Earle Williams and Harry Morey; Patsy DeForest and Mildred Manning; Bobby Connelly and Aida Horton; Graham Baker, Edward Montaigne and A. Van Buren Powell; Wesley Ruggles and Thomas Mills; J. B. French and Doc Wentz; W. H. McCoy and Robert Stuart; Victor Stewart, Vic Claussen, Sam Turner, Dick Tietchmann, Al. Mayer, and Harry Waldron.

AGNES AYRES, leading woman in "The Bottom of the Well," was considerably worked up over a fire at the studio in the production of the feature. The laboratory used in one scene was destroyed.

Leaving for home after two o'clock she fell asleep in her car. Naturally, she dreamed about fires and police and crowds, and when she awakened on reaching her apartment insisted she was still asleep for she was still looking at a fire. It was a different fire, however, in an apartment across the street. Miss Ayres did not wait

DOLORES CASSINELLI, popular Essanay, Selig and Emerald star, has abandoned the motion picture field, and will soon be heard in musical comedy. Miss Cassinelli has been signed by Madison Corey to sing the prima donna role in his new musical comedy by Channing Pollack and Rennold Wolf, entitled "The Grass Widow."

So this is Fort Lee! Eva Tanguay, mistress of dynamite, has just concluded "The Wild Girl" (Selznick)

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THOMAS H. INCE branched out again this week in order to have sufficient stage space for all three companies now working on Artcraft and Paramount subjects. In addition to having leased the Mabel Normand Studio, which will be used exclusively by the William S. Hart Company for producing Ince productions for Artcraft, he has leased the Selig Edendale Studio, which has an enclosed stage and two open air ones.

All Ince companies were busy during the week. William S. Hart and company, which includes Vola Vale as leading woman, has started on a new play which gives Hart the role of a desert miner who causes much action when an attempt is made to jump his recently discovered claim. Robert McKim has a very prominent part in this, and another part of importance is taken by Milton Ross.

The first Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount starring Dorothy Dalton was finished by the end of this week. This is titled "The Price Mark," and is from an original photoplay by John B. Ritchey. Playing opposite Miss Dalton are Thurston Hale and William Conklin, and important roles are taken by Adele Farrington, Dorcus Matthews and J. P. Lockney.

New Ince Productions

The Rupert Hughes story titled "When Life Was Marked Down" has served for the coming Charles Ray production now being made. This will be titled "His Mother's Boy." Mr. Ince will introduce a new leading woman in this Paramount in the person of Doris Lee, who is said to be the image of Mary Pickford. The photoplay is being made under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

A photoplay is being made at the Thomas H. Ince studios for Al H. Woods under the direction of Irwin Willatt. This is adapted from the Charles Kleine play "The Guilty Man," and has William Garwood in the name part, with Gloria Hope playing the oppostite lead.

Three of the Mack Sennett Comedy companies are at work, and four will begin on a new subject within a day or two, the story now having been prepared, and the cast will be completed shortly.

Edward Klein, who made the first Sennett-Paramount release, "The Bedroom Blunder," is at work on a subject as yet unnamed, which has Mary Thurman, Charles Murray and Whelan Trask.

Director Clarence Badger is still at work on "The Pullman Bride," which features Gloria Swanson, with Charles Conklin, Mack Swain and Tom Kennedy.

Victor Heerman has in the making "Are Waitresses Safe?" with Louise Fazenda, Slim Summerville and Ben Turpin.

Christie Bunches Stars

Director Al E. Christie had three important male leads in a comedy put in production this week. The parts were taken by J. Balesco, "Smiling" Billy Mason and Joe Moore The feminine characters were taken by Ethel Lynne and Gene Hathaway. This subject will serve to introduce both Mason and Moore, who are well known in comedies, having played with a number of the most successful West Coast companies.

Director Christie also announces the engagement of Helen Leslie as a permanent member of the Christie stock company. Miss Leslie was formerly with the Universal, where she played in a number of successful subjects. Her introduction to Christie patrons will be in the comedy titled "Taxi Troubles."

Plan Big Scene in National Play

Fred L. Porter, secretary and treasurer of the National Film Corporation of America, has been busy during the past week making the necessary arrangements for the filming of a big forest fire scene in the mountains near Los Angeles. The producing organization is expected to arrive in Los Angeles from Morgan City, Louisiana, within the next day or two, and the forest fire scenes will be one of the first to be made after their arrival.

William Parsons, president and general manager of the National Film Corporation, is still in the East. It is hinted Mr. Parsons plans to enter the comedy producing field, and if this is the case he will have an announcement to make of this upon his arrival in Los Angeles.

Changes in Wake of Laemmle's Visit

The stay of two weeks by President Carl Laemmle at Universal City has caused a number of changes, principally with respect to equipment and changes of the producing plants.

Plans made previous to the departure of Mr. Laemmle provide that half of the first open air stage built is to be converted into an enclosed studio. The size of this will be 50 x 300 feet, and the cost of the change will amount to approximately $12,000. The lighting equipment necessary for the enclosed stage has now been ordered and will reach the studio by the time the building is completed. The cost of this equipment is something between $17,000 and $20,000.

The directorial staff now has three additional men. Paul C. Hurst, formerly director for Signal and Kalem companies, will make a series of Western dramas featuring Helen Gibson and Millard K. Wilson, and he is now at work on his first subject. Edwin Frazee, a former director at Keystone under Mack Sennett, and later with Fox, will make comedies at U City. These will be of two reels each, and for his principal players Neal Burns, Rena Rogers and Stanley Laurel have been engaged. Frazee is credited with making "Crooked to the End," "The Village Vampire," "An Oily Scoundrel," "Social Pirates," and others. Neal Burns has been seen in comedy for the past three years; a greater portion of this time he was under the direction of Al E. Christie in Nestor Comedies, and later played in many of the Christie releases. For the past three months he was with the Lasalida Company in the making of Selburn Comedies.

Former Director Re-engaged

Douglas Gerrard, formerly actor and director at Universal City, was re-engaged this week and will direct the making of five-reel photoplays. The first will be "Madame Spy," with Jack Mulhall and Edith Roberts playing the featured roles. When Director Joseph DeGrasse learned that Gerrard was to return to Universal City he agreed to let him have his former cameraman, Jack McKenzie. Justin McClosky will serve as assistant director to Gerrard.

The first Mae Murray production made under the title "The Princess Virtue" has been completed under the direction of Robert Leonard, and she is now working in a story by Leonard himself titled "Face Value," which will be a five-reel Bluebird Photoplay. Fred Myton prepared the scenario, and the players supporting Miss Murray will be Wheeler Oakman, Casson Ferguson, Kathrine Griffith, Clarissa Selwyn, Florence Carpenter, and others.

The queer thing about both these views is that the dyed-in-the-wool Fairbanks smile is absent. The scenes are from his next Artcraft, "The Man from Painted Post"

Harry Carey was injured to the extent of a rib being fractured at Universal City in the making of a scene for "Bucking Broadway." The accident happened when Carey fell from a balcony to the floor in an elaborate café set. The scene was one in which Carey battled with a dozen men, who upon his request made it realistic. He was knocked through a lattice railing and fell to the floor, a distance of at least ten feet.

A new record for scenes in a five-reel photoplay is said to have been made in the filming of "Flirting with Death," which features Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon. This subject, made by Elmer Clifton, is said to have 927 scenes. This is said to be about twice the number to be found in a photoplay of this size. The subject will be released as a Bluebird.

Progress in Universal Studio

"A Man of His Word" has been completed by Director Harry Harvey, who has Eileen Sedgwick and Neal Hart as his principals, and Harvey will in all probability next take up the making of a Western serial, script for which is now in the hands of the Universal Company in New York. Production will be started as soon as it is returned to the Western studio.

"The Red Ace" serial company, directed by Jacques Jaccard, is now on the thirteenth episode, and Director Francis Ford, who is making "The Phantom Ship" serial, with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, has taken a number of scenes on the seventh episode. Production of this serial was slightly delayed on account of Miss Gerber recently undergoing an operation for appendicitis.

Motion picture rights for a number of well-known subjects have been purchased by Colonel J. E. Brady, manager of the Bluebird manuscript department. One is "The Scarlet Car," by Richard Harding Davis, which will be produced by Joseph DeGrasse, with Franklyn Farnum as the star of this comedy drama.

Dorothy Phillips will next work in "Heart's Blood," a drama by Eileen Stern.

"The Oldfashioned Gentleman," by F. Hopkinson Smith, and "Anthony the Absolute," by Samuel Merwin, have been purchased, together with "Donna Perfecta," a Spanish romance, and will be filmed under the direction of Rupert Julian, who, with Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury, will be featured in these subjects.

"The Photographer's Story" is a two-reel comedy being made by Edwin Frazee, with Rena Rogers; and the Victor Company, under the direction of Al Santell, is filming "His Strenuous Cure," with Harry Mann and Kathleen O'Connor.

Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke is again with the Universal scenario department and is engaged in preparing a five-reel photoplay script for Director Stuart Paton titled "The Green Seal," an adaptation from the Charles Edmund Walk story of the same name.

Real Japanese Atmosphere

A large portion of one of the blocks which constitute the Fox studio has now been transformed into two Japanese village sets for scenes in "The Mikado," now being filmed by the Franklin Brothers, with the kiddies playing the important parts. The houses of the village are of a substantial nature and reproduce scenes in the Cherry Blossom Islands. The construction of these sets was under the supervision of Japanese. One setting represents a section of a residence district, while the other is laid in the underworld section of a Japanese town.

The subject now being filmed by R. A. Walsh has been titled "This Is the Life." It will have George Walsh as star, supported by Wanda Pettit and a well balanced staff. The comedy-drama is spoken of as an extremly vivid one which gives Walsh opportunity to show his varied talents.

"Responsibility" is the name chosen for a subject now under the direction of Richard Stanton. The film will be from a story by Mary Murillo which was adapted from the screen by Stanton and Edward Sedgwick. It deals with the question of oppression of people of wealth and contains a strong romantic element. Enid Markey has been engaged and will be starred in this production.

Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience"

The Fox photoplay being made by Bertram Bracken has been titled "Conscience." This stars Gladys Brockwell, with Bertram Grassby in a leading role. One of the last scenes to be made is that on which the play is named, and great secrecy tends the making of this.

"The Red Rose," the Fox Standard picture starring Theda Bara, will be finished this week, which points out that this subject has been made in record time. This story is said to require one of the most elaborate wardrobes of modern dress ever used in a Bara picture, there being court scenes depicting Russian court life, and throughout is an atmosphere of Russian high life.

In the comedy section of the Fox studios four companies are now at work. The first subject to be finished will be one now being made by Pathe Lehrman which requires the use of a number of animals which were secured from Los Angeles zoos. Lehrman is said to be able to make this comedy, which has a roar throughout, without the loss of a single person who takes part.

A. B. Bernd, formerly head of the publicity department of the Fox studios, who spent the past several months in the East, has again been transferred to the Western studio, and arrived there to take up his former work this week.

To Erect Big New Lasky Studio

Jesse L. Lasky arrived in Los Angeles to spend sixty days at the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and incidentally to look after details of the production work during the absence of Cecil B. deMille. Mr. Lasky brought to the Coast the first intimation made public of the intention of the company to materially enlarge their producing studios in Hollywood. One of the most important improvements to be made will be the erection of a glass-enclosed studio which will have a floor space of 85 x 250 feet. Recently an open air stage of this size was built, and it has since been found advisable to have this enclosed. It will be done with fireproof material, the consturction being wholly of concrete and steel.

The great accumulation of properties at the studio has made necessary additional storage room, and a mammoth property building with two floors is to be built. This will be equipped with an elevator of sufficient size that a truck loaded with furniture can be raised to the second floor. Mr. Lasky also stated that plans had been made for a number of stars to come to the west coast to work during the winter season, but definite information on this subject will not be given until a later day.

The subject now being made with Sessue Hayakawa as star, under the direction of William C. deMille, has been titled "The Call of the East." The cast has been announced to contain Tsuri Aoki, Margaret Loomis, Jack Holt and James Cruz. Following the making of this, Hayakawa will be granted a month's vacation, which he will probably spend in Bear Valley.

Vita Screening Novel, "John Burt"

The Vitagraph subject recently completed under the title of "The Red Prince" is to be released as "The Flaming Omen." This film is now on its way east, and its director, William Wolbert, is busy with the making of an adaptation from the novel "John Burt." Alfred Whitman will play the title role, Mary Anderson the feminine lead, and Philo McCollough has been engaged to appear as the heavy. This subject requires scenes in an Indian village, and Manager W. S. Smith of the studio has secured rights from the United States Government to make these scenes at the Indian village in the San Diego Fair grounds, and the company is now in the southern city taking the exteriors.

Another O. Henry story, "The Enchanted Kiss," has been filmed by Director Dave Smith at the Vitagraph, and he has now taken up the production of "The Law and Order."

William Duncan, actor-director, Carol Halloway and supporting company are now working on the second episode of "The Fighting Trail" second series. This has now been titled "Justice and the Woman," and at the studio it is referred to as a sequel to "The Fighting Trail."

Literary Lights with Triangle

A number of additions have been made to the Triangle scenario staff, which is under the editorship of Jack Cunningham. Lillian Ducey, short story writer; Grant Wallace, former war correspondent and chum of the late Richard Harding Davis; Joseph A. Roach, who has been freelancing photoplays following three years as scenario writer for Essanay; Verne Hardin Porter, a former short story writer and magazine editor; H. B. Daniels, San Diego lawyer, and George E. Jenks, who has been identified with several Coast producing companies as scenario writer, are all new members of the scenario staff.

Others connected are R. Cecil Smith and George du Bois Proctor. The latter is now giving his time to the writing of serious drama, having forsaken comedy-drama.

Julian Johnson, whose engagement by H. O. Davis, general manager and vice-president of the Triangle, was recently announced, has arrived on the Coast and taken up work of the new position created especially for him. Mr. Johnson will act as middleman between Mr. Davis and the script editor, Jack Cunningham, and orders now effective provide that all stories will be given final criticism by Mr. Johnson and no picture released until it bears his O. K. Mr. Johnson is a former Los Angeles dramatic critic, and until recently was editor of the Photoplay Magazine, where he established for himself a reputation of being one of the best critics in America.

Keystone Companies in New Studio

Plans have been changed concerning the mammoth comedy stage being built at the Triangle plant. Instead of being an open air stage, it is now the intention of the company to have it enclosed and of the same type as other stages of this studio. An extra force of workmen is engaged on this to hurry the construction, and within a week when the stage is completed the Triangle-Keystone forces will move to this plant from the studio on Sunset Boulevard, in Hollywood. The erection of the new comedy stage is the first step in the building plans outlined when sixteen acres of additional ground adjoining the Culver City studios were recently purchased.

The filming of seven subjects is reported completed during the week at the Triangle plant, and now eight new photoplays are in the making.

All scenes have been completed on the mammoth setting built at the Triangle Studios which represent a portion of the slums of New York, and built especially for "Doing Her Bit," which is from a play written by H. O. Davis that has Ruth Stonehouse as the star. The subject is under the direction of Jack Conway. The plot deals with the activities of a girl who attempts to recruit all the bums of the Bowery to the cause of the stars and stripes. Jack Gilbert plays the lead opposite Miss Stonehouse. Several of the scenes made on the Bowery setting show a fist battle between I. W. W. slackers and patriotic citizens, and several Jess Willard punches are said to make this fight of such importance that it will become one of the famous ones of the screen.

Honest Thrills in "Strange Weakling"

Director Raymond Wells and company were given real thrills this week while working at Hartville making scenes for "The Strange Weakling," which has Bill Desmond as star in the role of a desert rat. The script requires that Desmond should ride a bucking steer, but the wild Western stuff was actually done by one of the cowboys known as Curly. The infuriated animal dashed about the three-cornered arena, specially built, and finally plunged direct toward the cameraman staged in one corner of the triangle. The cameraman was speedy enough to sidestep with his instrument, and the steer went through the eight-foot fence into the crowd of spectators, players and cowboys on the outside. A number of good scenes were secured of the cowboy riding the steer before the animal gained its liberty. No one was injured, and the cowboy claims he did the stunt without pulling "leather."

Beban Under Direction of Crisp

George Beban is this year to work at the Lasky Studio, where two subjects will be made under the direction of Donald Crisp, who is now making the final scenes for the second Julian Eltinge story which is temporarily titled "The Clever Mrs. Carfax." The scenario for this was written by Marion Fairfax. The next Eltinge story will be made by William C. deMille.

George Melford has returned to the Lasky studio after an absence of three weeks and is preparing to film the Frank Spearman story, "Nan of Music Mountain." Wallace Reid has been selected as lead for this photoplay.

Before this story is in type the second Geraldine Farrar story will be completed, and the star will go to the mountains for a vacation before taking up her concert and grand opera work.

Primeval Scenes in Mena Film

Two big events occurred this week at the studio of the Mena Company, where the biblical picture "By Super Strategy" are being filmed. Christmas Day lasted almost through the week, for it required that length of time to make scenes of incidents about the birth of the Christ Child. The next day Adam, Eve and the snake, together with the proverbial apple, were shot amid fig tree surroundings, under the direction of Howard Gaye, who is entitled to the distinction of having discovered the garden of Eden.

John F. Turner, a laboratory expert, has been engaged by the Mena Company in the east and has arrived in Los Angeles to supervise toning and tinting of the subject now being made.

"The Fuel of Life" is to be a co-starring subject with Texas Guinan and Belle Bennett in the leading parts. Walter Edwards is directing this story, which deals with the emotions of a wife who becomes siren that she may win her husband from a modern vampire who has stolen his love.

"Up and Down" is the title that has been given to the story Director Lynn Reynolds is now filming with George Hernandez, Fritzi Ridgeway and Jack Curtis. Like previous Reynolds stories, this has most of the settings laid in the big out of doors and will show many of the scenic beauties of California.

Olive Thomas in Vampire Play

Settings used for "Frankly Chaste," now being directed by Jack Dillon, indicate this will be of a vampire type. There is burning incense, leopard skin rugs, downy couches and flimsy draperies. George Chesebro is playing opposite Olive Thomas in this subject.

"Eternal Circumstances" is another Triangle in production. Charles Gunn is being featured in this, and Mildred Delfino is playing the opposite lead. Ferris Hartman is in charge of the direction.

E. Mason Hopper is in charge of directing Alma Rueben and company, which includes Allen Sears as leading man, who are filming a story titled "Blue Blood." For this subject a mansion 50 x 150 feet is being built. The furniture required for the interior of this is said to be worth $30,000.

The other subject now in production at the Triangle is that featuring Roy Stewart, and is titled "Guardian of the El Dorado." Cliff Smith is in charge of the direction.

Six Plays in Finished State

The subjects now in the cutting room are "Ashes of Hope," a Walter Edwards made picture featuring Belle Bennett; the Ruth Stonehouse subject, "The Phantom Husband," directed by Ferris Hartman; the western photoplay "One Shot Ross," featuring Roy Stewart; the Kentucky moonshine photoplay "Wild Shumac," with Margery Wilson as star, which was directed by William V. Mong; E. Mason Hopper's picture, "The Firefly of Tough Luck," starring Alma Rueben, and "The Stainless Barrier," which features Dorcus Matthews and was made under the direction of Tom Heffron.

Albert Glassmire, in charge of the Triangle-Keystone comedies, this week added Rudolph Bylek to the scenario staff. He is a former director of the Great Northern Film Company abroad and a student of phrenology, and the first story he is writing will be based on phrenology.

Varied Keystone Antics

A Keystone company, being made with George Binns, Maude Wayne, Dale Fuller, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Bond, provides the players shall get a wetting in the first few scenes and continue throughout the comedy in their wet clothing. This is being made by H. Raymaker, and it is estimated the water bill of the Triangle this week will be double its usual size.

Eileen Allen, the Triangle-Keystone champion diver, has returned from New York, where she competed in the national aquatic meet and won a number of medals. At this meet she represented the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

Paddy Maguire, who made his screen debut in Vogue Comedies, and has since played with Fox and Lehrman, has been engaged by the Triangle and will be featured in subjects made by W. W. Beaudine.

Paralta's "Madam Who" Finished

The second Bessie Barriscale Paralta subject, "Madame Who," from the story by Harold McGrath, and screen version by Monte M. Katterjohn, has been completed at the Paralta studios, and negative is now on its way to New York. This picture was made under the direction of Reginald Barker. Work has already been commenced on Miss Barriscale's next release, which will be an original scenario by Katterjohn, at present titled "Within the Cup." Mr. Katterjohn will be remembered for writing a number of subjects for Miss Barriscale while affiliated with the New York Motion Picture Corporation under the Thos. H. Ince regime, and is now devoting all his time to the preparation of scripts for this star.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Countess Charming"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

JULIAN ELTINGE'S screen bow is accomplished by way of "The Countess Charming," a light and airy comedy by Gelett Burgess and Carolyn Wells, offering the star his vital role of female impersonator. The story which they provided to exploit the inimitable ability of Mr. Eltinge smacks strongly of the musical comedy type of impossible plots and yet, as on the stage, this is the identical sort of vehicle which he needs. "The Countess Charming" would never hold water, in a figurative sense, but when laughs and clever impersonation offset by an excellent production go hand in hand as the present case, one doesn't care at all if the subject matter is as leaky as a seive. Some of the subtitles provided by either the authors or Gardner Hunting who made the adaptation, rank with the best lines ever flashed on the screen—they are as funny as those in the Fairbanks subjects.

Mr. Eltinge and his feminine make-up lend themselves remarkably well to the screen. As was the case with his appearances on the stage, he gives a performance entirely free from anything that might possibly ruffle the pleasure of his audience. By the proper application of make-up, and the equally proper application of clothes, he is able to assume the mock dignities of the role of the Countess Raffelski to a comical degree that has seldom been surpassed. His support headed by Florence Vidor as the enticing heroine, and Tully Marshall as the doctor, who is "in on" the trick, works smoothly from first to last.

Donald Crisp staged the picture in a most satisfactory manner. The exteriors at the country club, the beach scenes and the handsome interiors, combine to give the comedy a most attractive setting.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Saunders (Julian Eltinge) is socially ostracized because of his opposition to the wealthy Vandergrafts (Gustave von Seyffertitz and Mabel Van Buren). Vandergraft has opposed the Red Cross movement started at the club by Betty Lovering (Florence Vidor). In revenge Saunders dons feminine raiment, and puts in his appearance as Countess Raffelski. The Countess is the object of the women's envy, and the men's admiration and as a consequence she proceeds to rule the fashionable colony. Incidentally she purloins various valuables belonging to wealthy persons, gets a full line on how he stands in the affections of Betty, and successfully evades a detective (Billy Elmer.) When the Countess at last is discovered, Saunders thinks it about time to come back, and so the mock character dies a painless death. The loot from the millionaires is converted into the Red Cross Fund, and all the losers are as much mystified as they were buncoed. And Saunders has Betty.

Edythe Chapman and Mr. and Mrs. George Kuwa, Japanese players, complete the remarkable cast.

"The Corner Grocer"

(World Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE CORNER GROCER" presenting Lew Fields in an adaptation of a play by Adolph Philipps is something of a mechanical piece of drama at this late date. It is the tale of the prodigal son, whose head is turned by a college education and who proceeds to disgrace the name of his loving old father and waste the fortune which, as a retail grocer, the latter had striven so hard for. The action is calculated to alternate between the pathetic and the humorous, but it must be confessed that both phases turn out to be more or less grotesque. Not that "The Corner Grocer" will fail to meet with a certain share of appreciation, as there are those who still relish the comedy provided by a "lowbrow" being initiated into the ways of the "high" and the pathos in the situation of the old man being betrayed by his only son.

The comedy—all of it—smacks of the vintage prevalent in the star's music hall days. As Wendel, the grocer, he shakes hands with his new footman, courtesies many times to the maid after she has courtesied to him, forces the butler to share his beer with him, and has a furious time of it going through the several courses of a fashionable dinner. And every time his son removes his hat for him he carefully replaces it. Such a comedy was perpetrated on the burlesque stage long before the film version of "The Corner Grocer" was conceived, and if it fails to register its conventionality will be the answer. The play is also very obviously constructed to precipitate young Wendel into crime, and so bring sympathy upon the shoulders of his father. It is always mechanical, and the more intelligent type of audience will immediately discern it as such. Perhaps the less sophisticated will glory in it—will smile and cry.

Mr. Fields gives an average portrayal of Wendel. Little Madge Evans as Mary in her younger years gets in some clever work, and the impression that this juvenile actress creates is more than ably carried out by Lillian Cook, who shoulders the part after the lapse of years. Pinna Nesbit appears in the supporting cast as the adventuress, a part which she has played to excess, and puts many a point over by her clever rendition of the role. Lawrence McCloskey prepared the scenario and George Cowl directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When Ralph Wendel (William Sherwood) graduates from college, neither the love of his adopted sister, Mary (Lillian Cook), nor the counsel of his father, Charles (Lew Fields), suffices to make a man of him. He falls in with adventurers (Pinna Nesbit and George Cowl), and embezzles bank funds to finance a crooked company. When he learns he has been tricked he seeks to kill Leaming, but the woman has already accomplished this herself. Ralph gets the blame, however, and is forced to flee. His father, after returning the stolen funds, is forced to push a vegetable cart about the streets to support himself and his wife (Justine Cutting). Later the adventuress makes a dying confession of the murder, and Ralph, freed of the charge, makes good and provides a home for his parents.

"Blind Man's Holiday"

(Broadway Star-General—Four Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

DIRECTOR MARTIN JUSTICE has caught the full spirit of O. Henry and has transposed to the screen in admirable fashion the human spirit of the greatest of latter-day writers of real life in "Blind Man's Holiday." In fact the director, and all of the cast have so thoroughly taken to themselves the cunning of the touch of O. Henry's pen that the one wonders whether the average audience will appreciate the hand that the Balzac of modern American held on the pulse of present day life. There is no "action" in this picture, if one means the sort of action that consists in thrilling escapes or magnified emotions. It is simply a story of life that you or your neighbor might lead, but it has the intimate appeal that makes one feel that the film is not a mere "picture," but an actual portrayal of something that might have been. There are but four who have any prominent parts in the cast, but the picture is well acted. Jean Paige, who plays the part of Nora Greenway, is one of the most refreshing players that has come to the screen for a long time. To the simple beauty of the women that men like to make wives she adds a sincerity of interpretation and naturalness that stands out in the wealth of screen artificiality.

Just one flaw—the story is supposed to have taken place in New Orleans. New Orleans people will never recognize the exteriors.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

John Lorison (Carlton King), who has buried himself in New Orleans, sees a girl, Norah Greenway (Jean Paige), night after night at a cheap restaurant and they soon become friends, but each night she refuses to allow him to come to her home but forces him to leave her at a certain corner. Finally he confesses to her that he loves a girl, really Jean, but that he is unable to ask her to be his wife because of a stain on him. Then he tells the story of how he morally became a thief, using some of the firm's money for the moment in gambling, where he won a sum of money, which, strange to say happened to be the amount stolen from his firm by a gang of burglars the same night. The circumstantial evidence is strong against him, but the jury cannot agree. Knowing that he is morally guilty he leaves the city for New Orleans. Thereupon the girl tells her story—how during an engagement as a chorus girl she sought to steal the prima donna's jewels, but escaped through mercy. Then they are married at the home of Father Rogan (John Costello), and again that evening the girl compels him to leave her at the corner for the last time. But this arouses his suspicion and he goes back to the priest to demand what sort of a girl that he married. He pours out his full story and finally the priest undertakes to show him. First, he takes the husband to the girl's home and shows him a little child (Aida Horton), whom the husband believes to be the child of Nora, and hears from the child's lips that the girl has promised that this is the last night that she is going to stay "out all night." Every impression left on his mind is that she is one of the night women of the city. But still John's love was firm and finally the priest took him to the place where he was assured he would find the girl. It was almost too much of a test, and John hesitated, only to find that the girl was working nights as well as days in a dressmaking establishment to earn more money that she might brighten the life of her little brother. She has told a "beautiful, desperate lie," says the priest.

Conquest Program No. 8

(Edison—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

HERE is a program that should delight every audience that is tired of the sex drama and the sensation, seven reels of delightful and varied entertainment for the whole family. "The Princess' Necklace" is the feature picture on Conquest Program, No. 4. It is a fairy story, and will have a particularly strong appeal to the children, but the whimsical character of the production will win equal favor with the grown-ups. Wallace McDonald and Kathleen Townsend have the principal roles, while the child actor, Susan Mitchell is pleasing. The settings of the picture are unusually beautiful, and the photography of the highest order.

It is the story of The Stranger who comes to Happyland seeking the secret of happiness, which he finally learns is in making others happy. He falls in love with the Princess, and in the end returns as the king of the neighboring kingdom of Roseland to claim her as his bride.

Viola Dana is the featured player in "The Blind Fiddler," an allegorical story in a single reel. Miss Sana is charming in the filmy garb of a fairy queen.

"The Puzzling Billboard," part of a split reel, introduces a new one of Sam Lloyd's puzzles, showing the evolution of the words "paints" and "nails" under the guidance of a group of rival billposters, who make all sorts of changes through changing a single letter. Spectators are invited to match their wits against the billposters, and even the reviewers were interested enough to "keep trying."

Tennyson famous poem, "The Brook," is beautifully illustrated through a series of splendid nature pictures, and there are still more beautiful scenes in "In Old England."

"Woodcraft for Boys" shows how many of the schools like Culber have complete courses of woodcraft for boys. Various scenes on their canoe trips and camping expeditions are included. "Shipping Live Fish" is a short educational topic of interest.

"Avatism of John Tom Little Bear"

(General—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

O. HENRY has added his touch of realism to the story of an Indian, educated in the white man's school and made unfit to return to the life among his fellows and who is at the same time outlawed by his race from the society of the white man. This picture tells the story of John Tom Little Bear (Al Jennings) who is with a "medicine show." A child, (Roberto Turnbull), fascinated by the Indian, decides to run away with the "show" and succeeds by hiding his identity. But through a ruse of the showmen (Dan Duffy and J. Abraham) the child is betrayed into the location of his home and also the fact that his aunt has declared that his father (H. E. Smith) is "A. Fiendinhumanform." The mother is wired and comes to claim the child and the Indian promptly falls in love with the abandoned wife (Mayre Brittain). Realizing that he, an Indian, can never aspire to her, he reverts, under the influence of "firewater" into the primeval spirit of his race. That night the father kidnaps the child, and the mother appeals for the aid of the "medicine band." With his savage instinct still aroused, the Indian scalps the father and rescues the child. The finale shows him returning to the educated Indian only to find that the woman he so loves knows what he has done. The picture is cleverly acted, especially the work of Roberto Turnbull as the little boy. It is a picture that will appeal to the higher class of audiences.

"What Transpires After the Wind-Up"

(Essanay-General Film—Two Reels)

GEORGE ADE is at his cleverest in the titles of "The Fable of What Happened After the Wind-Up," the latest of the series produced by Essanay. It pictures the proposal of Ferdinand (Rodney LaRock) to the sweet young thing just out of the boarding school (Hazel Coats), the activities of the parents (Julian Barton and Marion Skinner) to get them married and the commiserations of Ferdinand's clubmates. The whole plot is laid on the confirmed bachelor's view of marriage and the moral given on the screen is "Married men are not sent to war. They have suffered enough already." The film furnishes twenty-five minutes of frivolous fun.

"Sunlight's Last Raid"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture from the busy pen of Cyrus Townsend Brady follows along the lines made familiar by the gone but not forgotten Broncho Billy subjects. Riding and its incidentals such as rolling down steep embankments and struggling up again is the chief if not the only form of action indulged in by the members of the cast. It must be confessed that the plot of "Sunlight's Last Raid" virtually deserves a mere two thousand feet of film in which to be told. The incessant riding becomes rather tedious as the minutes speed on and when at last the climax is reached, a climax that contains the same sort of action as does the body of the picture, it fails to arouse very much interest or enthusiasm.

Quite obviously is "Sunlight's Last Raid" marred by padding. The story is, stripped of its padding, simplicity itself. The romantc element is the dominating one throughout the five reels but the safety of hero and heroine is assured so early in the picture that even the final raid made by the bandits and their ultimate downfall at the guns of the gallant U. S. troops falls quite short of its purpose in arousing a thrill. The opening reel contains some good fights, good riding and a thrill or two but subsequently when the story settles down it meanders along at a stilted gait.

The picture has a realistic atmosphere in the way of Western scenes and the direction of William Wolbert is average except for one or two episodes, such as that of the spying of the Mexican, which are handled mechanically. Mary Anderson rides as well as the most capable cowboy in the cast. Opposite her is Alfred Whitman (once Vosberg), while Fred Burns, V. Howard and A. Garcia fill the remaining principal roles to advantage.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Janet Warned (Mary Anderson) traveling West is to visit her brother Bill (Fred Burns) is kidnapped from the train by Captain Sunlight (V. Howard) and his band of outlaws who bear the rancher a grudge. She is later rescued by Bill and Jack Conway (Alfred Whitman), a neighbor. When next Janet meets Jack she believes him to be Captain Sunlight and eventually turns him over as captive to the sheriff's posse, who laughingly tells her the truth. Subsequently the real Captain Sunlight and his band of desperadoes become very brave and raid the ranches. A hot fight ensues, which only turns in favor of the ranchers when Janet rides to summon the troops. Janet and Jack, between them, manage to put Captain Sunlight out of the way and the romance ends as it should.

"Exile"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"EXILE," featuring Mme. Petrova, is a picture in which the art of the director and the colorful atmosphere of the scenes far transcend the story. The scene is a Portuguese colony on the African continent and the special settings and perfectly costumed supernumeraries of which there are many lent a vivid background to the action. The action, however, is slow of movement in a number of places while either author or scenario writer has neglected to make certain details of the plot stand out with the correct degree of clarity. This particularly applies to Claudie's acceptance of Hervey's dinner invitation. For some reason she comes prepared to spend the night. A dinner invitation in a Portuguese colony may mean something altogether different than that which it stands for here, but some explanatory word is needed if such is the case. Again when Claudie flees her home and mounts the back of a camel, her ultimate destination is never given.

Maurice Tourneur, as director, has accomplished his usual artistic results in the way of settings and proper atmosphere but he has been guilty of neglect in the way of detail that is more than surprising. The manner in which the dinner scene is unduly prolonged with a load of small business is quite out of keeping with the usual high standard set by this director. Mme. Petrova has a cold part as Claudie and in it she appears a little too cold. Her performance in "The Law of the Land" far surpasses her interpretation of the featured part in this release.

Wyndham Standing as heavy and Mahlon Hamilton as the too uncertain hero are the other principals. Dolf Wyllarde is author of the story and Charles Whittaker prepared it for the screen.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Perez (Wyndham Standing), Chief Justice of a Portuguese colony, plans to corner the silk trade and for this reason arrests the leading silk merchant on a false charge of murder. He writes a letter to Hervey (Mahlon Hamilton), an American engineer who is at work improving the province, inviting him in on the enterprise. To his dismay Hervey rejects the proposal and announces his intention of turning the incriminating letter over to the governor. Perez sends his wife, Claudie (Mme. Petrova), to retrieve the letter, ordering her to pay anything for it. He lays special stress on the "anything." Claudie tells Hervey her mission, but he, after learning how far she is really willing to go returns the letter, exacting no price. Perez believes himself safe and convicts the silk merchant of murder. The populace rises in anger, breaks into the court house and before help can come Perez is killed.

"The Edge of the Law"

(Butterfly-Universal, Sept. 24—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

IT is apparent before the first reel is ground off in this picture that "The Edge of the Law" has jumped the edge and got into the middle of the mess. Throughout it is old-fashioned in plot and treatment, besprinkled with wordy subtitles, chock full of clash and bang, and altogether delightful withal in its way of focusing the entire attention.

The theatre where it is shown will hum with audible reading of mispronounced words and nearly everybody will leave well-satisfied. After all, this is the bullseye the scenario-writer should aim at. What most of us desire in the way of a picture is something to make us forget our troubles.

Ruth Stonehouse is good—very good. Her impersonation of a boy is better far than is usually done. Her gestures, walk, little actions, and all, are those of an urchin. It is odd enough that when a man takes a girl's part fairly well the critics make a great fuss about it while such work as Ruth Stonehouse does in this picture passes as commonplace.

"Spider" who is really a girl, is clever as a "dip" but rebels at the life. Just then she is run over by an automobile, picked up by the rich people who own the car and taken to their home—so getting her chance. The son of the family falls in love with her of course, and the rest of the play is high life, in the main. This gives the young actress an opportunity in the other side of the dual role.

The story was written as "A Gentle Ill Wind" by Maude Pettus for All Story Magazine and Harvey Gates adapted it. Louis Chaudet is the director. The photography is vivid.

THE PLOT AND THE PLAYERS

Ralph Harding (Lloyd Whitlock) is the rich young man who falls in love with Nancy Glenn (Ruth Stonehouse). He has seen her first dressed as a boy and saved her from arrest as a pickpocket, in her part of "The Spider" but he keeps this secret deep in his heart. When she is carried into the Harding home after the accident, Ralph's mother (Lydia Yeamans Titus), is so attracted to the child that she makes Nancy one of the family. Spike, the blundering detective, is the part well taken by Harry Dunkinson. He goes from headquarters to the Harding home after numerous thefts and recognizes his old East Side friend, "The Spider," in girl's clothes. He makes the mistake of charging her with the crimes of the butler—the real thief. Pop Hogland (M. W. Testa) is a pawnbroker and fence, and Pliny Drew (J. Webster Dill) is his scholar, a graduate thief and gentleman swindler. Stella Farnsworth (Betty Schade) is the remaining featured member of the cast.

Two "Ham" Comedies

(Kalem—One reel each)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HAM and Bud, Kalem's comedy team are featured in both "The Bathtub Bandit" and "The Onion Magnate's Revenge." Both are burlesques, the former being carried to an extreme that closely borders the foolish at a point rather remotely removed from comedy. The latter, however, has been handled somewhat more capably, while the line of trick camera work introduced assists it largely in getting over and getting the laughs.

"The Bathtub Bandit" explains in its title the character of the burlesque. Everything in the burlesque lines, even to the newspaper item, telling of the number of bathtubs purloined in broad daylight under the very eyes of the police, has been introduced. Ham and Bud are employed to steal the tub and the numerous adventures which the theft leads them into comprise the greater part of the picture. The humor runs along a good many lines and the plot gets lost in the latter part of the reel. Some conventional comedy is employed by a drunk who is constantly drinking beer and getting in the way of the principals.

"The Onion Magnate's Revenge," introduces Ham and Bud as purveyors of "fresh" ice "raised on their own farm." While making their rounds they discover the great wealth of a millionaire lying in his cellar. The wealth is onions. These they steal and as a consequence become rich overnight. They eventually lose the loot but before doing so go through a number of weird experiences. Henry Murdock succeeds in getting a laugh in the one scene in which he appears in this number and all the cast are remarkably good at burlesque.

Al Santell is responsible for the direction of both comedies, which are done in a typical Ham and Bud style.

Conquest Program No. 9

(Edison—Seven Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S delightful story, "Kidnapped" is the five-reel feature on the Conquest program, No. 9, a well produced picture that will have a general appeal. Practically every one is familiar with the book which has reached hundreds of thousands of copies. The story has been carefully followed. The settings are unusually good and include numerous marine and snow scenes. The picture has the distinction of not having a woman in the cast, not even as an incidental. Its purely a story of adventure, and there is not a tiresome moment in the whole picture. It will appeal to every one and it ought to make an especially big hit with the boys. It is a particularly good feature for children's matinees at neighborhood houses.

There is a good cast, headed by Ray McKee, who plays David and makes quite an appealing young hero, while Alan Breck is well played by Robert Cain. Practically all the other characters are pirates and villains of the deepest dye, and it required good direction and careful acting to prevent these roles from being overdone.

On the same program the story of "Little Red Ridinghood" is told in shadowgraphs and this will add greatly to the interest of the children.

"Microscopic Pond Life" shows the millions on millions of living matter that inhabit every drop of water of the ponds. These are shown under a microscope that enlarges 10,000 times and shows how these animals feed and breathe. The scenic shows some interesting views in "Quaint Provincetown."

The two-reel comedy feature, "A Runaway Colt," contains a large amount of slapstick and trick comedy, but it is not up to the Conquest standard.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe Serial—Thirteenth Episode—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

OPENING with a thrill and closing with a thriller, "A Dash for Arabia," the late episode of Pathe's serial, has all the essentials of a swiftly moving, actionable serial story. There is action aplenty, and each of the four principals are called upon to execute real, dramatic action. Pearl White is placed in the forefront and kept there throughout the run of the two reels. In keeping with the preceding chapters, thrills predominate. A hint is given in this chapter as to the probable solution of the mystery. Those who have followed Miss White in the preecding chapters of this serial will pronounce this one, if not the best, the most thrilling episode in which she has been seen. The photography is up-to-the-minute. Most of the scenes are exteriors. It has been given an excellent production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Pearl (Pearl White) and Carslake (Warner Oland) are struggling in mid-air, between two roofs. Carlton (Henry Gsell) and the Spider rescue her. Carslake manages to elude the detectives and starts for Arabia. Pearl, Tom, Carlton and the Spider follow. Pearl boards the boat on which Carslake is making his escape, as it is drawing away from the dock, but the captain having been bribed by Carslake, holds her prisoner. She escapes and jumps overboard. She is followed by sailors. Carlton and the Spider go to her rescue in a motor boat. The boat stops and they find themselves in the course of an approaching ferryboat. The chapter ends with Pearl in danger of being entangled in the paddlewheel.

"The Tar Heel Warrior"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Tar Heel Warrior" is largely a character study of an old Southern gentleman contributed by Walt Whitman, an excellent type for the part. His various attempts to save his old mansion from a loan shark, the manner in which he finally stoops to dishonesty in an effort to keep it from slipping away, followed by his exoneration and ultimate success are not without a touch of real pathos. The story is from the pen of J. G. Hawks and E. Mason Hopper has given it a production that is fittingly pretentious in all but a few details.

Mr. Hawks' story contains practically only the one line of action. It is developed in a masterly way from the standpoint of continuity and there are not a few situations that are pathetic in the extreme. Mr. Whitman's screen presence is always appealing, although never dominating. It must be confessed that had an actor with a more forceful personality essayed the role better results would have been obtained in the way of suspense. Force as well as appeal is called for in the character of the old Colonel. As it stands, however, "The Tar Heel Warrior" gives entertainment as gentle and appealing as the star's performance. To that extent, at any rate, Mr. Whitman's performance dominates the picture.

J. P. Lockney, Dorcas Matthews and James McLaughlin stand out in a supporting cast that renders capable assistance to the star player.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Colonel Dabney Mills (Walt Whitman), his estate heavily mortgaged, makes a trip to New York with the idea of borrowing a sum from Adams (James McLaughlin), husband of his granddaughter (Dorcas Matthews). Adams's entire capital is tied up in a big deal, and he is unable to give the required immediate assistance. The Colonel is given ten thousand dollars by a caller to retain for Adams, while he is away. Desperate the Colonel takes a flier in the market with the money and—loses. He returns to his home determined to take his life, but Adams, successful in his deal, arrives just in time to prevent the tragedy.

William Shaw, Ann Kroman, George West, Clara Knight, Thomas S. Guise and Wilbur Higby complete the cast.

"Men of the Desert"

(Essanay-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS the title implies—a Western, and a good, strong one with lots of fast action and suspense. Jack Gardner is seen as a fearless and smiling cowboy who arrives in a western town to take an active part in a fight between cattlemen and sheepmen. His entrance into the barroom where he beards the villain of the town by assuming the duties of sheriff and locking him up in the "jail" gets the picture off to a flying start, and his subsequent fight with the cattlemen and his rapidly conducted romance with May, at first his deadly enemy, supply alternate thrills and smiles.

The picture has been given a satisfactory production so that each scene may truthfully be described as "typical." Ruth King as heroine and Carl Stockdale as the villain are the only other named members of the cast, both giving good accounts of themselves.

All in all, "Men of the Desert" is a corking Western, measuring up with the best to be had.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jack (Jack Gardner), a wandering cowboy, enters a lone town during the course of a feud between the cattlemen and sheep herders. A young boy of the latter faction has been killed, and, moved by the tears of the mother and father, Jack arraigns himself on their side. He seeks out the murderer, an employee of May's father. Later the cattlemen summon nerve and there is a general shooting match after Jack disappears. May (Ruth King) discovers him lying near a deserted shack severely wounded. At first against her will she cares for him, but when he has regained his health the romance is ripe. Mason (Carl Stockdale) learns of Jack's hiding place, and with his men comes after him. May, however, rides for the sheepmen and Jack is rescued.

"Broadway Arizona"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"BROADWAY ARIZONA," featuring Olive Thomas, is an excellent comedy-drama. It takes, or rather the hero takes, a musical comedy star and dumps her into the middle of desolate Arizona. This situation alone would make the picture stand out as containing something original. For the very thought of a musical comedy star in Arizona at a point remotely removed from the white lights, even the common, ordinary lights of a village town, suggests manifold possibilities. These have been fully developed by Lynn Reynolds who served both as author and director and who, it may be recalled, has never failed in either one of these capacities.

Miss Thomas receives unusual support in the person of George Hernandez, who is simply great in the comedy role of Uncle Isaacs, the boss rancher. Those who are aware of the lines of Mr. Hernandez's figure need not be told that in cowboy's regalia with leathern chaps protruding a foot on either side of his ridiculously bowed legs, he cuts an uproarious figure. His part helps him out also. He registers every comedy point with a full sense of its value. Mr. Reynolds has given him a number of lines from "A Fool There Was" to misquote in the subtitles with still more humorous effect.

George Chesebro makes a likable hero and the remaining members of the cast perform well. The locations are fine and the photography of the best.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When John Keyes (George Chesebro), rancher, takes a fancy to Fritzi Carlyle (Olive Thomas), musical comedy favorite, her press agent (Dana Ong) sees a chance to put over a story, and so Fritzi accepts the westerner's proposal of marriage, only to deny it the next day by way of the public prints. Keyes returns to Arizona a very disheartened man and Fritzi goes on playing in the show until she breaks down. Keyes reads of it and comes east again, this time to forcibly carry his favorite off to the west. The change of climate works wonders with her and she works wonders with Keyes, mistreating him from first to last. Detectives are placed on her trail by the manager of the show and they evidently track her down and start to arrest Keyes on a charge of kidnapping, but of course Fritzi has loved Keyes all along and she sends the detectives away, saying the kidnapping was another publicity story.

Jack Curtis, Leola Mae and Robert Dunbar complete the cast.

"Three Billion in Three Weeks"

(Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picture, the title of which may be changed before its release, was produced with the patriotic purpose of boosting the second issue of the Liberty Loan shortly to be issued. It contains no story, merely a series of episodes. Some of these picture important events of American history such as the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the weaving of the first American flag by Betsy Ross and the westward progress of the nation.

What is perhaps the greatest aggregation of actors and actresses ever brought together appears in the various episodes of the picture. David Warfield is seen for an instant as John Hancock, Pauline Frederick appears as France, Beverly Sitgreaves is Betsy Ross, while various other stars of renown appear rendering patriotic service by selling liberty bonds. There are glimpses of President Wilson, Secretary McAdoo, Thomas A. Edison and General Pershing and a few views of parades and soldiers and sailors in camp are scattered in.

It is a remarkable film and should arouse a good deal of enthusiasm fo rthe second bond issue as well as providing a source of entertainment owing to the number of stars who appear for brief moments on the screen. This list includes Raymond Hitchcock, Marguerite Clark, Clifton Crawford, Leon Errol, Lillian Walker, Barney Bernard, Edmund Breese, Mary Pickford, William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Julian Eltinge, Will Rogers, Laurette Taylor, Elsie Janis, John E. Hazard, Ethel Barrymore, John Drew, Lillian Russell, De Wolf Hopper, Wilton Lackaye, Mabel Taliaferro, Billie Burke, Ann Wheaton, Hal Forde and Nance O'Neil.

"A Crooked Romance"

(Pathe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"A CROOKED ROMANCE," directed by William Parke from a scenario by Tom Cushing and featuring Gladys Hulette, appears to be too mechanical to claim undivided interest over its entire length. Miss Hulette is given a role, in Mary Flynn, the girl who believes it perfectly good and proper to open people's safes and depart with the valuables, that is too unreal to carry more than a mere surface appeal. That episode of the picture showing Mary in the company of the old watchman and the baby which she has found is quaint in its humor and reaches nearer the heart than any other. In fact the others display so much unreality that one can hardly enjoy the performance of the popular little lead.

The picture serves to introduce Paul Clerget, the pantomimist who made such a hit on the New York stage in "Pierrot the Prodigal." Although given only a small part Clerget makes an excellent impression and doubtless he will be extensively heard from in the future. J. H. Gilmour and William Parke, Jr., complete the quartette of principals.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Flynn (Gladys Hulette), taught by her foster father (Paul Clerget) in the ways of thievery is apprehended while doing a job by Gifford Cannon (William Parke, Jr.). She makes an escape but the old man is caught. Mary wanders over the countryside and encounters Gifford again when he tells her it is wrong to steal. Thereafter she decides to go the "straight and narrow." She finds a baby, and having always wanted one, resolves to keep it. When it is finally traced to her, she finds a real home with its parents and once more renews acquaintance with Cannon.

"The Gulf Between"

(Technicolor—Eight Parts)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE GULF BETWEEN" is unquestionably the finest natural color picture ever produced. The process over which C. A. Willat has labored so long results in the absence of all "fringe," absence of eye strain and produces colors that are really natural. The green is natural, so is the blue, the yellow, the pink, the red—every color. The invitation audience at Aeolian Hall where the picture received its first showing was moved time and again to burst into applause of the sort that lasted long. The final shot, showing the sun setting over the water is beautiful—mindful of a Japanese painting.

Naturally Mr. Willat wanted to show off his natural colors to the greatest possible extent in his first picture. It is a perfectly just pride that he takes in a work so pretentious and really—epoch creating. But if he releases the subject for the exhibitor, which he probably will do, it is to be hoped that he eliminates some of the footage in the last two reels. Here the story is very obviously drawn out. This might be excused providing some startling color effects were displayed, but the nation repeats itself through the same scenes and a cutting would benefit the story and consequently make the color stuff more enjoyable. The subtitles should be rewritten as well.

But these faults can readily be erased and "The Gulf Between" will then not only offer a novelty but an entertaining story as well. Anthony P. Kelly did not draw upon very original material for his plot and yet he has filled it full of clean, wholesome comedy and pathos that brings tears. It is laid on and around the water and pleasant homely scenes furnish a delightful background.

Wray Physioc has done good work as director. The camera work—the all important angle of production in this case—is all O. K. with the exception that in quite a number of the scenes it lacks definition. There is a perceptible haze, ever so slight, but still perceptible, which however, comes far from spoiling the picture. Grace Darmond is a charming heroine. Certainly natural color photography will come as a great boon to actresses as pretty as she. Niles Welch is a pleasing juvenile and Herbert Fortier a stalwart old sea captain.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Violet Axzell carries Miss Darmond's part in childhood. The little girl, neglected by her parents and nurse, strays away from home and falls asleep on a sailing vessel about to put out to sea. She is not discovered until the ship is far from shore. The Captain (Herbert Fortier) and the other members of the crew care for her and her presence is responsible for the reform of the entire crew. Her parents, finding part of her doll in the water believe her dead. They adopt a boy. Years later the girl (Grace Darmond) is left in care of the captain's sister and she shortly meets the boy (Niles Welch). Romance plays its part and although the boy's foster parents object, believing the girl to be of common birth, they are married. The captain, by producing the other half of the doll clears matters up.

Charles Brandt, George De Carleton, Joseph Dailey, Louis Mountjoy, Virginia Lee and Mrs. Caroline Harris complete the cast.

"A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands"

(Educational Films Corp. of America—Two Reels)

BY GEORGE F. WORTS

THE Educational Films Corporation must be given a full allowance of credit for the marked upward trend that "educationals" and "scenics" have taken since they were first introduced to the public. What this type of picture has attained was shown a few weeks ago when the Rialto theatre, New York, gave a certain production of the Educational Film Company precedence over the dramatic feature on the bill, electric lights in the lobby indicating this preference.

"A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands" is remarkable for two reasons. One is the splendid quality of the printing; the other is the originality manifested by the man who made the pictures. Speed is the keynote. You see enough; not too much of waterfalls, mountain railways and native types. Every so often a cartoon, caricaturing the scenes, is inserted. The Harrison Brothers, who supplied the cartoons, have apparently hatched a new idea.

Night scenes of Kilauea, the world's most persistently active volcano, showed lava bubbling and boiling. Snappy scenes of surf riding on the waves at Waikiki, with half naked natives shooting shoreward, heighten the interest. The picture never drags an instant. It goes over with a punch.

At the same showing, another Educational picture, "Glacier National Park," photographed by Bruce, was projected. The same depth of printing present in the Hawaiian reels characterized it. Glaciers are always interesting, and Bruce's treatment of the scenes made them unusually good.

The Indian Motocycle

(E. I. S. Motion Picture Corp.)

A PRIVATE showing was given the educational-industrial film recently completed by the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation for the Hendee Manufacturing Company, of Springfield, Mass., last Wednesday afternoon. The picture was built to be used as a part of the advertising drive being made by the Hendee people to reach the dealers and sub-dealers of the Indian motocycle all over the country, and shows the making of the motocycle, illustrating through attractively done outdoor scenes the various uses of the motocycle, and permits the dealers to meet on the screen the various executives of the Hendee organization. The second use of the picture will be to use the 1-reel of factory as a theatre release.

Dixon Boardman, the president of the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, directed the picture, using as the principal character C. B. Franklin in the character of Jim Osborne, the prospective dealer, and June Daye as Mrs. Osborne. Miss Daye was the only professional in the cast, and was her usual natural, attractive self. Bradford Boardman directed most of the factory work, and the results show his thorough familiarity with machinery and how it can be reproduced in the motion picture. Camilla Donworth, who negotiated the sale of the picture to the Hendee people, gave the showing, and several of her co-members in the League of Advertising Women were there, as well as a number of the men who belong to the New York Advertising Club.

LATE NEWS

Mary Gray Peck Says Censorship by Law Is Impossible

Mary Gray Peck, who last year made many addresses in different parts of the country on motion pictures, under the auspicies of the National Committee for Better Films, a department of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, was in New York City a few days ago making plans for addresses of a similar character this year.

Miss Peck is a member of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and was a member of its Motion Picture Committee. Being formerly a member of the faculty of the University of Minnesota, and a speaker of marked ability, her addresses have proved valuable, indeed.

Miss Peck has given the subject of motion pictures and their value to the people a most intensive study. She believes that the motion picture has a great future, for it is the one form of art recreation which is available for rich and poor alike. She thinks that legalized censorship is an impossible means of bettering pictures, and has frequently opposed in her addresses this proposition. The more satisfactory plan she believes is that of co-operating with the exhibitor in securing exhibition of the finer types of pictures.

Selznick Plans Short Trips on the Road

Lewis J. Selznick, who recently began a long tour of exchanges and visits to exhibitors throughout the country, was called unexpectedly back to New York last week. The sudden curtailment of the tour was made necessary, it was announced by Mr. Selznick, on account of various important details which arose in connection with the Select Pictures Corporation, of which he is president, calling for his personal attention.

The continuance of his visits, which he intends to make at various times and in shorter lengths than was at first planned, is postponed only for a short time, it is announced. Very shortly Mr. Selznick will swing onto another leg of his visits, probably making Chicago and other cities of the Middle West. If his present plans are carried out, Mr. Selznick will be away about half his time during the next twelve months.

Wally Van to Make Comedy Production

William C. Hartmann, of 218 West 42nd Street, has secured exclusive control of Wally Van productions. Wally Van, formerly one of the Vitagraph stars and directors has entered the production field. His policy will be to make two-reel high-grade refined dramatic comedies, starring himself in these productions.

Mr. Hartmann states that the first comedy is ready for screening. He says that it is replete with comical situations.

"Doug" Fairbanks Under Two-Director System

Allan Dwan, Former Director General of Triangle, and John Emerson to Alternate, Keeping Star at Work Constantly

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS is to work under the two-director system, eliminating waste that results from holding up filming while assembling, titling, and the like. The additional director engaged is Allan Dwan, former director general for Triangle. Mr. Dwan and John Emerson, Fairbanks' director in recent pictures, will alternate.

Both Mr. Dwan and Mr. Emerson will have under their jurisdiction a complete producing unit. Under the new management the work of staging, cutting, assembling and titling will continue without the usual lay-off between pictures. While one production is being staged the last one is being cut, assembled and titled, and the next one is receiving its initial preparation, thus keeping the star active continuously to satisfy the demand for Fairbanks-Artcraft pictures.

The negotiations between Mr. Dwan and Mr. Fairbanks were conducted by Arthur Butler Graham for Mr. Dwan, and Dennis F. O'Brien, who represents Mr. Fairbanks in legal matters.

Allan Dwan, a graduate of Notre Dame College, Indiana, has had an enviable career in motion picture directing. His first activities were devoted to scenario writing for Essanay and other companies. He was for three years director with the American Company and also staged a number of Famous Players successes, including "Wildflower," Marguerite Clark's first film; "David Harum," and "A Girl of Yesterday." He then went to Triangle, where he directed many highly successful screen plays and first became connected with Douglas Fairbanks. One of his most notable productions was "Panthea" for Selznick, with Norma Talmadge in the title role.

At college Mr. Dwan was a holder of wrestling championships, and many of the athletic "stunts" which have made Douglas Fairbanks' pictures so strikingly original were the result of consultations and try-outs by the two athletes, Fairbanks and Dwan.

Mr. Dwan will direct one picture every ten weeks.

Fun-Art Film Begins Work in New Rochelle

To Feature the Dooleys, Ray and Gordon, in Contortionist Comedies That Are Expected to Duplicate Their Stage Success

FUN-ART FILMS, INC., has started actual work on its first picture at the Thanhouser Studios in New Rochelle. It is the intention to release two two-reel comedies a month with the vaudeville team of Ray and Gordon Dooley featured in the principal comedy roles.

Gordon Dooley, known for his falls, slips and slides with utter disregard of suffering limbs or endangered neck, rarely failed to convulse his audience with his sure fire rapid style of entertainment. If the Dooleys can get one-tenth of the laughs on the screen that they can deliver over the footlights, critics say their future in this new field is assured.

Vincent Bryan and Johnny Hines will collaborate as producers and directors. Mr. Bryan is a writer of popular songs, one of them is "Down Where the Wortsburger Flows."

Johnny Hines, for two years and a half, was a comedian in and co-author of many of the features released by the World Film Corporation. Mr. Hines wrote with Maurice Tourneur, and played in "The Cub," "Alias Jimmy Valentine," and "Butterfly on the Wheel." The last picture in which he was featured was the five-reel comedy "Tillie Wakes Up."

Edward Horn, who will do the camera work, was five years with Pathe, a year and a half with the Biograph, two years with the World Film and George Kleine.

Among those who will be seen in the cast in addition to Ray and Gordon Dooley, will be Mr. Hines, who will play the opposite comedy parts to Gordon Dooley, and Edward Kimball, the father of Clara Kimball Young, who owns Fun-Art Films, Inc.

Ethel Barrymore Begins New Metro Feature

It was announced by Metro Pictures Corporation last week that Ethel Barrymore will begin work at once on the production of a multiple-reel photodrama based on the story by Sidney McCall's, called "Red Horse Hill," the exclusive motion picture rights of which have been adapted the novel for Miss Barrymore's adopted the novel for Miss Barrymore's use, and Frank Reicher, recently a Lasky director, and who has been especially engaged by Metro to direct Miss Barrymore, will have charge of the direction of the production. He will be assisted by J. J. Dunne. The picture will be made under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro Studio. It is announced that a splendid cast has been engaged to support Miss Barrymore in this production. Frank Mills will play the part opposite the star, that of Dwight Alden. J. W. Johnston and Margaret McQuade also have important roles.

Two Odd Dual Roles in Current Metro Plays

Emily Stevens in "A Sleeping Memory" Takes Many Characterizations and Francis X. Bushman Plays Two, the Guilty and Innocent

TWO strange dual roles are in forthcoming Metro plays. In "The Voice of Conscience" Francis X. Bushman has the two parts that really are one, and in "A Sleeping Memory" Emily Stevens has not two but several characterizations.

In the Stevens play, adapted from the story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, the actress takes the part of Eleanore Marston, daughter of a banker who dies disgraced. When she is in a department store as a salesgirl a man interested in scientific research promises her every luxury if she will consent to having an operation performed on her brain that will erase all memory of her present existence. She accepts, and is given a new identity. She becomes an entirely new person, Rose Harding.

Soon the experimenter is horrified to discover that in destroying her memory, he has also destroyed her soul. From this point on in "A Sleeping Memory" the star is called upon to play women of different phases in the world's history, each a totally different type.

In "The Voice of Conscience," the Bushman play, William Potter and James Huston are both imprisoned, the former innocently, the latter to pay the penalty of a crime he actually committed. Huston's mother is dying, and as his term is to be a long one, while Potter will soon have his freedom, Huston prevails upon his prisonmate to take his place at home, which he can do the more readily as the old mother is blind.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Metro stars, have gone to Central Georgia to begin production. Their photoplay has been written by a Southerner, Finis Fox, author of Mabel Taliaferro's Metro play, "The Jury of Fate." Mr. Fox has accompanied the stars on their trip to the Southland, to help choose the locations of this part of the picture.

Edwin Carewe is directing "The Voice of Conscience," which will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro Studio. Mr. Fox will be Mr. Carewe's co-director in production. June Mathis, who has many scenarios to her credit, has adapted the story for the screen.

Replica of New York Court in Raver Film

The interior settings of "The Public Defender," the Raver picture just released, wer specially built under the direction of an expert.

The court-room setting, wherein the trial of the accused man, around whom the story revolves, takes place, is a replica of the Supreme Court, Franklin and Centre street, New York City. In order to insure complete accuracy and color this big court-room setting was built from the architect's plans of the original.

The legal procedure incidental to the trial scene, highly intricate as to its nature but minutely correct in form and substance, was personally supervised by Meyer C. Goldman, the author of the book on which the story of the production is based. Mr. Goldman is a practising attorney and a leading figure of the New York bar.

The "Bridge of Sighs," an elevated passageway connecting the Tombs Prison with the Criminal Courts, so-called because every accused person must pass through its narrow corridor, to and fro from the prnson to the court room, during the course of his trial, forms an interesting background for certain of the action of "The Public Defender." The "Bridge of Sighs" is listed in the guide books of New York as one of the genuine points of interest every visitor to the great metropolis should not fail to see.

"Anything Once," Franklyn Farnum's First Bluebird

"Anything Once," the Bluebird in which Franklyn Farnum will make his first bow as a lone star, on October 8, was written with either one of two players in mind—Douglas Fairbanks or Mr. Farnum. In the negotiations that followed, Bluebird secured the story from its authors, Isola Forrester and Mann Page.

Miss Forrester has established a reputation as an author of children's stories through eleven books that comprise the Polly Page and Green Acre Girls series. Mr. Page and Miss Forrester present "Anything Once" as their second joint scenario, the same authors having written "The Quitter," a Lionel Barrymore Metro.

Bluebird saved "Anything Once" to present Mr. Farnum alone, at the end of his run of comedy-dramas in which Brownie Vernon has shared the stellar honors. Claire Du Brey replaced Miss Vernon as leading lady and will play a prominent role in "The Winged Mystery," the second Bluebird in the Franklyn Farnum set. Joseph De Grasse who has previously directed Dorothy Phillips has taken the responsibility for the Farnum pictures with his brother, Sam De Grasse, playing in the supporting organization.

"Day of Big Neighborhood House Coming"—Nathan Ascher

Nathan Ascher, of the firm of Ascher Brothers, owners of a chain of the finest motion picture houses in Chicago, arrived home from an extensive business and observation trip to New York last week. One seldom sees or hears any one of the Ascher Brothers, hence the following little interview is worth while:

"The day of the neighborhood house, the big, modern one, I mean, is coming," said Mr. Ascher. "While in New York," he continued, "I got 'Intolerance' right from Mr. Griffith's personal representative. Contracts have been closed with William Fox for his big features, the first of which will be 'Jack and the Beanstalk.'"

OSTERVILLE, MASS., Sept. 16, 1917.
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—You will find enclosed check for $4.58 for pennies collected at my theatre the past week. I collected on Saturday, Sept. 8, $1.05; Tuesday, $1.26; Thursday, $1.11, and last night, $1.16, making a total of $4.58.

I am situated in a small village of 500 inhabitants, with a theatre of 286 seating capacity. Being in such a small town, of course, my contributions will naturally be small, but whatever my patrons have given so far they have given cheerfully.

Hoping to be able to send you a larger check next week and wishing you continued success, I am

Yours very truly,
N. E. WILLIAMS.

The Des Moines branch office of Pathe is running the Official British War Picture "The Tanks at the Battle of the Ancre" for the benefit of the "Smokes for Soldiers" fund. The pictures are being shown at the Royal theatre under the auspices of the Register and Tribune. All of the big men of the city and state are interested in the presentation of the pictures, and L. A. Sheridan, Pathe's manager in Des Moines, is handling the film end of the proposition, and the pictures are getting front page publicity every day.

Other encouragement from producers comes in the shape of the house organ editorials. The campaign is being boomed by Selig's "Paste Pot and Shears," while Paramount Progress had the following to say in an editorial:

HELP "OUR BOYS IN FRANCE"

The one great privation which the American soldier in Europe is called on to face is the lack of the kind of tobacco to which he is accustomed. It is next to impossible to buy cigarettes in France such as Americans usually smoke.

For this reason, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," has inaugurated a campaign whereby exhibitors all over the country can do their bit, and at the same time mark themselves as patriotic and wide-awake citizens.

The NEWS has caused to have printed placards which are furnished to the exhibitor, and which are to be placed over a box or any other receptacle, and which calls upon passers-by to drop coins into the container to buy smokes for the American soldiers abroad.

We can think of no more laudable work than this, at the time, and we call upon all American exhibitors to help in this movement.

Detailed workings of this plan may be obtained from the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Petrova's Distributing Plans Completed

First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., Gets Contract to Handle Russian Star's Features on Independent Policy

THROUGH a new arrangement, made last week between Superpictures Distributing Corporation and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., the latter organization will distribute the forthcoming Petrova pictures. The announcement is significant mainly through the fact that Madame Petrova is the first woman star whose productions have been accepted for release by the Exhibitors' Circuit, and her features will be the first series of releases to be distributed through their exchanges.

It is announced that the productions in which Madame Petrova appears are to be sold independently of all other features under an exclusive Petrova contract, along the same lines as the Chaplin pictures, which will also be distributed by the exhibitors. It is claimed that the new arrangement will permit the Petrova films to be shown in more first-run theatres in the U. S. and Canada than have previously been available for features.

The Exhibitors-Petrova contract, which is hailed as a new step in the relations between exhibitor and producer, was closed on behalf of the Exhibitors by S. L. Rothapfel and H. O. Schwalbe and on behalf of Superpictures by its president, Frederick L. Collins.

Concerning the new contract, Mr. Collins said:

"The relation between Madame Petrova and the exhibitors which has been established by the contract which has been executed is extremely gratifying to me not only because I believe that the arrangement will be extremely profitable both to the exhibitors and to the producer, but because it is a direct result of our previously announced policy of 'Big Pictures for Big Exhibitors.'

"On August 12, 1917, we announced that the first pictures would be Madame Petrova in a series of special productions produced by the Petrova Picture Company, the distribution of which would be in the hands of Superpictures Distributing Corporation. Since that announcement we have received offers for these pictures on financial terms that were as flattering to Madame Petrova as they would have been tempting to us had it not been for our announced policy of dealing, wherever possible, with the exhibitors direct."

Madame Petrova has also expressed herself as highly pleased with the new policy of distributing her features. Last week she made the following announcement, supplemented by an expression of thanks to all concerned in bringing about the system: "Already the new relationship has given me a close touch with the need of the exhibitors that I have not had before. It has been a pleasure to have the frequent advice of such men as Mr. Rothapfel, the president of the Circuit, who has followed my production plans from the first and who is already arranging a musical setting that will add greatly to its presentation. I feel that we cannot go very far astray so far as the exhibitors are concerned, when the exhibitors themselves are consulted in regard to every particular: the story, the scenario, the title and the director."

Exhibitors' Circuit Likes Petrova Deal

That the directors and members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit are exceptionally well pleased with the deal made with the Petrova Picture Company, whereby the Circuit will distribute all features made by Mme. Petrova, was indicated in the announcement made by Manager J. D. Williams, of the Circuit.

Mr. Williams said: "Our circuit was selected by the Superpictures Producing Company after thorough investigation of all distributing conditions and we naturally are pleased at the confidence of Mr. Collins, who acted for them. We are in the position to give the producer the one thing essential to his success, namely, a first run of his pictures in a high class theatre in practically every large city in the United States and Canada. Each member of our Circuit will own and control these Petrova productions in his own territory, and it is only natural for him to work harder to obtain a larger return than could be expected of a paid manager. We believe we will secure the right kind of publicity by our alliance with Superpictures Distributing Corporation. Our members will themselves spend at least $50,000 the first week in advertising any picture throughout the United States and Canada."

Patch Is Disgusted

me to do but to turn to the legitimate stage in order to be sure of obtaining productions of such standards as are worthy of the consideration and continued confidence of my clientele.

"I haven't the time, nor has any producer, to make enough pictures of a quality warranting $2 admission prices to keep the Pitt theatre open all the year. If I succeed in making one such picture each year I shall be content. Furthermore, I have neither the time nor the inclination to attempt a reformation of the screen.

"Under these conditions, therefore, there is nothing left me but to fall back on the legitimate medium of dramatic entertainment, the quality of which, so far as my own theatre is concerned, I personally can control.

"I hope the pictures will 'come back.' I think it possible that they may in a few years, when the patience of the public finally becomes exhausted and it starts a wholesale housecleaning. But I cannot afford to wait until that time arrives."

Towne Moves to New Quarters

Among Chicago Independents

Art Dramas Service

The Art Dramas Service of Chicago was organized in December, 1916. Besides being the medium of a regular program release they have figured in the State rights field in the Central West. Ralph O. Proctor is president and manager of the organization, with offices on the sixth floor of the College Building, 207 South Wabash avenue. He was formerly with Metro and the General Film Company in various executive capacities for many years.

Their first dip into the State rights field was when they purchased "The Witching Hour" and the "Conquest of Canaan" for Illinois and Indiana last year. They recently were given the Billy West-King Bee comedies in their territory. Mr. Proctor, in speaking of the future of the State rights method of handling films, said: "It is the biggest thing in the field today. It is, however, just beginning to strike its stride and should pass every other conceived means of film exploitation within a few years. However, it needs to be brought to a more basic point of working to insure permanance. Distribution and territorial facilities must be worked out to the finest degree. I believe in making population the basis of territory and price and am against any of the so-called easy money in the field—the one-production man. There should be just as much of an insurance of steady production in the State rights field as in programs."

The Edmund Allen Film Corporation

The Edmund M. Allen Film Corporation, although but a few weeks in the State rights field in Chicago, has the sort of sponsoring that promises to bring the company to the fore as one of the most active State rights exploiters in the Middle West before many months. Brains, money and experience are behind it. Their offices are at 28 South La Salle street.

Edmund M. Allen, former Warden of Joliet Prison, is the president of the company. Associated with Mr. Allen are: Harry Ridings, manager of the Grand Opera House, Chicago; Joseph M. Harris, well known to theatre men all over the country, and Fred C. Aiken, formerly of the General Film Company.

Besides the State rights activities planned they are also making ready to start construction on a moderate mammoth motion picture theatre to be built right in the heart of Chicago's Loop district.

The Celebrated Players Film Company

As State rights buyers the Celebrated Players Film Company is one well-known in the Central West. Its headquarters are in the College Building, 207 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, and Joseph Friedman has been in charge since 1915. The company was organized in 1914 with Felix Feist as its first manager.

Christie comedies and the Mutt and Jeff cartoons are handled exclusively by them throughout Illinois and Indiana. "The Whirl of Life" and "The Melting Pot" are recent features for which they own the territorial rights in Illinois, Indiana and Southern Wisconsin. The B. S. Moss productions of "Power of Evil" and "In the Hands of the Law" together with a varied list of comedy subjects are controlled by the Celebrated Players Company in the Central West.

The Reliable Feature Film Company

The Reliable Feature Film Company, with offices on the eighth floor of the Schiller Building, 64 West Randolph street, Chicago, is one of the oldest State rights buyers in that territory. It is entirely a family affair as an organization, being made up of father and three sons. M. Schwartz, the father, is president. The others of the firm are I. Maynard Schwartz, William M. Schwartz and Jack Schwartz.

For the last three years they have grown with the State rights market. The first picture handled on this basis by them was "The Christian," which was a big success. Then came "The World of Today," "Defense or Tribute?" and "The Woman and the Beast." The controlling rights for all these belong to them throughout Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana. The Ella Wheeler Wilcox productions are also controlled by them throughout that territory.

Chicago Examiner Co-operating with the Industry

Kittie Kelly is in New York on her annual trip for the Chicago Examiner. She will visit the main offices of the film companies, and will also spend a day at each of the studios, and will review some of the new pictures showing in New York City.

Kitty Kelly will wire her articles to the Chicago Examiner for publication. She will also secure data for special articles to be run during the fall and winter season. This is another evidence of the Chicago Examiner's co-operative work with the motion picture industry.

To Stop Serving Real Food in Scenes Filmed

The theatrical and motion picture industries have been asked to join in the food conservation movement by refraining from using real food in their productions during the period of the war.

The Food Administration declares that the amount of food unprofitably used in theatrical performances throughout the country amounts to a much larger bulk than is ordinarily realized. It is the desire of the administration to stop, not merely the actual waste of this food material, but to prevent the unconscious bad effect on audiences at this time when every effort is being made to drive home the need of the elimination of every possible food waste as a means of helping to win the war.

Central Is Directed by Veteran Film Men

The Central Film Company, of Chicago, today one of the strongest links in the chain of the newly organized First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was organized in 1914 by Jones, Linick and Schaefer, together with Max Ascher, all four of them veterans in the motion picture industry of Chicago. Jones, Linick and Schaefer control a score or more houses there and Max Ascher is the senior member of the firm of Ascher Brothers, who have fifteen theatres under their direct control throughout Chicago. Aaron Jones, Adolph Linick, Peter J. Schaefer and Max Ascher make up the directors of the Central Film Company.

It was organized purely as a State rights proposition and in this field it has been one of the biggest factors in the country. Some of the greatest of screen productions during the past three years have been turned over to them for disposition, throughout their territory which takes in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Northern Kentucky.

Among the first productions with which they achieved their start in the state rights field was "Les Miserables," "The Spoilers," "The Drug Terror," "The Little Girl Next Door," "Where Are My Children?" and others. Some of their most recent big productions handled have been "The Submarine Eye," "The Barrier," "The Crisis," "The Garden of Allah," "Redemption," "Twenty Thousand Leagues," "Parentage" and "On Trial."

H. A. Spanuth was for two years manager of the Central Film Company. He was succeeded by F. M. Brockell and Harry Weiss as associate managers. Mr. Brockell has recently gone over with the Goldwyn forces and Mr. Weiss is now the manager. The Lewis J. Selznick Company is affiliated with the Central Film Company.

The offices of the Central Film Company up until a few months ago were maintained in the Orpheum Theatre Building, at 110 South State street, Chicago. They were recently moved to a handsome suite on the fourth floor of the Rialto Theatre Building, at 336 South State street.

Pathe Club Out in Force for Day's Outing

One hundred and five strong the Pathe Club went by a specially chartered steamer on Sunday, September 9, to Glenwood Landing, Long Island, for an all-day outing. Athletic contests for handsome prizes offered amusement to every one. The many persons with sore muscles next day were proof not only of the numerous entrants in these contests, but also of the way in which they participated.

Dinner was served in Karatsonyi's Hotel. Afterwards some still able to walk after the violent exercises of the morning took part in a ball game, the distinguishing feature of which was a "Skinny Shaner" score.

Members of the club from the Twenty-third street exchange, the studio in Jersey City, and the factory at Bound Brook were present in force. Many young women employed in the clerical and stenographic departments of the Pathe Exchange were invited along as guests of the club and accepted the invitation to a girl. Among the associate members of the club who were present were Tom Wiley of the Novelty Slide Co., Fred Ruttenberg of the Wyanoke and Harold Davis of the Chronicle Press.

President of the club, J. A. Berst, and Mrs. Berst were present and took a hearty interest in all the amusements.

P. A. Parsons was chairman of the committee on arrangements; J. W. Kyle the secretary of the club; L. E. Franconi and M. W. Davidson, all appointed by President Berst for special duty, worked hard to make the outing a success.

Volunteer Talent Makes Western Film for Red Cross

MEMBERS of the Los Angeles Athletic Club filmed a three-thousand-foot subject entitled "Roaring Camp," a burlesque on the days of '49, at and near a mountain resort forty miles north of Los Angeles on September 15 and 16.

Plans have already been made for the showing of this subject at many of the larger clubs in the country to raise funds for the Red Cross Association, the clubs already having arranged for showing including Olympic and Bohemian at San Francisco, Illinois at Chicago, New York Athletic, Friars and Lambs Clubs at New York and many others.

The direction of the burlesque was in charge of Douglas Gerrard, who had perhaps the greatest cast ever assembled for any picture. The list of players include many of the best known people of the west coast film colony as well as others who have national and international reputations. Jack McKenzie of Universal City and Hal Rossen of the Lasky studio were cameramen, and Justin H. McClosky and Rex Hodge served as assistants to Gerrard.

In the cast will be found Mack Sennett, Charles Chaplin, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Eric Campbell, Frank E. Garbutt, Donald Crisp, Wm. D. Taylor, E. Frank Baum, Marshall Neilan, Jack Pickford, Charles Van Loan, Henry McRae, Leach Cross, Raymond West, Reginald Barker, District Attorney Thos. Woolwine, B. A. Rolfe, Charles Gerrard, Mayor Woodman and Chief of Police Butler of Los Angeles. All properties and costumes necessary for the wild west burlesque special were loaned the Athletic Club by the Universal Film Company, arrangements for this having been completed with President Carl Laemmle prior to his departure for the East.

Chicago Censor Loses Round with Vitagraph

What is predicted in Chicago film circles as the beginning of the end of all motion picture censorship in the Windy City was recorded last week when Major Funkhouser, the censor, and city authorities placed themselves in contempt of court by refusing to honor a writ of mandamus, issued by Judge Crowe, ordering them to issue a permit that would allow the Greater Vitagraph production of "Within the Law" to be shown in its entirety and without any deletions as demanded by the censor. As a result of this rebellion on the part of Major "Funkie" and city officials Vitagraph's good intentions in desiring to exhibit the picture were upheld by Judge Crowe, who, from the bench, censured the Corporation Commission and Major Funkhouser for their arbitrary course in refusing to issue the permit in the face of the court order. Attorneys representing the censor took an appeal from Judge Crowe's decision ordering that the permit for "Within the Law" be issued. Vitagraph's attorneys immediately countered and asked for an injunction restraining the city authorities from interfering with any showing of the picture in Chicago.

It is likely, now that the die is cast, film interests will combine to bring Chicago censorship to the end of the string.

of Sydney, Australia, is at the Hotel Knickerbocker and WILL BE INTERESTED TO HEAR FROM ANYONE DESIRING TERRITORIAL RIGHTS FOR THE DARCY FIGHT PICTURES, in all four different subjects:

DARCY vs. SMITH —11 Rounds
DARCY vs. BROWN—20 Rounds

All of these fights were won by Darcy and were for middleweight championships of the world. They show Les Darcy, the greatest middleweight fighter, at his best.

Mr. Ginsbury will be pleased to hear from all parties having rights for feature pictures in Australia and adjoining territory

Edith Storey Completes First Production for Metro

LAST week marked the completion by Edith Storey of her first picture under the Metro banner, following the finishing touches of which she made preparations to leave for California, where she will begin the second of the series of Super-Features to be made there, under the direction of B. A. Rolfe. The completed picture has been given the title of "The House in the Mist," and was adopted by June Mathias from the novel of Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy. The direction was supervised by Tod Browning.

Regarding her first Metro picture, Miss Storey said: "I feel that my role of Carma Carmichael in my first Metro picture is distinctly a role for me," said Miss Storey. "I prefer a type that gives me opportunities to wear 'sport' clothes and to be a real red-blooded athletic girl who rides, swims and shoots. I love the great outdoors which develops the girl of individuality and 'go-to-it-iveness,' who is able to keep her head in a crisis. It is an axiom that one can do best that which she likes the best. In the interpretation of a favorite type of role by a player, the sincerity of the portrayal is genuine. My 'Carma Carmichael' is Edith Storey herself."

California studios and conditions will not be new things to Miss Storey, as she has worked in pictures there on several occasions and in a varied assortment of subjects.

Exceptional Cast Chosen for Next Pickford Feature

ACCORDING to plans set forth by Artcraft for the next feature in which Mary Pickford will star, one of the best all-round supporting casts that has ever been selected to appear in scenes with "Little Mary" will flicker across the screen in "The Little Princess," which is now being staged at the Lasky Studio in Hollywood, under the direction of Marshall Neilan. Heading the supporting cast is Theodore Roberts, the veteran character player, and who is closely followed by William E. Lawrence and Jennie Lee. Artcraft has announced that it is banking greatly on the support of these players to go a long way toward making Miss Pickford's next feature an unusual winner. For this reason great stress has been laid by Artcraft upon the achievements of the supporting players, than whom there is probably none better known in pictures than Theodore Roberts, who came to the screen drama from the legitimate field. Mr. Roberts has starred in his own right in several screen successes, among them "Pudd'nhead Wilson."

William E. Lawrence has been cast for the role of Ali Baba in "The Little Princess," and is expected to do great things in this part. He is one of the younger screen players who has come to the front without the prestige of previous stage experience. In "The Little Princess" he will appear for the first time in an Artcraft release.

Jennie Lee, who will appear as Mrs. Cassim, made her debut as a circus rider about fifty years ago, and later appeared in legitimate productions, ultimately swinging into pictures. One of her best known parts was in the cast of "The Birth of a Nation."

Wisconsin Exhibitors Again Elect Jack Grauman

The Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, meeting at Milwaukee, has elected the following officers:

President, Jack Grauman; vice-president, Frank Cook; secretary, Paul Langheinrich, Sr.; treasurer, Henry Trinz.

Mr. Grauman was re-elected president in appreciation of the splendid work he has done since he was elected head of the Milwaukee motion picture men last year. Mr. Trinz was also re-elected as treasurer.

Mr. Grauman, following his election as president of the association, sent in his resignation as a member of the Milwaukee Censor Board. Mayor Hoan appointed Henry Trinz to succeed him and also confirmed the appointment of Ernst Langemack to fill another vacancy on the board. Both these men are prominent exhibitors.

An organizer on salary will shortly be appointed to organize the Wisconsin exhibitors according to the plans now being worked out by the association. Things are booming for the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association, and it is expected that it will be one of the strongest and biggest organizations in the United States before many months.

Utica Exhibitors in Split—Many Join A. E. A.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, spent Thursday in Utica, N. Y., attending a meeting of the Utica exhibitors. For some time past there has been a split among Utica exhibitors. Three factions have been in the field, and it was impossible to get any concerted action by the exhibitors to any movement in their behalf. Recently some of the leading exhibitors in the various groups saw that in order to get anywhere it was necessary for co-operation, and all factional differences were settled so that the local organization in Utica is a strong body of exhibitors determined and militant for their rights.

The meeting was addressed by Mr. Pettijohn and many present joined the A. E. A.

While in Utica Mr. Pettijohn conferred with William Fait, Jr., treasurer of the A. E. A. The organization was ninety days old on September 20, and after an examination of the books it was found that not a single bill was left unpaid, and that there was a substantial balance in the bank.

1,800-Seat Theatre Planned at Cost of $175,000

H. L. Gumbiner, one of the most progressive of Chicago exhibitors, member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owner's Association here, and a stanch A. E. A. worker, announces that plans have been completed for the building of an attractive three-story fire-proof motion picture house at the northeast corner of Lincoln and Lawrence avenues, and the southwest corner of Claremont and Lawrence avenues.

The completed theatre will probably cost $175,000. It will cover the entire property at that point. The planned seating capacity is for 1,800. All of the appointments of the interior of the theatre will be modern and designed with the comfort of the patrons in mind.

Yorke-Metro Gets New Producing Quarters

Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, has announced that immediately following his recent return from California, he decided to abandon his West Coast headquarters, and will hereafter direct all his activities from New York. For this purpose Mr. Balshofer has leased quarters at the Metro Super-Feature Studio at 645 West 43rd street, where the future Yorke-Metro productions will be made.

The past week was a very busy one for Mr. Balshofer. In addition to making the arrangements for a studio, Mr. Balshofer has established business headquarters in the Metro offices. These are in charge of Wiley Gibson, as business manager, who came from California with Mr. Balshofer and Mr. Lockwood along with Richard V. Spencer, scenario writer; Lester Cuneo, the Yorke "heavy"; William Clifford, character actor; John Schronberg, violinist; and Antonio Gaudio, cameraman. He also made an addition to his staff in the person of Harry H. Poppe, whose duties will be to look after the publicity for the Yorke company's activities.

Select Pictures Contracts with Alice Brady

Eight Features Are to Be Produced in Year with This Actress as Star—The First One Is Titled "The Red Mouse"

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces it has signed contracts with Alice Brady by which Miss Brady immediately becomes a Select Pictures star. She will be presented during the coming year in eight pictures to be released under the Select Star series system.

Miss Brady will begin work at once at the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee. She will be directed by Edward Jose. Her first picture will be an adaptation of Henry J. W. Dam's successful play, "The Red Mouse." It is a story of modern life with a French flavor.

Alice Brady is the daughter of William A. Brady. She began her public career at an early age, appearing on the stage in theatrical productions in which her father or his friends were interested. She had roles in a number of musical successes, among them "The Mikado" and "The Balkan Princess."

Miss Brady appeared in legitimate drama, in which field her greatest success was in a production of "Little Women," which enjoyed practically a season's run in New York and made friends of thousands of playgoers for the young actress.

Alice Brady has shown herself to be a versatile performer on the screen. Although still young her range of roles covers many mature parts.

Perhaps the greatest of all Miss Brady's screen successes is "Paid in Full," the picture made from the stage success of the same name, written by Eugene Walter.

It will be the policy of Select Pictures to present Miss Brady in the very highest class productions that screen art can produce.

All Exhibitor Factions Join Against War Tax

Factional interests were forgotten last week in Washington when representatives of the American Exhibitors' Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America worked together in behalf of the exhibitors against the proposed war tax.

H. B. Varner, chairman of the Legislative Committee of the A. E. A., and Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the A. E. A., sent a wire to Lee Ochs, president of the M. P. E. L., advising him that the situation was serious for exhibitors. Mr. Ochs was out of the city, and in his absence Mr. Blumenthal sent broadcast a number of telegrams, and Grant Anson hurried to Washington to co-operate with Mr. Varner and Mr. Pettijohn.

"Mr. Blumenthal and Mr. Anson are entitled to their share of credit for anything that may have been accomplished in Washington that will prove beneficial to the exhibitor," said Mr. Pettijohn on his return to New York. "Both men co-operated with Mr. Varner and myself, and all factional differences were forgotten in our work for the exhibitors of the country."

"Vic" Has a Funny One, Really, in "Camping"

Victor Moore gets back again to the "family series" in his Sept. 10 release called "Camping," written by Thos. J. Gray.

Vic and the family get in the sleeping bag, to get into the arms of Morpheus. It had to pick out that night to rain, and rain it does, as it never did before. Vic unfortunately built the trench around the tent the wrong way, and consequently the water runs in the tent instead of out.

Added to this comes a gale, which blows the tent away, and they are all left standing in their "nighties." Vic makes them all get under the Ford, which he says is like a Rich Uncle, it always comes in handy.

"Camping" is the funniest "Family" comedy Moore has made, and it is "chock" full of laughs and ridiculously funny situations.

Jewel Buys "Co-respondent"

The Jewel Productions, acting through Hiller and Wilk, Inc., brokers, have purchased Ralph Ince's newest production, "The Co-respondent," which is based on the stage success that enjoyed a successful season at the Booth theatre, New York, during the past year.

Elaine Hammerstein, who has made a striking success in pictures, is starred along with Wilfred Lucas.

This is the first of a series of Ralph Ince photoplays that are being made by the Advanced Motion Picture Corporation. They have in work at present "The Battle Cry," which brought William Farnum back to the stage several seasons ago.

"The Co-respondent" is to be shown at the Broadway theatre, New York, beginning Oct. 6.

PERFECT PROJECTION

Mr. W. E. Southwick, owner of the Palace Theatre, Cherokee, Okla., says:

I want to express my appreciation for the MOTIOGRAPH by saying the longer I use it the better I like it. Everybody says I am showing as perfect projection as can be had.

I assure you I appreciate your cooperation, and as regards standing behind your product, you are the best company I ever dealt with.

MOTIOGRAPH

Mr. A. Hickman. Operator for Elliott & Sherman Film Corp'n, Minneapolis, Minn., says:

I was never a booster of the Motiograph machine, having only operated one of the old models, but in appreciation of the good results that I had with the machines sold to the Birth of a Nation Co. by you, I am writing this so you may understand that operators are not averse to giving praise where they think it is due, and the present Motiograph machine I do not hesitate to state will do all the work and in just as perfect a way as any machine on the market and I have run them all.

MOTIOGRAPH

Mr. A. E. Elliott of the Sapphire Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., says that after having used other makes of machines he tried the Motiograph and it fulfills every requirement, and a projector that will withstand the heavy grind that it is put to in the Sapphire will certainly meet all requirements of any other theatre.

Mr. L. Hillman, Mgr. Hill-San Amusement Co., Lincoln, Nebr., says:

As regards the satisfaction given by Motiographs I can only say that in our plans for our new house which we are contemplating building, we have not considered using any other machine than the Motiograph.

We have the reputation of having the best projection in Lincoln and believe that the credit for it belongs to the Motiograph machines that we have in our operating room. We believe we made no mistake when we installed them, altho there had been none of them used here previously.

To the Shiftless Operator

MOTION PICTURE NEWS with the backing of the four hundred odd members of the Anti-Misframe League, all prominent, progressive and influential operators, is endeavoring to gain the cooperation of the various exchanges throughout the country to the end that the physical condition of films when they are delivered to theatres may be improved.

We find, in taking the matter up with the various sales managers here in New York who have charge of the outlying exchanges, that they are not only ready and willing but are most desirous of cooperating with us in every way.

One sales manager when talking of a certain complaint, which was made by one of our members, made the statement that he always gave the theatre manager or operator the benefit of every doubt and put the blame entirely upon his exchange, which was supplying service.

These exchange managers are emphatic, however, in their statement that the proper care of film between the time that it reaches the theatre and leaves it, is not all that it should be. This in the main may be absolutely correct, for we know, to make a general statement, that people all over the world are not as careful of other people's property as they are of their own. One instance of this in particular was called to my attention.

* * * *

A BRAND new film which had never been run was sent out from a branch of one of the exchange systems within the past two weeks. When it left the exchange it contained in the neighborhood of fifty title patches. When it was returned these patches had increased approximately fifty per cent. The film that was left showed no ill-treatment; in fact, except for the patches which reduced the film approximately ten feet altogether, there was not a scratch to be found.

The answer to this was simply a lust on the part of the operator for collecting individual pictures of various scenes. As the picture ran on the screen he saw something of which he thought he would like to have a sample. Therefore, after the show he cut out one or two frames, patching the film up in a first-class manner. This is rank vandalism, and any man who would stoop to it either in a new film or old film does not deserve the position of trust which he occupies in the theatre.

When you stop to realize that one film company in five months, from January 1st to June 1st, 1917, spent $10,437.66 for positive film merely to replace scenes in their films which were missing, you can realize the cooperation which is necessary on the part of the exhibitors and operators in helping the various film exchanges keep their film library in proper condition.

This amount of money does not represent the printing charges, cost of looking up the negatives, the bookings which necessarily had to be given up during the time that the print was being repaired and other incidental expenses which figure as a minimum at least 25 cents per foot, which would amount in this case to approximately $67,987.00 net loss. This expense must necessarily be charged to the overhead on the film.

* * * *

ALL of the exchange managers with whom we talked were highly enthusiastic over the National Anti-Misframe League and have offered to cooperate in every way with us. They say that our League is the first sign of an operator's organization which has gone on record of being desirous of seeing film conditions improve. They want your complaints. They want to know when you receive film that is not in proper shape, and the title of the picture. They want to see to it that the positives, no matter how old, tell the complete story of the film. In other words, they want to get behind our organization and help push.

There is one thing, however, which they did impress upon us, and that was the fact that when we found a theatre using service which cost a rental of less than $7.50 per feature, very little could be expected in the way of perfect physical condition.

The film salesman who tries to beat his competitor in price and then "stings" the exhibitor with a poor print, is as much a detriment to the business as the operator who through his carelessness mutilates a film, whether old or new.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Initial Banquet of the American Projection Society

ON Tuesday evening, September 18, the Green Room of the Hotel McAlpin was the setting for one of the most brilliant gatherings of motion picture operators with their friends, sweethearts and wives that it has ever been our pleasure to witness.

Those who had the good fortune to be present at the dinner (which was strictly an invitation affair, no tickets being sold), numbering about twenty-five couples, sat down to a dinner served in the McAlpin style, fit for an epicure, presided over by Mr. Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Co., as toastmaster.

After doing full justice to the bounteous repast the members and friends were regaled with witty stories and reminiscences by a number of the "old timers"; men who have been engaged in the projection of motion pictures since the days of their inception. After welcoming the guests, on behalf of the American Projection Society, the toastmaster then introduced Mr. Lester Bowen, chief operator of the Rialto theatre and president of the society, who in a brief talk told of the idea which prompted the forming of the society and explained briefly its aims and objects.

He said that the purpose of the banquet was to bring to the attention of the motion picture industry the hope as expressed by every member, that the society would become a power for the advancement of the industry by each member becoming a master of his craft.

The toastmaster replied by calling attention to the better grade of work as exemplified by the members of the society, and then called upon your humble servant, the writer. Coming as it did, unexpectedly, and so soon after eating, I did not feel that I should spoil the enjoyment of the guests by making an after dinner speech and as I had little to say, I said it and resumed my seat, satisfied to play the part of a listener.

George C. Edwards, past president of Local 306, was then called upon, and as usual "passed the buck" by saying that the speech he had prepared for the occasion had been either by malice aforethought, or perhaps jealousy, removed from his pocket by, he believed, his wife. Mrs. Edwards denied the allegation in toto.

F. H. Richardson of the Moving Picture World who has recently returned from an extended tour of the country, spoke of his trip and said that he was honored to be back among "the cream of the operating craft." And, going further, he said that in his estimation, the president of the society, Lester Bowen, was the best operator in the United States as well as the highest salaried operator in the world. On the authorization of Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, general director of the Rialto theatre, Mr. Richardson announced that Mr. Bowen was to receive a salary of five thousand dollars per year.

All joined in congratulations to the president of the society, and as "Rich" was now beginning to get warmed up and it was momentarily expected that he would launch into his "lecture," he called a halt and resumed his seat. B. F. Porter, the well-known supply dealer, had a presentiment, or something, that he was to be the next one called upon (as he was), made a quiet exit thinking to escape, and his place on the list of speakers reverted to A. P. Lombard of the Precision Machine Company, who said the toastmaster had chosen a poor one to take the place of such an able and better qualified speaker as B. F. Porter.

Mr. Lombard further said that the representatives of the trade papers were deserving of credit for the amount of good work they were doing and that as this was the first opportunity he had had of meeting a gathering of motion picture operators, he was, in the words of "T. R.," "Delighted." Mr. W. H. Rabel of the Independent Movie Supply Company, the next to be called upon, spoke briefly of his delight at being present at the "first banquet," and said he hoped he would be honored with an invitation at the next one held by the society.

Members of the American Projection Society and Their Guests at the Initial Banquet of the Society Held at the McAlpin Hotel, September 18

The toastmaster then arose and said, "I am now about to call upon a 'young man' who has been from coast to coast, and who has also been identified with the industry for so long a time that he has forgotten more than any of us know; he has been on the payroll of nearly every machine manufacturer and is now with a company engaged in the manufacture of a 'new machine' of The American Standard." (Laughter).

Mr. J. E. Robin, the young man referred to, arose and replied by saying: "Out of five million people why pick on me?" "Further," he said, "it was a source of great gratification to him to note the progress made by the operator and that it was he, the operator, or the 'man in the booth' who was responsible for the operation of the projection machine as its highest efficiency."

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Pircher Lectures to the I. P. A., Inc.

ON Friday evening, September 21, the members of the International Projection Association, Inc., listened with a great deal of interest to an instructive lecture on "The First Principles of Elementary Optics," by one of their members, Mr. Frank S. Pircher, who holds the degrees of Electrical Engineer and Bachelor of Science.

This lecture was a forerunner for a series of lectures that are to be given to the members of the above named society by men more or less prominent in the motion picture industry. The organization, which numbers 100 members, is rapidly forging to the front in the desire for information that will tend to make them better workmen.

Among those in attendance at this, the first lecture, were Messrs. Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Co., F. H. Richardson of the Moving Picture World and the editor of this department. Being only an invited guest the writer did not feel that it was his prerogative to interrupt or otherwise block the wheels of progress, and while I am frank to admit that I did not thoroughly agree with all the points brought out by Brother Pircher, courtesy demanded that I show proper respect to the speaker by refraining from interrupting him during the course of his talk.

The attendance at this meeting was an agreeable surprise to me, in that it appeared to be the sincere desire on the part of the members to be taught how and why their work could and should become more and more elevated, raising themselves from the lowly position of "crank turners" to the more exalted position of professional Projecticians. The announcement was made that future lectures would be given by Will C. Smith, F. H. Richardson, J. H. Hallberg, J. E. Robin, I. G. Sherman and others representing the manufacturers of various projection machines and appliances used in the operating room.

The officers of the International Projection Association, A. Polin, president; Harry Scherl, vice-president; Morris J. Rotker, recording secretary; Marcus Rattner, secretary-treasurer; George P. Johnston, sergeant-at-arms, and the trustees, Edgar T. Stewart, Richard E. Weiss and J. F. Clark, have requested me to announce that the dates of future lectures will appear on the pages of this department.

THAT their friends and relatives might see them in action, members of the Second Field Artillery had several thousand feet of film taken showing Battery D. The films were projected on a Simplex Projector which they have recently installed and the men are loud in their praise of the entertainment which the motion picture affords during the spare time they have.

The battleship Kentucky dropped anchor for a few hours in the harbor and during that time electrician Johnny Harding, formerly with the Cosmofotofilm Mfg Co., and other leading film manufacturers, called at the factory of the Precision Machine Co., and made the purchase of a Simplex.

[The cut referred to in last week's installment as Fig. 3, was inadvertently omitted at the time of going to press. It is reproduced herewith and should be studied in connection with the previous description of Dr. Goldberg's exposing plate.—Ed. Camera Dept.]

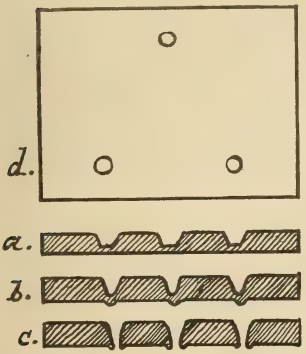

Fig. 3.

THE most recent and valuable advance in the experimental study of photographic resolving power is due to Dr. P. G. Nutting of the Kodak Research Laboratory, who gave an outline of his method as long ago as 1912.[1] As Nutting points out,[2] the results of Dr. Goldberg (previously described) were based on the study of great overexposures, and the character of his test images could be seriously influenced by light reflected from the sides of the conical holes in his metal exposing-plate. The light, moreover, spreads in all directions when printing through a circular opening, and while the circular opening yields a photographic image comparable to the stellar images secured in astronomical photography, the study of the light distribution (in the developed film) cannot be so competently determined at the edges of a disc as along a straight line or boundary.

Accordingly Dr. Nutting proceeded to make tests by laying an accurately sharpened straight-edge in contact with the emulsion surface of photographic plates and making exposures to monochromatic light rendered parallel by suitable means of collimation. In making test exposures by this method some precautions are essential to the correctness of the results. The straight edge must be accurately ground to razor fineness and free from dust or other particles, so as to make perfect contact with the surface of the photographic plate. The exposing light must be incident as a parallel beam, otherwise diffraction bands may be in evidence under the blade, due to difference in the path of various rays if the beam is of a diverging character.

When, however, these conditions have been fulfilled, and an exposure made, the developed test-plate will show the manner in which the light has spread under the knife-like blade or straight-edge which was in contact with the plate when the exposure was made. Close to the position of the edge of the blade the light action is strong, of course, but the density falls off with increasing distance from the true position of the straight-edge. This shading off of the light intensity from the edge of the developed image is termed by Nutting the "density gradient," which he defines as a given distance (arbitrarily selected) divided by four times the distance (away from the position of the straight-edge) within which density falls to a given percentage (98 per cent for instance) of its normal value. He further deduces mathematically that density gradient equals photographic gradient times light gradient, exactly, at all parts of the image. The photographic gradient is the development factor or degree of contrast of the particular emulsion being tested.

Now by way of making clear the meaning of Nutting's "density gradient" it should be stated that a high density gradient will show considerable density close to the position of the straight-edge in the developed image, with little shading off away from the edge; while a low density gradient will, in the case of ordinary emulsions, show the exposure gradually shading off to a considerable distance from the edge of the image. Therefore, a high density gradient would correspond to a low turbidity factor according to Goldberg's method of stating the case, and vice-versa. We can expect, therefore, that the density gradient will be higher in the case of fine-grained, contrasty, emulsions than with rapid emulsions of coarser grain and that, in most instances, fine-grained emulsions will show the highest resolving power. Nutting found, however, that the grainless transparent Lippmann emulsion showed a low density gradient, because its photographic gradient (contrast) was low, which is in accord with Goldberg's observation (previously cited) regarding this type of emulsion. Notwithstanding its low density gradient, the Lippman Emulsion resolves fine detail extremely well, on account of its transparency, but upon imparting to it a slight degree of opacity (by ripening) its resolving power is much decreased.

To determine the variation in density gradient for differing exposures a series of increasing exposures were made, the straight-edge being used as previously described. No appreciable light action, or spreading, away from the edge of the image could be detected in the case of densities less than unity (1). With increasing exposures, the degree of shading off from the edge of the image become noticeable, but at a density of about 2 the gradient reaches a fixed value, which is little altered by greater exposures. This condition is well shown by Fig. 4, where the lateral action of the light within the emulsion is plotted against densities as ordinates.

As the curves show, the density close to the position of the straight-edge grows with increase in exposure, but beyond a density of 2, there is little increase in the rate of spreading (denoted by the slope of the curves) of the light laterally through the film.

Interesting as are these initial researches of Dr. Nutting they were but preliminary trials of the method devised by him; the work along this line has been extended at the Kodak Research Laboratory by Orin Tugman, Ph.D.,[3] with the collaboration of Drs. Mees and Nutting. Following the procedure of Dr. Nutting, Tugman produced his test exposures with the aid of a metal straight-edge in contact with the plate, the exposing light being monochromatic and a parallel beam. To measure the density of a plate and its rate of falling off from the position of the straight-edge, an image of the edge, as depicted by the plate, was projected by a microscope upon a piece of opal glass, which latter was mounted before the two adjacent collimator slits of a König-Martens polarization photometer. In the case of coarse-grained emulsions a low microscopic amplification was necessary, for with high powers the density of individual silver grains would be measured, instead of the mean density of the image.

The purpose of Tugman's investigation was to ascertain the influence of the time of exposure, the time of development, etc., upon density gradient. His findings may now be briefly considered. According to Nutting's definition, density gradient equals photographic gradient times light gradient, so it might be thought that prolonged development (increasing the contrast or photographic gradient) would yield increased density gradient, and hence increased resolving power; but from his measurements of equally exposed but differently developed test images Tugman discovered that this was not the case—a departure from theory which he attributes to the manner in which the developer penetrates the emulsion. The topmost layer of the exposed film is developed first, and as development progresses the layer of reduced silver increases in thickness. In the case of prolonged development the density gradient therefore extends over a greater distance but is no steeper than for short development, although Tugman considers that in the case of overexposures it would be found that the density gradient finally does show an increase with prolonged development. As regards the influence of increasing exposure upon density gradient Tugman's findings were identical with those of Dr. Nutting, previously mentioned.

It is interesting to note that the resolving power for light of short wave-length, of a photographic emulsion, was found by Tugman to be greater than for light of longer wave-length—a result which accords with the earlier findings of Dr. Scheffer. Tugman made his test exposures, when determining this point, to lights of green and violet color. As the characteristic curve of a given emulsion is generally steeper in the case of exposure to green light than for exposure to violet light, it appears at first glance that this increased photographic gradient, or degree of contrast, would result in increased density gradient, or, in other words, the resolving power should be greater for green light than for the violet rays of shorter wave-length. Further investigation shows, however, that to offset the steep photographic gradient secured by exposure to green light, is the increased depth of penetration of green light into the emulsion. This transparency of the emulsion to the green rays results in considerable spreading of the light within the film, and nullifies the good effects of a steep photographic gradient.

The photographic gradient is subservient to light gradient in so far as resolving power is concerned, however, as is proven by experiment; for the resolving power is higher with violet light, to which an average emulsion is more opaque than it is to green light. This was conclusively proven by Tugman in the manner previously described by Dr. Scheffer; he dyed a plate with a yellow dye and exposed it to violet light. The opacity of the emulsion to the violet rays was thus increased, with a resulting increase in resolving power.

In the foregoing paragraphs an attempt has been made to describe the methods and results of the various investigators upon photographic resolving power, but it is to be feared that in setting forth the varied terminology of the several workers upon this subject some confusion may be wrought in the mind of the non-technical reader. It seems, therefore, advisable to sum up in very general terms the conditions governing photographic resolution, as determined to date, and we can do this in no more comprehensive fashion than to quote a few paragraphs from Dr. C. E. K. Mees' admirable lecture on "The Physics of the Photographic Process."[4]

[3] "The Resolving Power of Photographic Plates," Photographic Journal, Vol. 55 (1915), pages 292-302.

[4] "Journal of the Franklin Institute," Feb., 1915, pages 141-160.

Quoting Mr. Mees:

"Dr. Nutting points out that the optical factor of turbidity can be split into two separate factors: the one the turbidity of the emulsion in the strictest sense, that is to say its scattering power for light, and the other the opacity of the emulsion or its stopping power for scattered light. An emulsion having high turbidity and low opacity will have a very low resolving power; on the other hand, even if the emulsion has high turbidity, if its opacity is also high, its resolving power may be good. A typical example of this is the wet-collodion plate, in which the turbidity is considerable but where the opacity of silver-iodide for blue-violet light is so great that the resolving power is very high. In a Lippmann emulsion the resolving power is high if the emulsion is very clear, because the turbidity is very small, but the opacity is also small, and the slightest increase in turbidity may make the resolving power very low. An interesting experiment which I have made was as follows: I made a Lippmann emulsion, coated it, and found the resolving power, which was very high. Some of the emulsion was slightly warmed so that it increased in speed somewhat and showed a slight turbidity, and, although the increase in speed was quite small, the resolving power was now very poor. By further heating the emulsion so that it became visibly opaque, with a considerable increase of speed, although the turbidity was now high, the opacity had risen sufficiently to give the emulsion a considerably better resolving power than after the first heating had taken place. The relation of the resolving power of emulsions to the size of the grain may therefore be roughly expressed somewhat as follows:

"The distance between two lines which will just be separated with a given emulsion will be extremely small for extremely small sizes of grain, because such sizes of grain far below the wavelength of light will scatter very little light; that is the turbidity will be negligible. As the size of grain increases, however, the turbidity increases very rapidly, and with it the distance necessary to separate two lines, until with a grain diameter a little less than 1/1000 mm. the turbidity is high and the opacity still low, so that the necessary separation of the lines is a maximum, and then, as the grain still grows, the opacity grows faster than the turbidity and the lines to be separated can be somewhat closer together. Then, again, with increasing diameter of the grains the actual space factor comes in, the size of the grains themselves and the distance between them becoming comparable with the distance between the separated lines, and with increasing size of grain this distance must again increase steadily."

An Efficient Shutter-Dissolve for Pathe Cameras

There has recently been introduced, by G. Gennert & Co., 24-26 East Thirteenth street, New York, an extremely accurate and efficient dissolving shutter, for use on the studio model Pathé professional cine camera. As the Pathé professional is extensively used by the picture producers, and as every cameraman fancies a good shutter dissolve, the following description of this new device is in order.

The mechanism of this dissolving shutter consists of a number of parts, some of which are additional to the Pathé camera mechanism, while others replace parts in the original instrument. The automatic closing of the shutter is accomplished through the aid of a worm, or thread, cut on the sprocket shaft of the camera, which meshes with a specially cut gear mounted to a vertical driving shaft. Through the medium of other gears, or pinions, and an ingenious movement, which cannot well be described or illustrated at present, the two halves or blades of the camera shutter are caused to close, or open, as the device is operated.

The operation of the dissolving shutter is accomplished by pressing down a button on the top of the camera (at the left-hand side) while the camera is in operation, and watching a special indicator mounted on top of the camera and to the right of the film magazines. The button on top of Pathé cameras is used.

Unknown Song Writers Compose American "Tipperary"

THOUSANDS of motion picture musicians who are playing "Good-by, Broadway; Hello, France," are helping to prove that if you can write the kind of songs that will appeal to the masses you can become rich and famous.

C. Francis Reisner and Ben Davis, two Chicago boys, accomplished the feat when they wrote the lyric of "Good-by, Broadway; Hello, France," the American "Tipperary," now being used by scores of regiments and by the soldier boys close to the trenches in France. And it is the first song that the boys ever wrote. Billy Baskerette, another newcomer, composed the melody.

The trio won out over practically all the professional song writers, as well as thousands of amateurs, who have been racking their brains for something that would appeal to the soldiers and sailors as "A Hot Time in the Old Town" did during the Spanish-American conflict.

When Reisner and Davis had completed the lyric they did not realize what a valuable piece of property they possessed, and by chance happened to show it to the Chicago manager of Leo Feist, who, recognizing the song's possibilities, called up the New York office on the telephone and recited the lyric. On getting the New York approval, the Chicago manager had it set to music, and then had a well-known vaudeville performer sing it over the long distance telephone for the benefit of the general manager in New York. Orders were given to go after the song, as it looked like another "Tipperary." To date the song has sold 700,000 copies, and as the writers split a cent a copy royalty it looks like they will be well paid for their few hours' work.

The song was adopted by the Seventy-first Regiment as a recruiting number. Every day for weeks a dozen members of the regiment, under the direction of Lieutenant Joseph E. Barrell, toured the city in a large auto truck singing the song and urging young Americans with red blood to enlist and bring the regiment up to its war strength. And scarcely a day passed that at least a dozen did not climb aboard the truck to sign up for service over the seas.

The singing squad created such a sensation that it was booked over the big time vaudeville circuit, after Earl Carroll, Bernard Granville, and Arthur Fields had been pressed into service. Aided by the new "Tipperary" they kept recruiting at a record pace.

And while talking about the song I might say that its career is cogent proof that real music publishers are always ready to give the new man with good song ideas a chance, and always willing to gamble thousands on the songs of new writers. And to make it the greatest war song of the day Leo. Feist paid $5,000 for a page in The Saturday Evening Post to advertise it and prove that you can't go wrong with a "Feist Song."

Song Notes of General Interest

FRED VANDERSLOOT of The Vandersloot Music Co., is now the possessor of a million copy hit in "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are." He says that a young fellow in Sommerset, Pa., sent him the lyric a few years ago and asked him for a hundred dollars. As it stood the lyric was worth about five dollars at the most, but Fred thought he could make something out of it if he had permission to alter it, and he wrote and offered a hundred on conditions he could have it revised. It was a big gamble to put music in it, but when Fred finished the melody he was willing to risk his money on it. Today, after having sold a million, it has been added as a feature record by some of the big phonograph companies.

JEFF BRANEN has a warm spot in his heart for moving picture theatres, for it was in one that he first heard his new song, "All That I Want Is in Ireland." In the past when Jeff wrote an Irish song friends would always tell of new things that he could have included in his lyric, so to stop them from coming back any more with advice he used the line: "All that I had, all that I have, and all that I want is in Ireland." Jeff is in business for himself.

FISCHER AND McCARTHY have a good picture number in "They Go Wild, Simply Wild, Over Me." It is a fine swing and can be used with comedies or in comedy drama, for situations pertinent to the song idea are constantly cropping up in photoplays.

AND speaking of picture music it is surprising what some pianists get away with. They just sit or loll over the keys and keep hammering out a tom-tom vamp. An audience does not care so much what you play as how you play it. And while many may say that the popular stuff is trash and fit for the low brow, you never see the average audience or crowd break while a band, orchestra, or pianist is playing some lively popular airs. And besides, many of the popular airs are merely classics in a new form. It is not the music that is cheap, but the ideas at times that go with it. This is the consensus of musical experts; and psychologists say that few in the world dislike a lilting tune, be it classical or popular. So when you play popular stuff play it as it should be played—play it better than anybody else does, and although it may be popular music it won't seem like cheap stuff to the so-called high brows.

Picking a Hit from a Hamlet

THE moving picture houses certainly did their share in making "The Missouri Waltz," the big instrumental hit, popular. But those who had it first thought it was an awful joke. Frederick Knight Logan, the composer, published it on his own account in his home town, Oskaloosa, Iowa. He gave orchestrations to a few leaders and they thought it was the biggest laugh they had heard for a long time. They argued that the title meant nothing and reminded one of the Missouri mule, and that the town in which it had been published made matters worse. But Logan did not feel this way and kept sending orchestrations to leaders and picture pianists.

Fred Forster, the big popular publisher, who is also the biggest jobber in the west, began to receive orders for "Missouri Waltz" before he had heard it or knew where it was published. And when the orders continued to come in he sent Abe Olman, his professional manager, to find out who wrote the song and where it was published.

"There's a big hit sneaking over some place," Forster said, "and if we don't get it in a hurry one of the other fellows will."

Olman spent two weeks scouting for the waltz and its owner, and finally located him in the little Iowa hamlet. He brought the composer on to Chicago, where Forster took over the song after paying the composer a big advance, accompanied by a royalty contract for six cents a copy. To date the composer has collected more than $20,000 on his musical joke.

When some of his rivals had heard that he had bought the number and intended to push it, Forster received nothing but a merry ha, ha! His friends told him that he was flirting with bankruptcy and begged him to shelve it. To all Forster replied:

"I think the number is a winner and to show you how much you know about what the public likes I'll sell a million copies before I'm through. And I'll get eighteen cents a copy from the jobbers and dealers."

At the present writing "Missouri Waltz" is nearing the million mark, and prospects are so promising that Forster intends to make it the greatest popular hit that has ever been known in the history of popular music.

Motifs for the Theatre Organist

A slow, quiet Misterioso. The big, wide sweep of the strings in the L.H. and Pedal (Swell) contrasted with the Soft Clarinet and Flute chords in R.H. (choir) make an effective color picture.

This little light Valsette must be played very daintily and with a great deal of vivaciousness as if used to illustrate a young girl swinging. It could also be used as a boat song if romance did not figure too heavily in the picture. For the registration use Swell Strings with 4-ft. Flute, sub and super couplers with unison off and trem. Play the accompaniment on soft Choir or Great. By the way, note this left hand part and the use of the legato in the "Oom pom pom" accompaniment of the waltz. It is one of the artistic ways of rearranging a piano accompaniment of this sort. If it is desirable that the accompaniment should be staccato, then either use the harp stop—if you have one—or play, after the manner of the harp-arpeggio, on the Great Flute. Should some extra vivaciousness be required, the theme could be varied as suggested below, or in some other manner.

In the final sketch a variety of tone colors may be used.

Ex.5.

Open with an Oboe solo accompanied quietly on the choir (Dulciana). When the solo reappears in the bass give it to the Cello on the Great, still keeping the accompaniment on Choir. Play the two measure interlude this time on the Swell (shut) instead of on the Choir, taking the first phrase of the solo again on the Cello, the second on Choir Clarinet with soft Flute (Swell) accompaniment, and the final phrase on Vox Humana with L.H. on Choir Dulciana. The picture I am thinking of in the above is two people talking, hence the direction "parlando." The conversation is a serious one, in which one of the figures is advising the other to take some unpleasant step, which he does not at all seem willing to do, but to which he finally accedes.

It must be borne in mind that all characteristic music can very easily be marred by an unsympathetic rendition. The performer must have the mood of the picture upon him; that is essential; otherwise the mood cannot be carried to the hearer, and the value of the music as a characterization is lost. The wrong idea in registration, or a faulty tempo will also mar the performance.

BUILDING AND FURNISHING

Reinforced Concrete Used for Big Theatre Gallery

THE erection of a balcony in the Empire theatre now under construction at Third and Broadway, Los Angeles, has been accomplished with reinforced concrete and without the use of structural steel. Because of the size, the architectural and construction work of this is attracting much attention from all parts of the country. The balcony will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,400, and tests made by leading sand, brick and bags of concrete on the balcony, show that it will hold up under a dead weight of 1,750,000 pounds. Plans originally made by Architect Albert C. Martin, Higgins building, Los Angeles, provided for the liberal use of structural steel. After work had been commenced on the building, it was found impossible to purchase the steel owing to demands made upon steel companies by the Army and Navy Departments. Architect Martin then drew plans providing for bow spring arches which would make possible a balcony of the Cantiliver type, made wholly of concrete reinforced by steel bars, the largest used being one and one-quarter inches in diameter.

The building permit was granted on condition that tests be made before the balcony was used, and these tests were completed this week to the satisfaction of Los Angeles officers when the balcony was covered with the dead weight. It is estimated this is twice the weight that the balcony will ever be required to hold .

While the most expensive of concrete construction is that reinforced with steel, it has been found the balcony can be built in this manner at a lower cost than would be required for steel construction. Another advantage is that this type of construction makes possible much more space below the balcony which may be used for rest and lounging rooms. Plans of the theatre provide ample space for the location of the projection rooms in the front of the balcony. This brings the lenses of the projecting machines to less than sixty feet from the screen, and gives a straight throw that makes possible the best projecting. This will not in any way interfere with the seating on the first floor. There will be no posts or support needed for the balcony or the floor below the balcony which is on the level with the bottom of the front of the balcony, and sufficiently higher than the main floor to insure perfect ventilation and view for every seat in the house. The construction work on the theatre is in charge of the R. H. Arnold Company of 830 McGarry street, Los Angeles.

Sid Grauman, who has leased this house and plans his opening for about January 1, spent the past week in Los Angeles looking after details of the furnishings and other business connected with the opening of the new house. He paid this visit in order to be present when tests of the balcony were made.

Something New in Signs at Kansas City

THE Apollo theatre is redecorating and remodeling to the extent of $10,000.00. A new electric sign will also be put up. It will be a vertical sign 26 feet high with three-foot letters spelling the word Apollo. The crest and border will be colored.

Below this will be a three-line changeable attraction sign. The ornamentations and border will also be colored.

The Federal Sign Company will put up this sign and have leased it to the Apollo for a period of three years at a total rental of $4,000.

The manager of the Federal Sign Company said this sign will be the best moving picture sign and only one of its kind in the world.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

ARKANSAS

New theatre building—Earle, Sept. 8—The foundation for the new $12,000 theatre building here has been laid and it will be completed by November 1.

CALIFORNIA

A one-story brick building, 37½ x 150 feet, is being built by Angelo Genelly on the corner of I and Fifth streets, Los Banos. The building is to be used for theatrical and moving picture purposes and will have a seating capacity of 800. The foundation is of concrete and is well under way. J. O. Price of Oakland, brother-in-law of Mr. Genelly, is doing the contract work. The building is expected to be completed by the middle of November. This will make the third playhouse for Los Banos.

ILLINOIS

Remodeled and enlarged, the Palace theatre of Danville was opened a week ago with five of the best balanced vaudeville acts possible to procure for a circuit outside the larger time. From lobby to gridiron and back wall the popular playhouse has been overhauled and brought up to date, affording patrons more comfort and enabling the management to offer many acts heretofore impossible.

The lobby has been enlarged and beautified. The theatre has been newly carpeted and new tapestry hangings add to the beauty of the interior. There is a new asbestos drop, done by the Cox Studio, Chicago, which is another step in fireproof theatre construction. There is also a new street drop by the same studio and many other improvements which makes the Palace one of the best vaudeville houses in the Central West.

Danville is to have a new theatre. Directors of the Palace Theatre Company have so decided, and work has already been started on the plans.

The original plan contemplates the construction of a show house costing $125,000 or upward, the last word in theatrical building, modern and up to the minute in every respect. The preliminary steps were taken at a meeting held last Friday, and changes in the plan making for a more modern and better theatre will be approved by the body at a meeting called for Saturday.

Ralph B. Holmes, counsel for the Palace Theatre Company, stated that options have been taken on several sites, and that while arrangements have been practically completed for one site, the exact location will not be made known until all of the papers have been signed. He stated, however, that the location is central, easily accessible and a very desirable site for a theatre.

Plans for the construction of a quarter of a million dollar theatre at Evanston are now prepared and construction work will commence in the early Spring.

The prospective theatre and two adjoining stores are to be located on Main street and Sherman avenue, with a 126-foot frontage on Main street and 125 feet on the avenue. Architects' drawings indicate the theatre, both interior and exterior, will be one of the most magnificent in the vicinity. There is to be a seating capacity of 2,000 on the main floor and balcony. Moving pictures and vaudeville are to be the attractions. The two adjoining stores will be two stories high, with a depth of nearly 100 feet by 40 feet wide. One is to be a furniture and department store, while the other is to be occupied by a dry goods establishment.

Sufficient capital is reported backing the Chicago syndicate whose plans are being worked out in the offices of Harry W. Rubloff, 10 South La Salle street.

The medium-sized stores building at 703 Main street is shortly to undergo alterations to the extent of an expenditure of about $5,000, it was stated this morning.

INDIANA

A $125,000 theatre project was started in Lafayette a few days ago, when it was announced that a number of prominent business men were contemplating the organization of a stock company to build a new amusement house on ground owned by the Lafayette Life Insurance Company in North Sixth street. The life insurance company is proposing to assist in financing the new theatre, and the proprietors of the Family Vaudeville Company, of this city, are interested. It is planned to have a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,600, with a stage large enough to accommodate the largest road shows. The plan is to have both vaudeville and legitimate amusements.

Architects are at work on plans which when finished and put into reality promise to place the Starland, of Michigan City, in a class with the finest theatres in the state. Frank Vreeland, the owner of the building of which the Starland theatre is a part, plans to make notable improvements, if not this Fall then in the early Spring.

It is Mr. Vreeland's plan to extend the building to the alley, enlarging the theatre so that it will have a good-sized stage, a balcony and a seating capacity of 1,600 or more.

An Efficient Shutter Dissolve

customarily, to operate the diaphragm dissolve with which these instruments are provided; but when this new shutter dissolve is added to the Pathé camera, the diaphragm dissolve is removed and the shutter dissolve connected to its actuating lever, which is already connected to the aforementioned button on top of the camera.

The indicator by which the closing of the shutter is determined is a new item, however, so we shall next describe it briefly. It is mounted on top of the camera, near the back and in easy view of the camera operator. It consists of two superposed brass discs, which are attached to the vertical shutter driving spindle, the latter being for this purpose extended outside of the camera casing at the top. The discs are mounted on the spindle in time with the extent to which the double sectored camera shutter is open or closed. Each of these two superposed indicator discs is blackened around one half of its circumference, or edge, the other half of the circumference of each disc being polished brass.

When, now, the camera is running, and the shutter is thrown into operation, these indicator discs commence to rotate, and when the blackened portions of their edges are in exactly opposite positions the shutter is known to be closed, and the cameraman releases the shutter actuating knob and promptly stops cranking. If, however, the operator continues cranking, and likewise keeps the knob pressed down, the dissolving shutter commences gradually to open again. The normal length of a dissolve with the device now under consideration is five feet, but any shorter length may be produced by closing the shutter somewhat before starting the camera. This is easily accomplished by rotating the topmost of the two indicator discs until the shutter is closed to the desired extent. The disc may be turned with the thumb and forefinger, as it somewhat resembles a thumb-nut.

The photo reproduced herewith gives an idea of the appearance of this dissolving-shutter when mounted to the Pathé camera, although the actuating mechanism is not in evidence. Messrs. Gennert point out that a feature of this device is that it can be attached to the camera by any mechanician of sufficient skill to dissemble and reassemble a Pathé instrument with accuracy. They are willing, however, to fit the shutter to a purchaser's camera for the same price ($100) at which they sell the parts, accompanied, of course, by suitable instructions for installing the device.

Banquet of American Projection Society

Mr. Walter E. Green, formerly with the George Kleine Company and now with the Speer Carbon Company, said that with all due respects to Mr. Bowen, whose projection as exemplified at the Rialto theatre was something to marvel at although Speer Carbons were not used as yet, and that he had not given up trying to introduce them in the Rialto. Mr. Green likened himself to the man who was suddenly called upon to make an after-dinner speech and, turning to a friend, asking, "What shall I talk about?" was answered "Talk about a minute." He did not consume more than the allotted time, but in that time was able to make a number of new friends among those present.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, the next speaker to be called upon, gave an interesting talk on conditions as they existed in the early days when he as an operator was paid the enormous salary of fifteen dollars per week. [Mr. Rothapfel as director general of the Rialto theatre now receives a salary of one hundred thousand dollars per year, showing that there is always room at the top for one who can PRODUCE.—Ed.] A glowing tribute was paid by Mr. Rothapfel to his chief operator and the "precision" with which the work was performed by the operating staff [The Rialto uses Simplex projectors, hence the word precision.—Ed.] and went on record as being willing to help in any way the efforts of the A.P.S., which in his estimation was "THE RIALTO OF OPERATORS."
